I have not time to notice all the points my colleague made in his speech. I regret that I have not. I must pass over other points to notice the charge that he makes, that I persisted in representing that he received the congratulations of the senior member from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS,] and his Black Republican allies on that side of the House. At the conclusion of my speech of the 20th day of April, in indicating the fact that the speech of the gentleman received the approbation and applause of the Black Republicans in this Hall, I said that the senior member from Ohio approached my colleague, and congratulated him. I saw him leaning towards my colleague, and, as I thought, shaking both of his hands. He was congratulated by a large body of Black Republicans of this House. The gentleman is surprised that I should persist in making this charge. He need not be surprised at all, for I intend to prove it. Why, sir, that strange and extraordinary spectacle which I witnessed on that occasion, and which was witnessed by a large portion of the members upon this side of the Hall, so wrought upon the patriotic indignation of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houstoun,] that he cried out to the senior member from Ohio to kiss my colleague.

More than that, my friend from South Carolina [Mr. MILES] having obtained the floor at the conclusion of my colleague's speech, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houstoun] addressed the Chair, and requested the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MILES] to suspend his remarks until the Black Republicans had finished congratulating the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Gilmer.] That will be found by any gentleman who is curious enough to make the investigation in the official report of the proceedings of that day.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. No, sir. My colleague declares that he received no congratulations from the senior member from Ohio such as I have described, nor any congratulations of any kind. Here at least he is at issue with the former member from the third district of Ohio, (Mr. Campbell,) who distinctly admitted that he congratulated my colleague and took three or four hundred of his speech, and was sorry he did not take more.

I suppose that every intelligent gentleman understands, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts that have been made to restrict and limit this question to the single fact as to whether the senior member from Ohio did shake hands with, and offer words of congratulation to, my colleague, that the point, and the essential point, made by me was, that my colleague's speech received the approval of the Black Republicans in this House—that was the gravamen of the charge. Before I conclude, I shall take occasion to call upon gentlemen on this side of the Hall, whose attention was called to the "congratulating scene" of which I spoke, to state their recollection of the affair, and I shall be content to leave it to them to say whether my colleague did, or did not, receive the "congratulations of the senior member from Ohio, and his Black Republican allies."

As to whether they manifested their approval of my colleague's speech, I have here a list of subscribers to it; and if the committee will so far indulge me, I beg leave to read the list, in order that the country may know whether the statement which I made as to the approval of that speech by the Black Republican party is true. Here is the list:

John A. Gilmer.....	5,000	J. S. Morrill.....	200
H. Winter Davis.....	2,000	S. S. Marshall.....	200
W. L. Underwood.....	500	A. B. Olin.....	200
H. Marshall.....	500	S. R. Curtis.....	200
F. P. Blair.....	500	James Wilson.....	100
J. Morrison Harris.....	500	Richard Mott.....	100
Lewis D. Campbell.....	400	J. W. Sherman.....	100
Benjamin Stanton.....	300	S. C. Foster.....	100
J. B. Kieaud.....	200	David Kilgore.....	200
F. E. Spinner.....	200	C. Billingshurst.....	100
J. B. Haskin.....	500	J. W. Morris.....	300
John Covode.....	200	A. E. Roberts.....	200
W. A. Howard.....	200	E. P. Walton.....	400
Robert Smith.....	200	E. Joy Morris.....	300
E. B. Pottle.....	200	H. E. Royce.....	100
W. Montgomery.....	300	G. A. Grow.....	200
C. J. Gilman.....	200	S. M. Burroughs.....	200
F. H. Morse.....	200	C. B. Hoard.....	200
Eli Thayer.....	200	J. M. Parker.....	100
S. G. Andrews.....	200	John P. Hale.....	200
Ezra Clark, Jr.....	1,000	A. Burlingame.....	500
Charles Case.....	400

And to these may be added the name of the immaculate member from New York, [Mr. MATTHEWSON,] who, out of his hard earnings, subscribed for five hundred copies.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman also put in his speech the list of subscribers to Senator HAMMOND's speech?

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. Every one understands why the gentleman and his allies circulated Senator HAMMOND's speech. The gentleman need not bring that up here, for I can tell him that the people of North Carolina are not quite so green as my colleague seems to think many of them are. In his first speech he said he was told by a friend that many of the people were like a nest of young birds—"tap on the tree and they will open their mouths and swallow the worm." Let me tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the birds of North Carolina are not simple enough to open their mouths for any such worm as that which he offers them.

Mr. COMINS. You have not read my name there. Put it down for one thousand.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. What is the gentleman's name?

Several MEMBERS. COMINS, of Massachusetts. Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. Mr. COMINS takes one thousand copies. I hope the reporter will put that down.

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. Has the gentleman read all the names of the subscribers?

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. Yes. Does the gentleman want to put his name down?

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE. No, sir.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. If the edition of my colleague's first speech be exhausted, the gentleman may be able to obtain some of his last one, and I doubt not it will answer as useful a purpose as the first.

Mr. MORGAN. I would say to the gentleman from North Carolina that we on this side of the House subscribed for more copies of Mr. GARRELL's speech.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I have failed for want of time to notice all the points which my colleague made in his speech. I do not, however, deem it at all necessary or important. I would, if I had time, state here what is the political character of each of the gentlemen who have subscribed for my colleague's speech, in order that every citizen of North Carolina, whether he be a reading man or not, may know whether the statement that I made as to my colleague's speech receiving the commendation of the Black Republican party of the country was true or not.

Having said thus much, Mr. Chairman, by

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Personal Explanation—Mr. Gilmer.

HO. OF REPS.

way of putting an end now, henceforth, and forever to the question, I call upon gentlemen here who witnessed the same scene that I did, to state what they saw, and what their recollection of it is.

Mr. LEITER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. My time is not out, and I do not give way to the gentleman from Ohio. But I do not want an ex parte case made up here. I am perfectly willing to hear him or any other gentleman make a statement in regard to the matter, after the gentlemen to whom I have referred shall have made their statements.

Mr. LEITER. I am obliged to the gentleman; but I never take any other gentleman's controversies off his hands. I have as much of that kind of matter as I can attend to. If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GILMER] wants to reply to his colleague, I will yield the floor to him, provided I can have it afterwards.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I did not yield to the gentleman from Ohio; and I now call upon gentlemen here to state whether I have described the scene following the delivery of my colleague's first speech truly or not?

Mr. LEITER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he was through.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say that as far as I witnessed the exhibition, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SHAW] has described it substantially, as I believe it took place. I was in my seat at the time the speech of the gentleman [Mr. GILMER] was delivered, especially when his remarks came to a close. Several of the Black Republicans did congratulate the gentleman, [Mr. GILMER,] and I distinctly remember seeing Mr. GIDDINGS approach the member from North Carolina, [Mr. GILMER,] after he had taken his seat. I will not say that he took hold of his hand; but my impression at the time was that he did so; and if I were to speak alone from what I saw, I should have so stated unhesitatingly at the time, as is evident from my exclamation. It is due to myself to say that the remark made by me was not intended to do more than express my own feelings of the scene that was being enacted between the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. GILMER,] and the Black Republicans. I did not expect to see it in the newspapers.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I beg leave to call upon the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON.]

Mr. HORTON. Is this in pursuance of any rule of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time is not out.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire now that other gentlemen, whether they agree or differ with me, should state their recollection of that scene. The gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to the floor, and can yield it for a statement.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. Go ahead!

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I desire to call on several other gentlemen for their statements.

Mr. LEITER. Is it understood that I have got the floor? If not, I make the point that the time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Chair, and not the gentleman from Ohio, keeps the time.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I yield the floor, now, to the gentleman from Kentucky. [Here the hammer fell.]

NOTE.—Having been prevented, by the expiration of my hour, and the objections which were made, from calling out any other statements, I append the following:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 3, 1858.

At the request of Hon. H. M. SHAW, I state that I was in the House of Representatives, on the 30th day of March, when his colleague [Hon. Mr. GILMER] delivered a speech upon the questions connected with the admission of Kansas as a State. At the conclusion of the speech, a number of "Republicans," from different parts of the Hall, crowded around the seat of the honorable member from North Carolina, and congratulated him. Hon. Mr. GIDDINGS, of Ohio, was in the Hall, at the conclusion of the speech. He approached, with others, the seat of Hon. Mr. GILMER, and I supposed, at the time, he congratulated him; and I should still have entertained that opinion, but for the denials which have since been made. I thought then, and I think now, from the manifestations given by the member from Ohio, that he was much gratified at the position occupied by the gentleman from North Carolina upon that occasion.

I have stated what I saw upon that occasion, and the impressions made upon me by the parties referred to.

H. C. BURNETT.

I concur in the above.

GEORGE S. HAWKINS.

J. L. M. CURRY.

J. W. STEVENSON.

WM. F. RUSSELL.

ALLISON WHITE.

JAMES HUGHES.

C. L. VALLANDIGHAM.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN A. GILMER,

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. GILMER said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: There seems to be some indication of a disposition to deal with me quite fiercely and harshly. Instead of arguing the political questions under consideration, thrusts and attacks are made ad hominem to do me harm. Points out of the ordinary scope are made, and my colleague seems to insist upon them as though something very important was to turn upon them. Before I proceed, however, I will call upon the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GOODWIN,] who was between Mr. GIDDINGS and myself, and I would be glad if he would state, in the hearing of the House, what took place between us.

Mr. ATKINS. I object, as objection was made on this side of the House just now under similar circumstances.

Several MEMBERS. It was withdrawn.

• Mr. ATKINS. Then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GILMER. My friends say they think it wholly unnecessary to introduce any testimony upon this subject. [Cries of "Let him go on."] Well, I am perfectly willing that he shall make his statement.

Mr. GOODWIN. I will say that I was in my own seat at the time; [Mr. Goodwin's seat is next but one to the seat occupied by Mr. GILMER, and between it and the aisle;] that Mr. GIDDINGS stood in the aisle by the side of my desk; and that there is one more desk between Mr. GILMER's and my own; Mr. GIDDINGS stood here by the side of my desk and shook his hands at Mr. GILMER, and said, "I do not thank you for connecting my name with that of Mr. Buchanan." That was all he said; and then he passed along. He did not take Mr. GILMER by the hands. He was not within reach of his hands. My colleague, [Mr. ANDREWS,] who sits by me, was here at the time.

Mr. ANDREWS. My recollection of what occurred corresponds with what my colleague has just stated.

Mr. BINGHAM. I take the liberty of saying that I believe the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SHAW] was present when my colleague, [Mr. GIDDINGS,] in his hearing, and in the hearing of the House, said that he never congratulated Mr. GILMER on that occasion, or on any other, about his speech; and I submit to the House and to the country if, after hearing that statement of my colleague, it is not, to say the least of it, a departure from those rules which ordinarily govern gentlemen, for the gentleman from North Carolina, in the absence of my colleague, to raise a question of veracity with him, especially on a subject which he knows nothing about?

Mr. GILMER. I think I recollect seeing the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] somewhere near me at the time. If he is in the House I should be glad to hear his recollection of what occurred.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I trust that if the committee has no more important business than this, we shall rise.

Mr. GILMER. Well, I will let that pass. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to inflict a speech upon the committee—very far from it. I will simply state that when I made my speech upon this subject of Kansas and Lecompton, I aimed, as far as I could, (and I think I succeeded,) at making a speech in which there were no offensive personal allusions—a speech that, I conceive, was acceptable to most southern gentlemen, and to the conservative gentlemen from the North. My colleague, [Mr. SHAW,] twenty days thereafter, in my absence, made a reply to it; and I submit to his own good sense, and I submit to the sense of the committee, and to all who may have read his speech, whether, instead of answering the views which I had respectfully submitted to the consideration of the House and the country, without offense to any one, he did not in his speech reply to the ad hominem, as if my having done this or that, having helped a poor Irishman, or having voted this way, or that way, in the Legislature of North Carolina, had anything to do with the great questions that were then before us? And if my colleague, having thus attempted by a speech to affect me politically, in the estimation of my constituents, has found, from my reply, that he has gained nothing by it, but on the contrary, that he is about to lose by it, I would simply say, here, with all good humor, and with all respect, that I do not think it becomes him to get into this fever, this excitement, this fury, this evident state of dissatisfaction; for I can assure my colleague that I am down with no such complaint.

I desire, now, to say a word or two in reply to my colleague, in regard to my speech in reply to him having been delivered on Monday evening. My colleague may be assured that as early as a week ago last Tuesday night, after it was determined, as I understood, that we were to hold evening sessions for debate, I was then ready to proceed, but could not, by the House refusing to go into committee, for which refusal he voted. I waited till Saturday evening, when I obtained the floor; but as my colleague was not then present, I postponed my remarks still further, until Monday evening, for the express purpose of giving him an opportunity to be here. He says he did not receive the notice. I proceeded. With regard to the printing of my speech, my colleague will find, by reference to the Globe, that it occupied its regular place in the proceedings, and appeared at the earliest possible moment. But such was my anxiety to publish it that I had it printed elsewhere, at my own expense; and if it did not fall into the hands of my colleague, it was in the hands of many gentlemen here before it was published in its regular order in the official proceedings in the Globe. But all this is catching at small things; and I express my belief, with all becoming respect, that they had better be left out in discussions of this kind. I expect to gain nothing by such. I think my colleague will find that the people of North Carolina, before whom we have both to appear, will take very little notice of these small matters.

My colleague, it seems, would get me into some controversy with the venerable gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. QUITMAN.] In that I trust he will be disappointed; for I say here, as I have often said in relation to the gentleman from Mississippi, that I had esteemed and venerated him as much as any man whose acquaintance it has been my fortune to make since the commencement of this Congress. He may get him momentarily into some excitement, which, on reflection, I am sure will soon pass away. I expressed my views as to how those who desired to have the Green amendment stricken out of the Senate bill could have proceeded so easily to do it; and in this, I indulged in the usual freedom of political criticism. But upon that particular subject I think I have been heard enough; and I think I have been heard in such a manner that my people, at least, and all North Carolina, will be well satisfied with the history and explanation which I have given of that subject. Was the amendment of the venerable gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the Green amendment? Let us see.

First, we had the Senate bill. The first amendment was to strike out the Senate bill and insert in lieu thereof the Crittenden-Montgomery amendment. What was the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi? It was to substitute his amendment for both the Senate bill and the Crittenden bill—to throw the Crittenden bill entirely

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Personal Explanation—Mr. Gilmer.

HO. OF REPS.

aside. Had it been written out no mention of the Green amendment would appear in it. It was a substitute both for the Senate bill and for the Crittenden-Montgomery bill. In his amendment, I repeat, nothing would be said about the Green amendment, suppose it written out. What was the vote? Those who preferred the adjustment of the difficulty by means of the Crittenden-Montgomery amendment, and were opposed to the Green amendment, to support the Quitman amendment would have had to vote against their own favorite bill, in order to have got at the Green amendment. In my reply I asked why the motion was not made simply to strike out the Green amendment from the Senate bill? To this no answer is given. My colleague does not doubt, no man doubts, if the amendment had been first made to strike out the Green amendment from the Senate bill, that motion would have been successful. Then what would have been the next vote? It would have been a vote deciding between the Crittenden-Montgomery bill on the one side, and the Senate bill, thus stripped of the Green amendment, upon the other side. When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] brought that fact to their attention, and asked that the previous question should be withdrawn, that this motion might first be made, so as to place all in their true and proper position, why did not my colleague and those of our southern friends who wanted the Green amendment stricken out yield to him, that the question might be submitted in that shape? Nothing could be gained effectually in putting the motion in the shape in which it was put, and everything could be gained by putting it in the simple, plain shape of striking out the Green amendment; and then the vote would have been between the two propositions as I have stated.

But I desire to say no more upon that subject. I understood the greater portion of the speech of my colleague, of the 20th of April, to be a defense of the doctrine contained in the executive Lecompton message. I directed my remarks to the doctrine contained in the message. In order that there should be no difficulty upon that question, I quoted the very identical doctrine in that message with which I found fault and dissented from, and upon which the Green amendment rested for explanation—the executive message giving meaning, force, and effect, to this Green amendment. I have, as to this, not heard my colleague distinctly and really; I do not understand to-day whether he approves of that doctrine or not; though, if I have heard and understood him correctly, he says he does not approve of that portion of the message. Then, I submit with great deference, that my colleague ought to have let my argument on that subject pass with his approval, and himself argued somewhat against that doctrine of the President; and not have devoted himself so entirely to other matters in the speech which I made, and matters foreign, and to which no allusion had been made by me.

One word now as to the vote which he said I gave in the Senate of North Carolina. I desire that what he quoted and stated as to the provisions of the constitution of North Carolina shall appear in his speech just as he spoke it here to-day; because, when it shall be compared with the constitution of North Carolina, there will be found, I conceive, a very material difference between his quotation and the constitution itself. We had a convention to amend the constitution of North Carolina, in 1835. It was called by an enabling act, the people being first consulted. They declared in favor of a convention, and delegates were elected. Amendments were made by that convention, and the people ratified their action.

In that convention the committee reported, in substance, that no convention should be called, except in the manner stated by my colleague. I speak from memory. But according to the register of the debates of the convention, complaints were made of the phraseology of the draft of the constitutional amendment first proposed, as to calling a convention in the future. Whereupon a very important amendment, materially changing the language as to the call of a convention, was made—the first draft being, in substance, “that no convention should be called, except by the concurring vote of two thirds of both Houses.” The amendment made, this section read in substance, “no convention shall be called by the Legislature, except by the concurring vote of two thirds of both Houses,” &c. This amendment, thus made—explained more fully by the debates—sustains, as I conceive, all the views I have ever maintained for the power of the people of North Carolina over their constitution.

But how does any difference of opinion on this sustain my colleague? Did I ever talk of sustaining the doctrine that, in a new State, or in an old State, a convention, called in one way or the other, could fairly give the Legislature the power to make a discrimination between property? I never did at any time. I never maintained the doctrine that a convention can justly give the Legislature power to give security to one species of property in preference to another—never. All this, however, I more fully explained before.

A word now about the eighty millions of public lands. The fault which I found with my colleague's speech was, that he stated that I voted against the necessary provisions to protect the Government in her right in the public lands within the confines of Kansas, without noticing the fact that the same safeguards were contained in the Crittenden-Montgomery bill that were in the Senate bill.

I understand my colleague now to say that he was misunderstood; that what he meant was, that inasmuch as the people of Kansas might vote down Lecompton, and proceed to form a new constitution, and in the formation of this new constitution they might claim a right to these lands, that would be effectual against the title of the United States.

Now, let me show how erroneous this position is. All Congress can do is to put a proper safeguard into the bill on which the State is to be admitted. Suppose, for instance, that Minnesota, or any other State having public lands within it, comes into the Union with proper provisions in the act of admission as to the rights of the United States in the public domain, and afterwards the people of that State should change their constitution and put in a clause declaring that all the public lands within its borders should be the property of the State: how would this affect the Government title? The position of my colleague is, if I understand him, that a subsequent alteration of the State constitution could take away the title of the United States to the public lands in that State, when express provision against it is in the admitting act—if the admission afterwards should be by proclamation. But, sir, I presented the views of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Senator Davis,] and quoted from his letter. My colleague must admit that I quoted properly. It declares, in substance, that unless you provide in the act of admission proper safeguards as to the title of the United States to the public lands in a State, the General Government loses its control over those public lands. But my colleague flies instantly to something else to get out of that difficulty; and says the remedy is contained in the enabling act. I read the views and position of the Senator from Mississippi, and showed that they must be provided for.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GILMER. My colleague would not extend this courtesy to me, and I cannot yield.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I only wish to interrupt my colleague to correct him in his statement. The Senator from Mississippi did not say that. He did not say the condition precedent must be contained in the act of admission. He is so reported in my colleague's speech, but he did not say that—

Mr. GILMER. I cannot yield. My purpose was to try my colleague by his own assumed rule, and by the opinion of Senator Davis. I understand my colleague now to say, that what he meant by the remark in his opening speech, that I had not been faithful against alien suffrage, consisted in this: that the inhabitants or citizens of Kansas might, under the Crittenden-Montgomery bill, for which I voted, in case they voted down the Lecompton constitution, make a new one, in which they might tolerate alien suffrage. Now let me examine that position for a moment. What more can Congress do to provide safeguards against the exercise of the right of alien suffrage than to guard against it in the act of admission? If the State afterwards sees proper to call a convention and amend its constitution, the difficulty which my colleague seems to labor under would arise in every case.

I mention this to my colleague to show how anxious he is to point out defects, and indulge in fault-finding.

He says that, by quoting the letter of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Davis,] I clinch the argument on his position, and in his favor, on his vote to admit Minnesota without a provision protecting the United States in her rights to the public domain within the confines of that new State. Very different, in truth, if there be anything in his own position assumed against me.

I am free to admit that my great objection to the admission of Minnesota was the alien universal suffrage which her constitution tolerates, and which is not denied.

My colleague is down upon me about my former views as to the admission of Kansas with the Lecompton constitution; talks enigmatically, and charges more than I recollect. I do not recollect about the canvass. I do not deny, however, that previous to my coming to Congress, I did entertain and express different views in relation to Kansas and Lecompton to those I formed and acted upon after investigating and becoming familiar with the whole facts. The time, I presume, is not material. I am free to admit, that had I not become well satisfied that serious difficulties would likely, inevitably, and without gain or benefit to my section, arise to the peace and quiet of the Union, I would have been as ready and as anxious as any other to admit Kansas with the Lecompton constitution, unconditionally.

But I came here to confer, investigate, and to legislate for the best interests of my country. I came here to give that vote which I thought would be best for the North, best for the South, best for the East, and best for the West; and when I had made a full investigation of the subject so far as I could, I found things very different and came honestly to the conclusion, without any reference to any section of this country, that a bill containing the provisions such as the bill I have advocated and sustained, was best calculated to quiet the country finally and forever. I gave it my heart, I gave it my hand, I gave it my cordial and honest support.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILMER. My colleague will recollect how he answered me when I asked the same privilege. I must reply to him in the same way.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I would be glad to know whether my colleague denies that the submission of the Lecompton constitution to the people was a question in the last canvass? I understood him to say that he took no position in regard to that question. If the gentleman denies what I have said, I am prepared to prove it. I say this now, because it is not my purpose to reply to him—

Mr. GILMER. My colleague will interrupt me whether I will or not.

I admit that I was, with others at the South, who believed that there was no necessity for a submission of the Lecompton constitution to the people, for that, I then believed that it was to be submitted for the sole and improper purpose unfairly to get rid of slavery. Had such been the true state of things, and that Lecompton admitted slavery, the question, no man would have more readily stood up for the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution.

My colleague says that I had indicated my anxiety to get rid of this question. Never did he state a greater truth. I was anxious, and have been anxious since the difficulty arose, that the question might be got rid of without harm to the peace and interests of the country, or the sacrifice of any principle. I presume that my colleague desired the same thing. I presume that all gentlemen who voted honestly on this question here desired and aimed at the same thing. And I repeat here, that the course I have pursued on this subject, whether southern men were with me or against me, is an honest one. Inasmuch as our southern friends have come, substantially, in the bill which was passed, upon my identical platform, I trust that experience, which is the result of time, may prove that I was right.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Arrest of Walker—Central America—Mr. Wright.

Ho. of Reps.

When my colleague speaks of my vote on the Crittenden bill being different from the votes of the great majority of my southern friends, and with a majority of the North, why did he not mention that upon the conference bill two as honest southern men as ever graced this floor recorded their names with the North? Does my colleague say that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BONHAM] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUITMAN] have, because of that vote, been false to their States, and become northern in their feelings and principles? How would they feel, and how ought they to feel, if I had risen up in my place, and, in the presence of the assembled Representatives of the nation, undertook to brand these gentlemen with having pursued a course by which they forfeited the confidence of their country—had perpetrated "an unparalleled outrage"—because they felt bound, under a sense of duty, to record their votes with what my colleague calls the Black Republican party? I merely present this attempt to make me out an Abolitionist as one of those things to be placed in the same category as reading the names of those who subscribed for my speech.

In my reply to my colleague's speech, I said, in substance, that I was surprised that he had not pointed out some portion of my speech that an ultra northern man could put his name to, or an ultra man anywhere, which he has been wholly unable to do. I desire to stand or fall by what is true—the facts, nothing more. My speech is before the country, and I ask to be judged by my speech. I am willing to let my first speech, and the remarks which I have subsequently made, go to North Carolina, or anywhere else, and be judged of and decided on by an honest constituency. I did complain, in answer to my colleague's speech, that he, in speaking of my remarks against the Senate bill, interpolated, or added, "in other words, to her admission as a slave State." I remarked, in my speech, that no man could have been more gratified than I, to have had Kansas in with the Lecompton constitution, all things being right and fair; and yet my colleague added, as I thought unkindly, said words, apparently to sting and mortify. I desired to ask my colleague the question what he did mean by the use of these words as descriptive of my objections to the Senate bill, and he very courteously declined to be interrupted, but promised that before he concluded, he would explain. He has not done so, and I suppose he forgot it.

On another subject I gave my colleague a fair chance to be heard. He had represented me as having voted for "an unparalleled outrage." I pointed out, in reply, that the conference bill for which he himself, and our whole delegation, voted, contained substantially all the essential provisions that were in the Crittenden-Montgomery bill, with which I and my friends were all perfectly satisfied, and which was declared a great triumph, and celebrated with music, speeches, and the firing of cannon. I had given him an opportunity to show that the very thing which he called "an unparalleled outrage" was, or was not, the thing for which he voted in the end, and the thing which he has gloried over as being a great triumph, and a measure of justice and peace. Why did my colleague, in his reply, not meet me in something substantial, and show that this is not true? Why did he not show that there was a material difference between the provisions of the Crittenden-Montgomery bill and those of the conference bill? Why does he not explain what the conference bill is? His, as well as my constituents, are interested in this.

My colleague brings to my attention the fact that I voted against the committee of conference. I did so, and, I think, for the best of reasons; and I should have continued to vote as I did, had I seen that, by doing so, I could have forced the two Houses of Congress to have taken the Crittenden-Montgomery bill. But indications were otherwise. I desired not to have an adjournment of Congress without some such settlement. The bill reported by the conference committee contained substantially, but indirectly, all I insisted on. The Green amendment was whirled to the winds, and the question was left to be decided substantially where, as I said before, it was perhaps better it should be decided, especially as the South could not be the gainer, let the decision be either way. Where is the necessity now for all this difficulty? Why come in, after this thing is all over, and indulge in this fury and this spleen, when my colleague, at last, comes down in substance to that which I had been contending for from the beginning? I repeat, the same in substance; but without many of the wise, plain, and impartial provisions of the Crittenden bill, so well calculated to settle all Kansas difficulties at once and forever, and give permanent peace to the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have done. I am sorry for having troubled the committee so long.

Mr. SCALES. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILMER. I dislike to deny my colleague, but I was not allowed by my other colleague to ask him any question.

Mr. SCALES. I merely want to ask my colleague a question which has nothing to do with the discussion.

Mr. GILMER. No, sir. I must respectfully decline to have anything interpolated in my speech, as my colleague refused me the privilege of having something interpolated in his speech.

Mr. SCALES. That does not justify my colleague for want of courtesy to me.

Mr. GILMER. My friend can have the floor when I am done, and can make a speech.

Mr. Chairman, I have presented my views. I hope I have done so without offense. It is my desire to discuss all such questions properly, and in proper temper and spirit; and I am not going to be drawn or betrayed into any excitement. To be sure, it is very annoying to me to find myself pursued, at my heels, and at every step, as a wild and predatory animal, and such efforts made that I may go home a damaged man.

I do not conceal the fact that it was annoying to me to see it in the papers, the morning after I made my speech, that my friend from Alabama cried out, "Kiss him, Giddings!"—a remark which I did not hear, and which my friend from Alabama states was made in a tone which he did not expect would reach the reporters' ears. I repeat that I felt mortified—I felt wounded. I felt that attempts were being made to hunt me down. I felt that I had been selected because I stood, as it were, alone—the Representative of a large conservative portion of the South, where I was born, with whom I am in all things identified in feeling and interest, and whom properly to serve is my highest ambition; and I admit it was mortifying to me to know that even the lists carried around by the little boys, to take subscriptions for my speech, were copied before these lists were finished, or the ink dry; and after publication here, immediately sent to North Carolina, and to the South, to show that gentlemen, whose political opinions are unpopular in the South, were sufficiently satisfied with my speech to subscribe for it. When that sort of game is to be practiced, I can only rely on the discriminating judgment of an honest people. I will appeal and leave it to them; and although those whose pleasure or taste may justify and induce them to indulge in all these little side-bar remarks, and ambush attempts to prejudice the force and effect of what I had argued, I feel that, before the just and honest tribunal of a generous and impartial people, these assaults will fall harmless at my feet, and that there is yet hope that I may survive.

I respectfully ask my colleague to meet fairly my views and arguments, and in the usual manner and spirit. Let us debate face to face, and boot to boot, and I will never complain of the advantage he may obtain on the questions I have discussed. I know not who to blame; but I submit, in conclusion, that it shows a want of fairness, if not ability, to meet the convincing tendency of the views which I have presented on the subjects discussed, when resort is had to this miserable underhanded method of attempting unjustly to create against me odium and prejudice.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington, obtained the floor.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. With the permission of the gentleman from Washington, I desire to say a single word in reference to the publication of the list of subscribers to my colleague's speech.

Mr. GILMER. My colleague has no right to make another speech; and I object, unless I am to have the privilege of replying.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. Does my colleague object?

Mr. GILMER. I do, unless you will agree that I shall have an opportunity of replying.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I was not going to reply to my colleague. I was going to make a single remark in regard to the publication of the list of subscribers to his speech.

ARREST OF WALKER—CENTRAL AMERICA.

SPEECH OF HON. A. R. WRIGHT,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. WRIGHT said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Some time since, when the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom that part of the President's message relating to the capture of Walker had been referred, made their report to the House, I offered the following resolutions as a substitute:

"Resolved, That the capture of William Walker by Commodore Paulding was without authority of law.

"Resolved, That said capture was within the letter and spirit of the instructions of the Navy Department, and especially that portion of the instructions which ordered one of its officers 'to repair to the Island of Chiriqui, on the coast of Nicaragua, where it had reasons to believe said expedition would rendezvous.' And another of said officers 'to proceed to Cape Gracias, Honduras, skirting along the coast, looking in at the mouth of Blewfield inlet; thence to San Juan del Norte, Nicaragua.'

"Resolved, That the right of the citizen of the United States to expatriate himself and change his allegiance; 'to emigrate with arms in his hands,' for the purpose of settling new countries and founding new States, is an inherent and sacred right, one that ought to be inviolate, and one of which he cannot be constitutionally deprived."

I sought the floor, on various occasions, to vindicate the resolutions, but was unable to obtain it. I now proceed to address the committee on them, and subjects intimately connected therewith.

The paper, usually denominated the Government paper, remarked in substance, a few days ago, when taking certain unruly members to task on the deficiency bill, that it was "infamous" for a man to change his party relations. That depends upon circumstances. If from corrupt motives, he is corrupt. If he follows his party from the same motives, he is none the less corrupt. The man that follows party because it is a party, is a factionist. The man who follows principle and supports a party because it follows principle, is in the path of duty. When leaders undertake to overthrow principle, honest men should overthrow them. As a man, I never supported our Chief Magistrate. I supported the principles of the Cincinnati platform, and the President as their exponent. When, in my opinion, he departs from any of its principles, I shall depart from him that far, no further. If he seeks to overthrow it, I shall seek to overthrow him. If that be infamy, I shall be "infamous." This spirit of independence in the Representative is the safety of the Republic. When it ceases, venality begins.

In the capture of William Walker and the making of the Yrissari treaty, the President honestly, I am willing to admit, but none the less erroneously, struck the vitality of the foreign policy of the Democratic platform. He committed a blunder—worse than a blunder; he put to hazard again the dominion of Central America in a foreign Power. We may recover from it without serious loss; it may cost us millions of treasure and oceans of blood. It was the political blunder of the nineteenth century. In any view, it must retard civilization; give continuance to priestly domination, and prevent the progress of knowledge and true morality. The "stability of future times," spoken of as glorious, "shall be wisdom and knowledge." These have been certainly hindered. Nothing has been secured of value to the country.

The great controller of Nicaraguan affairs, has not been generally known in this country. The ruling power has been behind the throne. A "cloth of gold" has hidden its deformities. The Earl of Warwick was called "the king maker." He overthrew and established dynasties. "The Transit Company," technically, "the American Atlantic and Pacific Ship Canal Company"—sometimes known as "Stebbins & Co.," sometimes as "Vanderbilt, White & Co.," and perhaps other names, located in New York—has ruled its destinies for some years. It has overthrown two Governments and established two, and now has its leviathan folds around it, supported, protected, and defended, both by this Government and the British. President Martinez and Yrissari are its mere puppets, to represent government.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Arrest of Walker—Central America—Mr. Wright.

HO. OF REPS.

This company furnished a large portion of the means by which Walker was introduced into the country, and, in combination with Castillo, or rather, the liberal party, which he had represented, (he having died before Walker's arrival,) overthrew the Chamorro, or aristocratic party. When the company failed to control Walker's government, it went to work to overthrow that, as it had done Chamorro's. In conjunction with British emissaries, it succeeded in arraying five Central American Governments against Walker, and aided them by its counsel and means in the war which followed. By some means unknown, it succeeded in getting the countenance and aid of this Government, by whose naval officer (Commander Davis) Walker was first captured and brought back to this country. Upon Walker's return to Nicaragua it was busy at Washington; its members were dined at the White House. Scandal says some of the heads of Departments bought stock, or had previously bought it. The Government agreed, through Yrissari, to protect it in all its franchises. Its president wrote to the Secretary of State to have "the filibuster Walker" taken away—said it was necessary for the good of the people of this country—that he had steamships ready to put upon the route for purposes of transportation, but was afraid of Walker, &c. Walker was accidentally captured, and the Martinez and Yrissari Government installed, and the said company, the British, and the northern half of this Republic, let in.

I have no time to enter into the details of this iniquitous transaction. I must, however, refer to some facts more minutely. By the Yrissari treaty, three main points are treated for: First. Two free ports to all nations, kindred and tongues, and especially our cousins, the British, at either end of the transit. Second. The protection of the company in its rights; this is the grand point. Third. Free transit across the isthmus to all Governments.

Now observe, first, Walker "and his young men, mostly from southern States," (as one of the capturing admirals calls them in his dispatch,) are taken out of the country. Now who are put in by the treaty? The British, and all other nations, except the southern half of this. For one of the stipulations is, protection to the company. What are its rights? Not only exclusive transit, (what a monopoly!) but exclusive colonization. Examine its contract with Nicaragua and Yrissari. My limit of an hour prevents its publication. I will give an extract of Yrissari's letter to Mr. Cass, under date of 30th December last:

"The undersigned deems it to be his duty to inform his Excellency the Secretary of State that the Constituent Assembly of Nicaragua has approved and confirmed the contract made by the undersigned with the American Atlantic and Pacific Ship Canal Company, the only one vested with the privilege of carrying across the isthmus, as the only one also which, for the present, and so long as the Government will not have otherwise disposed, has the right to carry emigrants to that country under such conditions as have been imposed on this company. All other emigrants or colonizers whatsoever that may be conveyed to that country will be refused admission, and compelled to depart from the territory of the Republic." "Considering it highly important that the tenor of this note, especially that portion touching emigration to Nicaragua should be made public, the undersigned would entertain the hope that the Secretary of State will find no objection to have its contents published."

And this, a Democratic Administration, supported by nearly the entire South, publishes! "Young men, mostly from the southern States," "will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly." Any desiring to emigrate to Nicaragua will please go by New York and get "their papers" of this land monopoly, this stock-jobbing and governmental company. Taking Walker away accidentally, this is the treaty made "of purpose."

Can it be possible that the President was amusing the South with the "Kansas abstraction," while practically he was using the power of the Government to take "slave labor" out of Central America and put free labor in? Was he not only giving territory to "free labor" in Kansas, and principle to the "slave power," but was he doing the same thing in the tropics? His antecedents would not lead us to such a conclusion. Facts seem to point that way. Surely I do not rightly apprehend them, or they are susceptible of explanation.

Hear what a leading British paper says. After rejoicing at the probable overthrow of slavery in some of the border States, he proceeds, (I quote the London News:)

"More significant still is the proposed settlement of Central American lands with white laborers. This is one of the consequences of the failure of Walker, and of the alarm which he caused to Nicaragua. The Minister from Nicaragua lends eager countenance to the scheme, in hopes of obtaining a respectable population, introducing capital, industry, and commerce, and of keeping at arm's length, by the same method, the tipsy, quarrelsome, marauding pioneers of slavery. Several thousands and white working men have taken passage for the new settlements. Time will show what their success is likely to be, and whether they can really carry on that competition with the South in regard to southern products, which must be their inducement to leave their country while such vast areas remain unappropriated there. Another motive may, however, be, that in Central America, they are more secure from the curse of slave institutions than they now feel themselves to be in any part of the Union. The real nature of the migration seems to be proved by the excessive wrath of the Virginia newspapers on the promulgation of the enterprise."

No wonder that "my Lord Napier and Sir Gore Ouseley" did agree to the Yrissari treaty. Is this the American supremacy in the Gulf and Central America, of the Democratic platform? Shall the American Navy be made, by a Democratic Administration, to act the part of scavengers for the British, in the Caribbean sea and along its coasts? Will American statesmen submit to this? Shall we thank the Administration that Walker, with his men, "mostly from the southern States," has been taken away, because, if we had not done it, the British would? Shall we vote Paulding a sword because on an American coast, under British guns, and the approving smiles of British officers, he captured his countrymen? And having captured his countrymen, he converted his ship into a theater, and made his men play low comedy for the entertainment and amusement of British soldiers! Oh, my country, how hast thou fallen! Our sires voted thanks and swords to their gallant tars; but in those days, the fresher days of the Republic, "knights were spurs who won them." Congress voted McDonough a sword; but McDonough drove British navies out of American seas. At Plattsburg, with fourteen ships, he fought seventeen; with seventy-six guns, he fought eighty-six; with eight hundred and fifty American seamen, he fought one thousand British. On Champlain's quiet waters, he argued the rights of his countrymen with the British, from the port-holes of his ships, with eloquent broadsides. In honoring him, I have thought my country did honor herself. Paulding captured his countrymen without firing a gun, with a British navy at his back. Shall we vote him a sword? What say you, representatives of my country's honor?

A Congress of our fathers voted Paul Jones thanks and a sword. The commander of the Bon Homme Richard, in sight of a British coast, in British waters, boarded a British ship, his superior in men and guns. When his flag was shot away, the opposing commander, supposing he had hauled down his colors, asked if the captain of the ship had surrendered; his reply was, "He has not yet begun to fight, sir!" Lashing his cannon-riddled, sinking ship to that of his enemy, and calling upon his men to follow him, he sprang to the enemy's vessel, and walked her slippery decks her victor and commander. Verily, I have felt right loyal to my country when I have read how she honored the dauntless hero. But Commodore Paulding—what has he done? Has faction and fanaticism effaced the last vestige of justice from the mind of my countrymen? As a subaltern, he but executed the order of his superior. He did that in a most ungallant and ungracious style. Clothed with a power that was wholly irresistible by those with whom he had to contend, he insulted and brow-beat his victim. In an official note to surrender, Paulding told Walker he lied, and threatened to hang him. With four hundred men, well armed, and with cannon, with a part of the British fleet floating in the harbor, and ready to help, he landed, and, without firing a gun, captured "one hundred and fifty young men, mostly from the southern States," badly clothed, badly armed, and not disposed to fight their countrymen. In that band there were some that, under the stars and stripes, had heard the thunders of Chapultepec, Cherubusco, and Molino del Rey.

Paulding faced no danger, run no risk, accomplished nothing likely to add to his country's renown or give luster to the page of her history. These captured "young men from the southern States" he sends in "a vessel without a stove," in the dead of winter, back to their country. Shall we vote the sword? That's the question. There was an enemy captured on that occasion, that has not generally been noticed, but was returned by the commodore under his "list of killed and wounded." Upon that enemy, we are told, by "some lookers on in the service," there was an assault of a serious character. It formed a sort of rear guard of "the captured," and was found in the shape of two barrels of "corn whiskey." Under the commodore's "list of killed and wounded," if you will observe closely, you will notice "a sack of salt, a bag of beans, and two barrels of corn whiskey." Upon this latter "force" of the enemy there was made a most determined and desperate charge. For violence of onset, and desperation of purpose, nothing has equaled it since the charge of Ney, at the head of the Old Guard, on the field of Waterloo. It is unnecessary to state, the victory was complete, the enemy was routed, dispersed, and annihilated. It is possible the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, in the other end of the Capitol, may have been caught with this part of "the encounter" in moving his resolution. Upon inquiry, I ascertained we both belonged to that respectable order known as "hard-shell Baptists." One of the peculiarities of that excellent people is said to be a "disposition to demolish" this dreadful enemy, whenever and wherever discovered. As such encounters are always accompanied "with imminent risks," I have thought it possible it was to this part of "the fatal affray" the sword was intended to go. Sir, if this is the idea, "I give in."

My distinguished colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] said, in his speech on Walker's capture, that it "was illegal and an outrage." Right truly and eloquently did he say it. There is no parallel to it in the history of this Government. Jackson did not thus treat those "filibusters" who conquered and civilized Texas. No Government ever committed a more unlawful and more unjustifiable act.

Yrissari has applied to Walker the epithets of "robber, murderer, pirate," and such like. Sorry am I that the President, in his effort to justify his action, has applied the same terms. Of the pompous mongrel, nothing better was to be expected. It is below the dignity of the President's office. He wronged the citizen, that was enough.

Gentlemen, endeavoring to justify the President, have pursued the same course; they have gone further, and declared Walker a failure as a ruler and a general. Let us inquire a little into the facts, and see how stand the "issues" the Government and its friends have made upon this "youth from a southern State."

Nicaragua has had no stable Government for many years. Revolution and anarchy have reigned over that Eden of the western world for a long time. Walker's government, in duration and efficiency, has not been equaled for nearly a quarter of a century. In 1855, there were two contending factions for the presidency. The aristocracy leaning to European influences, headed by Chamorro; and the liberal or democratic party, headed by Castillo. They were engaged in war for supremacy when, through the agency of this New York company, which sought to rule the country through the liberal party, a contract was entered into between Castillo and Walker, then of California, to the effect that Walker should maintain Castillo and his party in power, (himself becoming a citizen of the Republic;) and furnishing, therefore, a certain number of emigrants, armed. The consideration to Walker was to make him general of the army, and grant him fifty-eight thousand acres of land. Under this contract he sailed from San Francisco in 1855, in a vessel furnished by the New York company. Cannon of the American Government, under the national flag, saluted him as he passed out of the bay. He landed at Rivas, and fought a desperate battle with fifty-five Americans and ten natives against six hundred Nicaraguans, killing and wounding about three hundred of the enemy. Chamorro and Castillo had both died before his arrival. How he fought for nearly two years, and maintained himself, is known to the country. Under his leadership Rivas was elected President of the Republic; afterwards Walker himself.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Arrest of Walker—Central America—Mr. Wright.

HO. OF REPS.

The United States Minister recognized, officially, the Government of Rivas under Walker's auspices. It again twice recognized Walker's. It received his minister, Padre Vijil, at Washington. In June, 1856, Walker reordained the decree establishing slavery, believing his republic adapted to that kind of labor, and as likely to be best developed agriculturally by it. About the same time, the New York company, undertaking to govern Walker, was given to understand that he was President of the Republic, and not Mr. Vanderbilt. Five Central American States made war upon him. The British emissaries, in conjunction with Vanderbilt, did all they could to overthrow him. He was at last besieged at Rivas, for several months, where he fought with terrible resolution, himself and his men feeding on mules and dogs. Massena never displayed more fortitude, or fought with more desperate courage. The enemy never made an assault that they were not driven back with immense slaughter. His extremity was very great, but he never surrendered; and the opinion of the best informed is, that had not Commander Davis captured him and "brought him off," the enemy would have been compelled, from want and sickness, and its immense losses, to have evacuated the country. He was brought off in May, 1857.

By his indomitable energy, by the 14th of November following he raised men and money to recover his lost rights and put back to Nicaragua. On the 17th of the same month, three days after his departure, Yrissari, who had never, up to this time, been recognized by the Administration, was introduced to the President by Secretary Cass. The "man of straw" became "the minister plenipotentiary." The obnoxious Yrissari treaty was concluded. On the 8th of December, Paulding captured Walker, brought him back, and surrendered him to Secretary Cass, I believe, through the famous Captain Rynders. The aged Secretary, surveying him in great doubt as to the precise order to give, finally delivered to him Captain Winfrey's command to his militia company, to "disperse, and go where he damned pleased."

Such are the outlines of the facts. Who, then, was robbed? Walker by the Government of the United States and the New York stock-jobbing monopolists? or Nicaragua by Walker? What were Walker's rights? Was his contract with Castillo a fair one? Did he fight faithfully for his adopted country? Where are the fifty-eight thousand acres of land he bargained for? Where the army he was to command? Was he not a lawful President? Our Government recognized the Minister of—whom? A pirate, a thief, and a robber? Did her vessels of war salute a man in the violation of the laws of his country—one going on an unlawful expedition? While he served the New York Constrictor, and permitted the abolition of slavery to stand, he was a hero, "the gray-eyed man of destiny." A change came over the spirit of his future, when it crossed the "spirit of freedom." From the unanimity with which the camp followers of the "statesman from the Western Reserve of Ohio," [Mr. GIDDEXES,] rallied to the support of the Administration in Walker's capture, "I guessed" there must be a "nigger" in it. I did not then know it. Sure enough, that venerable statesman's ear had heard the master's lash and the negro's wail over the roar of the distant sea.

Walker is this day, by all law, human and Divine, as much the President of Nicaragua, as Mr.

Buchanan is of this Republic. The Government that ought to have stood by him, and made other nations stand off, is the one to oppress and ruin him. The Transit Company shout hosannas; the British praise the conservative writer of the "Ostend Manifesto;" and the Black Republicans see, in this "one virtuous act," hopes of a returning prodigal. Can it be that the "veins opened to let out Democratic blood," and thought to be healed, are bleeding again? Walker's motives were ambitious, but virtuous. That he sought to found a stable government over a beautiful country, but a debased and wretched people, is certainly true. That he sought to do it by legal means and legitimate warfare, is also certainly true. Rule badly as he might, it must have been better than anarchy, or the reign of terror and death—of a foreign-moneyed monopoly. Look how it grinds and scourges and kills in "the Indies."

A word as to his abilities. Gentlemen say he is a failure as a general. It is easy to rob one of laurels that have been hardly won. Where did he ever lose a battle? It is said he "was driven out of Sonora." By whom? By sickness and hunger. He entered Nicaragua with forty-six men. His first battle that his enemies say he lost, he fought against odds—ten to one. With fifty-five Americans and ten natives, as before stated, he fought and drove out of a town six hundred, killing and wounding half. At Massaya, he fought two hundred and sixty men against two thousand, and beat the enemy. At Granada he fought two hundred and seventy against two thousand eight hundred, and killed and wounded fifteen hundred.

He fought twelve battles, generally with about the same odds against him, and was victorious in all of them. In the straitsness of the siege of Rivas, he fought with the fierceness and courage of a lion at bay. He endured, with his soldiers, the fiercest hunger.

When the enemy made its assault, he fought at the head of his stern comrades in arms with the skill of a general and the courage of "the bravest of the brave." He was in Nicaragua about two years; his whole collective force, during all the time, was about two thousand five hundred men. With these he fought five Central American nations, (aided by British counsels and the Transit Company,) conjointly furnishing about nineteen thousand troops. He killed and wounded in battle about six thousand of the enemy; he lost only about eight hundred and fifty of his own men. And yet because he could not stand, in addition to the foregoing, the navies of Great Britain and the United States, we are told "this young man from a southern State" is a failure. He is no failure. Point to his equal in ancient or modern times. Show me the man, with the same means, who has accomplished equal results. His countrymen may attempt to blast his fame with the epithets of "fillibuster, marauder, and pirate." It will live. His deeds have breathed into his name life. It will be more enduring than that of his traducers; it will outlive the marble; it is upon the page of his country's history. Poets shall put it in song; orators engrave it in burning paragraphs. I did not intend to eulogize him, but simply to pay a passing tribute to the genius of American production, to do justice to a citizen of the Republic. So much for Walker's capture, its causes, its consequences, his rights and his capacities.

A word upon what has been termed "the neutrality act." This is the act under which the President seeks his justification for his seizure. It cannot be justified under it. In the first place, there is no such act as "the neutrality act" known to the statute-book. There is "An act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States"—not against other nations. The crimes pointed out in this act are matters between the United States and its citizens, just as any other crimes are. Foreign nations have nothing to do with it. When foreign nations bring offenders to the notice of this Government, it should be for some breach of "the law of nations," or some treaty stipulation. Foreign nations have nothing to do with crimes of citizens of the United States against their own Government. This is our business, not theirs. They have just as much right to assume an oversight of the execution of our criminal laws for offenses against our Government on one subject as another. When we trespass the law of nations or treaties, by which they suffer, then, and not till then, they have a right to speak. Were I President, and Yrissari, or "my lord, or the count," were to call my notice to the execution of our criminal laws, I should call theirs to their own business, specially and particularly.

But never did the head of a nation make a greater mistake than did the President in his message, when he said this act conferred upon him the power to use the Army and Navy "to prevent the carrying on of military expeditions," &c. There is no such general grant. By no means. There is nothing like it. The eighth section of that act does authorize him "to take possession of and detain a ship; to prevent the carrying on," &c. Is there no difference? Mark: he says there is grant of power "to use the land and naval forces or the militia to prevent," &c. The act says "to take possession of and detain a vessel, in which a military expedition is set on foot," &c., and "its prize," (if it has taken any.)

Any man of fair mind, who will read the section, will see it could only have contemplated vessels in our ports. The ninth section authorizes the President to use the same force to compel a ship to depart our ports which ought not to be here. The language of the eighth section, under which alone he pretends to justify the use of the Army and Navy and militia, does not authorize him to seize nor to capture, but to take possession of and detain, and to do this, as my colleague has well said, "to prevent the carrying on," &c. And not only to use the Navy, but the Army, and not only the Army, but the militia, "to take possession of and detain." Will the President take the militia about to foreign ports to take possession of and detain vessels, &c., to prevent the carrying on of warlike expeditions? Outside of the marine league the neutrality act no more authorizes the President to use the Navy or Army or militia to make a seizure such as Paulding's capture of Walker, than it does to make war. One is as much a usurpation as the other.

Let us for a moment analyze this far-famed act, "to punish crimes against the United States," about which so much is said, and in which all earth's nations are so much interested, and which the British in particular, and other nations in general, recommend us to execute for our benefit. It has thirteen sections. The first six define and punish certain crimes—nothing more. If a citizen violates them, anybody may sue out a warrant, and the marshal will arrest. If resisted, he will raise "the posse." No army or navy is to be used here. Nobody pretends there is any grant of any such power in either of them. The seventh declares, the district courts shall take cognizance of the captures within the marine league of our coasts. We pass the eighth for the present. The ninth gives the President power to use the Army or Navy or militia, "to compel any foreign vessel to depart, which, by the laws of nations and treaties, ought not to be here." The tenth compels owners of armed ships to give bond that they shall not be used to make war, &c. The eleventh authorizes collectors to detain any suspicious vessel, till the further order of the President, or its owner gives bond it shall not be used for war. The twelfth repeals other acts. The thirteenth enacts that this act shall not prevent prosecutions for piracy or treason. Thus we have it all. On the eighth section, and that alone, is there pretense of power to use the Army and Navy and militia. I have given a faithful exposition of that.

It is one thing for the citizens of this country to fit out military expeditions against other countries. And it is another thing for the citizens of this country to migrate to other countries permanently, and fight when they get there, to rule it. They must take their chances. If they are overpowered, they die. This Government cannot interfere in the mode or measure of their punishment. When the brave Crittenden, with his compatriots, were taken prisoners in Cuba, our consul would not even go to see them in their dungeons before their execution. They died with the constancy and courage of the American character. Shall we, then, when they are successful, as Walker was, make war upon them ourselves; and that, too, to put "money jobbers" in their places? I hope not. Surely this outrage upon

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Arrest of William Walker—Mr. Hawkins.

HO. OF REPS.

Walker and his men, will yet be redressed by our Government, and full justice done them.

The distinction between citizens of this country fitting out military expeditions against other countries, and emigrants, is to be found in the animus manendi and the animus revertendi—the mind of remaining in that other country, or the mind of returning to this. Where there is the mind of returning, it is an offense against the so-called neutrality act. Where the mind is to emigrate, to remain and take his chances, it is lawful; it is a right, an estimable right, one of which he cannot be constitutionally deprived. If our citizens have not this right, we are worse off than the Irish under British rule. Whenever I am satisfied that I am wrong in this, and that we belong to the Executive; that he can send after us, and run us down, and catch us, and bring us back, I shall do my best to revolutionize my Government; I shall despise its principles, and defy its power. From the capture of Walker, such would seem to be the President's view. I hope by this time he has taken the second sober thought.

That Paulding acted within his instructions is too manifest to admit of doubt. To prevent the expedition, why order a vessel "to the Island of Chiriqui, where it was thought they would rendezvous?" Was it, if her commander found filibusters on it, to look at them and sail off? Was it to lie around and prevent their getting off, and starve them to death? Why order a ship "to skirt along the coasts of Honduras?" Suppose her commander saw the filibusters setting on the coasts, was he to sail off and leave them there? Why order him "to look in at Blewfield Inlet?" Was it to grin at them, if found; expecting that, like Captain Scott's coon, they would give in?

Was there duplicity in the President in this matter? When the South complained, he said Paulding "committed a grave error." When the North and the British rejoiced, why, then, the organs said "the President, in Walker's capture, had inaugurated a policy." This was wrong. The President has read the old Scriptures to some profit. The Jews had a ceremony of bringing up a goat once a year; and the High Priest, putting the sins of the people and himself upon him by laying his hands upon his head, sent him away to the mountains. He was called the scape-goat. The President saw the force of the ceremony. He always has one at hand. When pressed to the wall by the illegality of the seizure, he puts his hand on Paulding; he "committed a grave error." Now, let us have it one way or the other. If Paulding did it, let "the policy inaugurated" be Paulding's; quit flattering the President. One of the evils of all Governments is the "dogs that eat the crumbs which fall from their master's table." It requires a strong mind to appreciate their meanness and despise them. All men love the "flattering unction." A wise man, however, while he listens, will not be seduced. Sometimes he will learn his own folly by the very excess of the adulation. It is thought by some good judges that the President's table is well attended.

I have no time to enter into detail upon my third and last resolution. It will not be denied. That it has been violated, no right-minded man can doubt. The slave of a faction, who despises truth if it conflicts with gain, can give some excuse as a plausible pretext, for any injustice, yea, for crime; the love of liberty for assassination.

Our foreign policy is marked out in the Cincinnati platform. Let us have courage to stand up to that. If we have not, let us strike it out.

The Monroe doctrine, which is to be "adhered to with unbending rigidity," does not require any acquisition of territory. It does not require any interference with the commerce of foreign countries on this continent. It does not prevent individual emigration to any portion of it. It does not require any protectorate of this Government over any of its Governments or territories. It does say, however, that European Governments shall not plant their old, decayed systems of kingcraft and priestcraft upon it. Upon our northern border, Great Britain has planted her "lords temporal and her lords spiritual."

It is said the policy of giving Canada a prince of "royal blood" is now being agitated. We do not, by the Monroe doctrine, propose to interfere with that; but we do, if she or any other Power undertakes to do so on our southern border. Our true policy is to use the power of this Government to keep these countries free from foreign rule, and to let them fill up with just such immigrants as may seek homes there. Under this policy, our element of population will naturally soon predominate. Its contiguity, and the energy and enterprise of our people, will, if let alone, settle it in our favor. The Irish and Dutch, and general foreign immigration, when not carried on by the Governments for purposes of colonization, sympathize with our people and institutions, rather than their own. Well regulated Governments in these southern Republics, with American sympathies, are as much, or more, to be desired by us than any extensive annexations. I do not include Cuba in these remarks. She fills the mouth of the Gulf, upon which a number of the States of the Union border. She also commands the mouth of the Mississippi river, which is the great artery from the heart of the Republic. Cuba ought to be subject to our jurisdiction. It is natural and just that it should be. The guarantee of it by France and England to Spain was an appeal to our fears. Central America is wholly disconnected. It occupies no such relation. It may or may not become necessary to own a part of her territory. That is not the question. Shall we permit European countries to colonize it, to govern it, as England does the East Indies, thereby bringing her power to bear to control the will of the people and the destiny of the country? Shall she send a prince of the blood to rule her colony? The Democracy of this country say not, in their platform. If it is too weak in the knees to stand up to it, let us take it out. Let us not make ourselves ridiculous by vaporizing.

The British, in the face of our declared policy, proceed to take possession of the best harbor on the coasts of Honduras, and form her colony at the Balize. She then proposes to negotiate, that we should take none, if she will take no more. We never proposed to take any, at any time. We said, those countries should be free from foreign domination. That insolent Power, that never took up her foot where she had put it down, unless she was made to do it, unfurled the flag of her domination in the tropics; and for arguments as to its rectitude, showed her "war dogs" in their kennels, in her three-deckers. While she knows full well the spirit of our people, she understands equally well the courage of our rulers. She knows they will not fight unless the danger is greater in the rear than in the front. She catches our vessels in the Gulf, hauls them to, examines and lets off the craft when the humor suits her. If we say anything, "My lord" is ready "to negotiate." Any day, no man in the Republic would be astonished to learn that she had treated for Yucatan, for Vera Cruz, or half of the Mexican Republic. For myself, I hope she may. I do not doubt we shall have her to fight, or let her govern the Caribbean sea and Central America.

I am not fond of fighting, individually or nationally. When I am satisfied it must be done, however, I think the best way is to have it over. A fight is sometimes prevented by rendering palpable you are ready. It may be so with the British. While they are a brave, they are also a considerate people. A serious conflict now with the United States would develop the greatest naval and military Power in the world. I know England's advantages at the beginning of the strife—her trained soldiers, her thousand battle-ships, her immense steam power. I know how, temporarily, we should suffer; but how would my country rise with the strife! As Young America smarted under his blows, how would he learn wisdom from adversity! What a Power our country is, if the emergency should arise to rouse her energies! England is old. Her rulers, wise and valorous, are wanting in vigor and skill. Her capacity to pay is stretched to its utmost tension. The slightest shock to her credit, and it would vanish forever. Her supplies are drawn from this country. Her commerce lives upon it and by it. She would be troubled for fighting men as well as means.

How different the condition of this country! Growing in vigorous youth, free from debt, full of men for soldiers and seamen, and able to procure recruits, exhaustless recruits, from almost every land, capable of building in a few years a navy as large as that of Great Britain, for a sum equal to two years' interest upon the public debt of that country, who could doubt the result? In full view of all the resources of the two countries, comprehending, as far as I may be able, all the consequences of a collision, I do not believe that England can survive the struggle. But that is immaterial. Let us take down our colors or fight. The consequences of war are terrible; I know; but if England will undertake, in defiance of our policy, to colonize Central America, and police American seas, let it come. Let us maintain our policy or sink the last ship in the American Navy, and exhaust our forests in building new ones.

ARREST OF WILLIAM WALKER.

SPEECH OF HON. G. S. HAWKINS,

OF FLORIDA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

MR. HAWKINS said:

MR. CHAIRMAN: I am aware that anything savoring of animadversion upon the conduct of Commodore Paulding, in his recent capture of William Walker, is not calculated to find much sympathy or favor with many members of this House; but, animated by a sincere desire for the attainment of truth and justice, I shall not permit my opinions or conduct to be swayed either by popular clamor or public applause; and the violent tirades against Walker, or fulsome adulation of Paulding, are, to me, matters of supreme indifference, exercising no influence or control over or upon me.

The event that has given occasion for this discussion is numbered among the things that were; but it has brought with it an involution of principles of the highest importance—principles embracing questions of national and international law—and, as such, is entitled to the most serious consideration.

At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I will simply remark, I am no filibuster, nor have I much sympathy with any expeditions gotten up in this country in derogation of its laws, its policy, and its duty towards other countries. They contravene our own municipal regulations, and are utterly subversive of the law of nations—a law based upon principles of that eternal justice implanted by the Creator in all moral and social creatures, upon the golden rule and the implied assent of mankind. The present laws for their suppression—the neutrality acts of 1818—are certainly sufficiently stringent and severe; but as long as they remain upon the statute-book, let obedience be yielded to them; but a state of things may arise when either they should be repealed, or power and discretion given to the Executive to suspend their operation.

As to William Walker, I confess I have but small faith in the star of "the gray-eyed man of destiny," for it shines dimmed and pale, receiving or borrowing no luster from his civic or military talents. That he possesses uncommon personal courage, force of will, and firmness under difficulties, there is no doubt; but these attributes of character appear unaccompanied by the requisite knowledge of the art of war, the gift of gaining the affections of his troops, and the enforcement of a salutary discipline, save by acts of extreme and probably unnecessary severity. He permitted himself to be overreached by a coup de main of the Costa Ricans, thereby losing the command of the San Juan and the lake; and being deprived of these points, he was unable to receive succors through these channels, or make a successful retreat. He allowed himself to be involved in a controversy with the Transit Company, which became one of the leading causes of his failure; and instead of using his power in the name and through the agency of others, who were not likely to enkindle the local jealousy of the people of the isthmus, he committed a serious error in assuming the reins of government.

Whilst making these strictures, however, I am free to admit that his greatest errors were his misfortunes; for he went not forth like Napoleon,

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Arrest of William Walker—Mr. Hawkins.

Ho. OF REPS.

accompanied by the goddess of Fortune as well as the god of War; and if he had been successful, he would have ranked with Bolivar and other deliverers of their country from oppression; but as it was, he had to learn, in the language of a British statesman, that—

"A successful resistance is a revolution, not a rebellion. Rebellion, indeed, appears on the back of a flying enemy; but revolution flames on the breast-plate of the victorious warrior."

In his "first most extraordinary expedition, I felt a deep interest not only in the man, who, after being invited to Nicaragua by one of the two parties contending for the mastery—those of Chamorro and Castillon—accepted the call, and, accompanied by only fifty-six followers, fought battles successfully, and within a year after his advent was elected, almost unanimously, President of the country; but I felt an equal interest in the success of a cause by which the masses of that region might be relieved from oppression of all kinds in time of peace, and the horrors incident to interminable and bloody wars. I felt, sir, that there was a prospect of American progress in one of the finest regions of the earth; that the people of those regions, on becoming acquainted with our laws and institutions, might gradually become imbued with their spirit and follow our example. I felt that an ally might be gained, through whose agency, based on good will and reciprocal interests, a route for all time might be gained across the isthmus to our possessions on the Pacific that could neither be disturbed by the bad faith of the Governments in Central America, nor by the intrigues of foreign Powers. I felt, sir, the force of that sentiment alluded to by Mr. Webster, in his correspondence with the Chevalier Hulsemann, at the breaking out of the revolution in Hungary, when he remarks that "The American Government and people take a lively interest in the events of this remarkable age, in whatever part of the world they may be exhibited; and they cannot suppress the thoughts or hopes which arise in men's minds in other countries from contemplating the successful example of free Governments."

I felt, sir, the sentiment of a high functionary of this Government, whose heart always beats responsive to whatever is noble, brave, or patriotic, when he declares—

"I am free to confess that the heroic effort of our countrymen in Nicaragua excites my admiration, while it engages all my solicitude. I am not to be deterred from the expression of these feelings by sneers, reproaches, or hard words. He who does not sympathize with such an enterprise has but little in common with me."

I felt, sir, the sympathy as expressed for the cause in Nicaragua, in one of the resolutions ingrafted upon the Cincinnati platform, in 1856. And, sir, Commodore Paulding himself, in 1856, partaking of a feeling which at that time pervaded this Republic, wished success to the enterprise of William Walker!

A distinguished gentleman of this House, and a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, has shown me a letter sustaining this statement, and I will thank my friend from North Carolina to send the letter to the Clerk's desk, to be read "for information."

Walker played the game boldly, and he lost; he risked everything upon hazard of the die, and it was adverse; and his expedition will be read and remembered as an episode in the history of nations, displaying how much can be achieved by means, however inadequate to the end, when guided by American enterprise and American valor.

As to Commodore Paulding, I will endeavor to prove what the President has asserted, that he has been guilty of "a grave error." Yes, sir, an error of so grave a character that, unless some mark of reprobation is placed upon his conduct, the result, at some future period, may be productive of the most disastrous consequences to this nation.

If officers of the Navy are to understand that acts similar to Commodore Paulding's are to pass unnoticed, there may be a rehearsal of the drama, when this Government may be obliged either to disavow the act, and render acknowledgments humiliating to its pride as a nation; or else, in adopting it, be precipitated into war. A medal to Paulding now, or a presentation of thanks, cannot fail to induce—ay, sir, invite—imitation of a most illegal and unwarrantable invasion of some country that may possess the will and the power to avenge an insult to its sovereignty. If Paulding has acted in accordance with the orders of his superiors, or if his act has been adopted by them, the culpability rests not with him, but them. But I regard his conduct repudiated by the Administration, as shown by the release of Walker in this city, and the censure cast upon him (Paulding) by the highest functionary of this Government.

It may be proper for the Executive of this nation to palliate or extenuate the conduct of a naval officer high in rank. It is his privilege; it is an attribute pertaining to his high appointment; and it is for him to exercise the pleasing prerogative of seasoning justice with mercy; but when a question of law, international or otherwise, arising from a certain state of facts, is submitted to an American Congress for its solution, we ought to decide upon the question itself, and leave the palliating circumstances, if any, to another branch of this Government.

This is not a case of mere individual misconduct, where good motives or intentions can be pleaded by way of exculpation; it is an official act, and, as such, should receive a more rigid and severe scrutiny. It is, sir, a question of international law; it is a political question; and Commodore Paulding has been guilty of a political error, said by Talleyrand to be worse than a crime. The latter may affect one or more individuals; the former the peace of nations and the repose of mankind.

I am a friend of the Navy, sir, for I consider it the right arm of our defense. With us, as in England, it can never become the subject of the same jealousy as is felt for a standing army. It has thrown the most brilliant luster over our military annals, and has gained for us the respect and admiration of the world. But, sir, I wish a navy composed of officers who bow to the law and its behests, and who act in accordance with the apotheism of Marshal Saxe, that there were three duties of a soldier; the first was obedience, the second was obedience, and the third was obedience.

It is said, because Nicaragua has not complained but approved of Paulding's course, therefore no wrong has been done. The question is not between that country and us, but between this Government and Commodore Paulding; and the true inquiry is: was Paulding justified in the arrest of Walker upon the soil of Nicaragua, either by virtue of his instructions or the law of nations? I answer in the negative. He transcended his instructions. The seizure of Walker was an act of war; and he assumed and usurped the high prerogative of the war-making power in its consummation; and yet, sir, I find it gravely asserted that Paulding had not only the right to arrest Walker within the maritime jurisdiction of Nicaragua, but upon her very soil itself. The only possible pretext for his arrest was a charge of an infraction of the laws of 1818. Admitting, sir, a priori, the charge to be true, let me ask, have those laws or statutes any operation, any force, any vitality within the jurisdiction of Nicaragua, or that of any other foreign Power? If so, sir, there is an end at once to the sovereignty of nations, for there would be an imperium in imperio. Chief Justice Marshall says:

"The jurisdiction of a nation within its own territory is necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it, deriving any validity from any external source, would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction, and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in that power which could impose that restriction."

Now, sir, how far does this jurisdiction of Nicaragua extend? Mr. Wheaton, in his work on international law, writes thus:

"The maritime territory of every State extends to the ports, harbors, bays, mouths of rivers, and adjacent parts of the sea inclosed by headlands, belonging to the same State. The general usage of nations superadds to this extent of territorial jurisdiction a distance of a marine league, or so far as a cannon shot will reach from the shore, along all the coasts of the State. Within these limits the rights of property and territorial jurisdiction are absolute, and exclude those of any other nation."

I feel reluctant, sir, to make these quotations to prove what I had always deemed truisms, but I have been coerced to do so by the novel views which have been expressed upon this question.

We had, sir, no right even to demand Walker from Nicaragua, there being no extradition treaty between that Power and us; and if we had no right to demand, how much less had we to capture him by force of arms upon the very soil of Nicaragua? Whilst it is admitted that the jurisdiction of this Government extends to our private vessels wherever found upon the high seas, yet it can never be exercised over them, save by compact or comity, when lying within the ports or harbors of any foreign nation. When it is asserted that we can exercise jurisdiction over our citizens everywhere, it only means that that jurisdiction can be exercised when persons guilty of an infraction of our laws return within our territorial jurisdiction. The power of punishment is vested in the sovereignty, and must be exercised within the limits of that sovereignty. The moment the Fashion came within the marine league of the shores of Nicaragua, our jurisdiction over her ceased, and that of Nicaragua begun.

As to a supervisory power of the commanders of our national vessels over our private vessels abroad, I will not argue. They are bound to protect and defend, but certainly not to officiate as police officers. Walker had a perfect right to expatriate himself. His followers had an equal right. They had a right to change their domicile and throw off all allegiance to this country; if not, the rescue of Martin Koszta was a rank usurpation, and hundreds of thousands of people in this country are still subjects of Great Britain and other nations of Europe. If Walker and his men left this country with the intention of casting their lot in Nicaragua and remaining there, the moment they landed upon its shores that expatriation and change of domicile begun, and they were beyond the pale of the power and authority of this Government, and released from all ties of allegiance that had previously existed.

The attack of Commodore Porter on Foxardo has been quoted as justifying Commodore Paulding. What are the facts in that case? Certain goods, stolen at St. Thomas, were conveyed to Porto Rico, where the authorities shielded and protected the felons. Commodore Porter sent his officer to demand the goods; the officer was seized, insulted, and imprisoned. Determined, as he said, "to demand indemnity for the past and security for the future," he landed at Foxardo, spiked the cannon of a battery ready to fire upon him, and exacted apologies from the alcalde for the insult to his flag and his country. And yet, for this he was ordered home by James Monroe, court-martialed, suspended for six months, and John Quincy Adams approved the sentence! He was not punished for thus asserting the honor of his country; but for the invasion of the soil and sovereignty of Spain.

Nor are the cases cited, as to the course pursued by our officers at Tripoli, Tunis, and Algiers, at all applicable. There had been aggressions of various kinds upon our citizens in those countries. Our officers were far beyond the reach of instructions, and they had every reason to anticipate the wishes of our Government, and they acted in accordance with those wishes, amounting, substantially, to a tacit command. To obtain redress was their duty, and the law of self-defense justified their conduct.

So with General Jackson, when he took possession of St. Mark's and Pensacola. The commandant of St. Mark's and the Governor of West Florida had been exciting the Indians to acts of hostility against our citizens. Taking the responsibility, and actuated by the highest motives of patriotism, he acted upon this principle of self-defense. This principle overrides all other considerations, for "international law considers the right of self-preservation as prior and paramount to that of territorial inviolability."

And then, too, what possible analogy between the course pursued by Paulding and Ingraham? It is true, Ingraham may have invaded the sovereignty of Turkey; but he heard the cry, "I am an American citizen!" and he rushed to the rescue. Turkey was imbecile, weak, and incapable of performing her duty to other nations, by protecting their citizens within her limits; and when this state of facts exists, this law of self-defense comes into play; and Ingraham richly earned the thanks of his country for rescuing an American citizen from the fangs of Austria.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan Bill—Mr. Andrews.

HO. OF REPS.

Paulding, not appreciating the difference between the extent of a power and the abuse of a power, perpetrated this grievous wrong under the flag of our country.

If the colors of that noble pennon are allegorical, as I have read—the white as an emblem of the purity of our intentions, the red as an emblem of terror upon the battle-field, and the blue as an emblem of the faith of our engagements—he might have gleaned something from these as a rule of action, even something of the spirit of the law of nations, and not perverted the flag under which he sailed, by a cool, premeditated attack upon the people from his fatherland—misguided though they may have been, or led astray by some illusory notions of giving freedom to a region among the fairest of the globe.

The main justification of Paulding rests upon the principle that evil may be done, provided a good follows as a result; a principle, sir, than which nothing can be more pernicious; a principle charged to be a leading one with the followers of Ignatius Loyola, and one, sir, that at all times has been denounced as one of the most dangerous chimeras that has ever entered into the brain of man. "To procure an eminent good by means that are unlawful (says Sir William Scott) is as little consonant to private morality as to public justice." This is the language of a great and good man, and used while deciding against the legality of boarding vessels engaged in the African slave trade, anxious as he was, anxious as all England was, at the time, for the suppression of what was called a most abominable traffic in human flesh. "Tempora mutantur," Mr. Chairman; and an observer of human events might ask, if the philanthropy of Exeter Hall and the policy of la belle France were not yielding somewhat to the laws governing capital and labor? if they were not yielding somewhat to the questions of their demand and supply?

The rights and duties of nations are reciprocal. No nation has the right, though it may have the power, to force even benefits upon another nation; and Vattel says:

"But, though a nation be obliged to promote, as far as lies within its power, the perfection of others, it is not entitled forcibly to obtrude those offices on them. Such an attempt would be a violation of their natural liberty. In order to compel any one to receive a kindness, we must have an authority over him; but nations are absolutely free and independent."

All nations are supposed, in their intercourse with each other, to be equal; for, where there is sovereignty, there is the necessary concomitant, equality; and, in the terse language of Chief Justice Marshall, "Russia and Geneva have equal rights."

And here, sir, let me ask you, what would have been the feeling and sentiment in this country if Nicaragua, on ascertaining that Walker's expedition was about to sail, had sent an armed vessel, and captured him within one of our southern harbors, or within the marine league of our shores? It would have been, sir, a casus belli; and there would have been a feeling of indignation pervading the bosom of every man who loved the honor, the dignity, and the independence, of his country; and yet, sir, by this law of reciprocity, by this law of correlative rights and obligations, Nicaragua had as much right to do that as Paulding had to seize Walker on the sands of the Punta Arenas.

The soil of Nicaragua should have been held sacred by Paulding; it should have been holy ground; and he had no right to desecrate it by an act of outrage and usurpation, even for the purpose of capturing felons, from the chief of whom, by a ridiculous anomaly, he accepted his parole of honor.

When I first heard of this transaction, it occurred to me the Government of Nicaragua might love the treason, but hate the traitor, and however much she might complacently rejoice over the riddance from Walker, yet I asked myself, may not its national pride have been more humiliated, a deeper stab given to its nationality, than for all that Walker could have accomplished with his one hundred and fifty followers, and especially when among the pleas set up to justify the act, was that of the weakness of Nicaragua, and her inability to defend herself against a handful of adventurers? And must she not have felt herself degraded in the eyes of nations at this open avowal of her imbecility? If any of the spirit of the days of Charles the Fifth, or the second Philip has been transmitted to her rulers, she must have felt this, and she may have exclaimed, in the somewhat trite quotation from the Latin poet,

"Non tali auxilio, nec defensoribus istis, tempus eget."

Martinez has declared that Paulding's act was "above the law," and without question. The Yrissari treaty has been delayed, and has dragged its slow length along, owing to the jealousy entertained by Nicaragua as to a military protectorate over the transit route conceded by that treaty, for it must have felt sensibly that the same military power which had been so recently exerted for her defense, might be wrested to her destruction. And now we learn that the treaty will not be ratified at all.

And here let me remark, though not exactly germane to my subject, that all the Central American States entertain a jealousy of this country—a jealousy fostered by the acute agents of France and England in those countries.

I regret to hear so much stress laid upon the probable action of those Powers, in case our policy should perchance conflict with their own. That policy meets us at every step. We met it in Texas—it has been at work in St. Domingo and the Sandwich Islands, Cuba, and the Central American States.

I say, sir, let us have an American policy—let us display proper firmness with all Powers, and not permit our magnanimity to pass over with impunity the insults or outrages committed by the smaller ones on account of their weakness, for we "can as little compound with impotence as perfidy." The bones of our citizens are whitening in the sun at Virgin bay and along the transit route to the Pacific, and the murder of four of our citizens, within our own borders, near the line of Sonora, is yet to be atoned for.

The President, in his message of last December, tells us that no progress whatever has been made towards the settlement of the claims of our citizens against the Spanish Government, and that "the outrage committed on our flag by the Spanish war frigate Ferrolana, on the high seas, off the coast of Cuba, in March, 1855, by firing into the mail steamer El Dorado, and detaining and searching her, remains unacknowledged and unredressed." And now tidings every day reach us of the most aggravated insults to our flag by British cruisers, in our own waters. England has never relinquished the principle of visitation and search, but will no doubt seek to palliate the conduct of her officers by drawing an absurd distinction between them. There is no difference in principle; the first is the incipient step, the latter the consummation of the act. Either or both are to be exercised only as belligerent rights, and are founded upon and have their origin in force. In time of peace we can never permit them to be exercised, and I, for one, say, full indemnity for past outrages, and a relinquishment as well of the right of visit, as asserted by the cautious and facile Aberdeen, as that of search, as well as visit, contended for by the haughty Palmerston. If not yielded, then I say, war; and in the interim let us give the Executive the means and the power to enable him to sustain the honor of the country.

I rejoice that measures are being taken for the annihilation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; it is the first step, and it is a good one; and I trust that at least the Democratic portion of this Congress will not forget a resolution as to our foreign policy passed at the Cincinnati convention of 1856. I will read it:

"Resolved, That our geographical and political position with reference to the other States of this continent, no less than the interest of our commerce and the development of our growing power, requires that we should hold as sacred the principles involved in the Monroe doctrine; their bearing and import admit of no misconstruction; they should be applied with unbending rigidity."

The arrogant assumption of a British Ministry, claiming the right of intervention as to the "distribution of power" in the American seas, thrown so flauntingly in our faces, stands unrevoked; and the time may not be far distant, and I care not how soon, when an issue shall be made up and tried between the principle alluded to and those embraced in the Monroe doctrine.

By the setting up of a king, or the creation of a dictatorship in Mexico under the auspices of Spain, and possibly her allies, these principles would cease to be mere abstractions, but would be replete with practical results; ay, sir, great, glorious results, by which a flag, bearing the lions and castles of Castile—proud insignia of royalty and monarchy—would be forever banished from her possessions in this hemisphere.

If the startling report be true that Spain is taking measures to Africanize Cuba, or if at any future period such should be the case, I feel confident that the Executive of this country, sustained by its people, would remember the proud language of the Ostend manifesto; and then, sir, Cuba must be ours, no matter at what cost, no matter at what sacrifice of blood and treasure. And the Queen of the Antilles, gracefully displacing her diadem, and with her brows entwined with a floral wreath of her own gorgeous clime, would take her position among her sisters of this Confederacy.

So far as the Americanization of the isthmus under the auspices of a northern emigration society is to be attempted, whilst I doubt its feasibility, I am, as a southern gentleman, indifferent as to its results. As I understand the scheme, it will prove a grand monopoly of the North at the expense of the South; for no southern emigrants will receive the requisite passports at New York to enable them to settle in Nicaragua. If the objects contemplated by this association are to develop the resources of that country, diffuse knowledge and the light of a refined civilization among its people, with incidental benefits to the persons composing it, well and good; but if otherwise; if naught but the merest speculation, coupled with some undefined but yet certain ultimate intent of obtaining possession and subverting the Government, whenever their numbers and strength will authorize it, then all I can say is, their morality would be such as was inculcated by Dame Lobkins to Paul Clifford: "If you want what is not your own, try and do without it; if you cannot do without it, take it by insinuation, not bluster. They as swindles does more and risks less than they as robs."

As to the territorial expansion of this country, it is inevitably and must be southward; faster, perhaps, than we wish. You might as well endeavor to prevent the expansion of steam or powder in a state of ignition; but I wish the process fair, and the acquisition gradual. If the people of those countries between the Rio del Norte and the Sierra Madre, irritated to frenzy by constant wars and revolutions, and the perpetual victims of the tyranny of a central power, should achieve their independence and form de facto Governments; then, if they should invoke admission into our Union, I say let them come in. Justice and humanity, and the regeneration of a portion of our race would demand this; and let them partake of the benefits of our laws and institutions, our freedom and independence. But if perchance a portion of this Union, guided by a narrow policy and false philanthropy, should oppose such an accession, from hostility to southern interests, a war of opinion may be engendered, and utterance given to it in tones loud and clear as a bugle call; and then, Mr. Chairman, hush who can its irksome echoes!

FIFTEEN MILLION LOAN BILL.

SPEECH OF HON. S. G. ANDREWS,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. ANDREWS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: In the memorable presidential campaign of 1856, the supporters of Mr. Buchanan, and that distinguished gentleman himself, made professions of their political creed from thousands of rostrums and presses in all parts of the Union. The two leading articles in that creed were these: first, that Kansas should be brought into the Union under such a constitution as its bona fide citizens might, by their unbiased choice, adopt; and, second, that the Federal Government should be administered economically, and without imposing unnecessary burdens upon the people.

In regard to the manner in which the Administration has illustrated the first article of its creed, I have only to say that it employed the first five months of the present session of Congress in using all its power and patronage to force upon Kansas a constitution which the vast majority of its citizens detest and abhor. On this subject I am content to leave the Administration to reap the fruits of its own doings at the ballot-boxes in Kansas, so soon as they are opened to receive the indignant votes of that people, in August next, and to the more terrible retribution which is in store for it, at the autumnal elections in all the free States of the Republic.

My present business is with the mode in which the Administration has fulfilled its promises, made in the heat of the canvass of 1856, in respect to retrenchment and economy. In doing so, I shall speak plainly, dealing much more with the nine digits than with figures of speech.

When Mr. Buchanan took the oath of office, on the 4th of March, 1857, there was in the Treasury the sum of $17,710,000, or, in round numbers, $18,000,000. There have been collected from all sources, and placed in the Treasury during the first three quarters of the fiscal year which is soon to expire, $35,000,000. The estimated amount to be received during the last quarter is $8,000,000. At an early day in the present session, the Administration asked for and received the authority to issue Treasury notes to the amount of $20,000,000, and it is now asking for authority to borrow $15,000,000 more. This is proof that, at the close of the fiscal year, the Treasury will be empty. The current fiscal year expires on the 30th of June. At that time Mr. Buchanan will have been in power one year and four months. From the foregoing statements it will be seen that, during these sixteen months, this "economical" Administration will have spent the $18,000,000 which it found in the Treasury when it took office, and the $43,000,000 which have since been received into the Treasury, and pretty much all the $20,000,000 of Treasury notes which it has had authority to issue; making a grand total of $81,000,000 which this "economical," "hard money," "pay-as-you-go" Administration has used up in the first sixteen months of its existence! And now, like Oliver Twist, it clamors for "more!" The famous "South Sea bubble" of the olden time was no match for this Administration in regard to pletoric promises and lean performances.

Thus stands the account:

In the Treasury.....	$17,710,000
Revenue for three quarters.....	35,000,000
Present quarter.....	8,000,000
Treasury notes issued.....	20,000,000
Loan asked.....	15,000,000

$95,710,000

It came into power by virtue of pledges of economy, retrenchment, and opposition to all schemes of public debt. Once clothed with the robes of office, and with the key of the Treasury in its hand, it has, like a reckless spendthrift, disposed of all the money it can get hold of, and all that it can beg or borrow, until it has become a serious question, which every member of this House should ask himself, "where is all this to end?"

It is startling to look at the increase in the expenditures of the Government, and the contrast between "economical Democracy" and the party charged with profusion and wasteful disbursement:

Monroe's Administration (four years).....	$16,432,382 75
Adams's ".....	51,671,933 99
Jackson's " (second term).....	104,051,735 81
Van Buren's ".....	110,673,427 81
Harrison's ".....	78,163,312 81
Polk's ".....	165,481,013 33
Taylor's " first year, $39,727,261 92;
(Fillmore) second year, $39,623,755.....	158,161,528 71
Pierce's Administration.....	232,620,622 35

Buchanan's Administration, first year, spent $81,000,000; and at that rate will run up to over three hundred and twenty million dollars. "Where is this to end?"

The loan of $15,000,000, which the Administration is now asking, will undoubtedly be granted.

Now, is there any man, either in or out of Congress, who does not believe that at an early day of the next session the cry of the party in power will be, "Give us more money! we want more money! the Treasury is empty, and we must have more money?"

The economical people of this country—those who keep an eye to the debit and credit sides of their ledgers, or those who earn their daily bread by honest toil—these are not a niggardly people in money matters. They are honest, and they are loyal and generous. If it be necessary to raise and spend money for any wise or useful purpose, they are ready to vote it to the extent of the demand; but they always want to know, and sooner or later they always will know, for what purpose it is used. When the great body of the intelligent and honest masses of the American people—that vast majority of our constituents who neither seek nor desire nor would hold office—when they learn that this Administration has exhausted all the money in the Treasury, and has borrowed $35,000,000 during the first session of Congress to which it had access, they will ask, in emphatic tones, "What have you done, and what do you propose to do, with this money?"

If this question is honestly answered, they will learn that not one dollar of this vast sum has been or is to be expended in improving our harbors on the lakes and on the sea-board, or to clear out our navigable rivers; that though the commerce on our inland lakes and rivers amounts annually to hundreds of millions of dollars—an amount greater than the whole export trade of the United States; and though the human beings, passengers and sailors, whose lives are put to hazard on these waters, are counted by hundreds of thousands, yet not one dime can be wrung from this Administration to render the harbors of these lakes and the channels of these rivers more commodious and safe for this mercantile marine and its costly and precious freightage of goods, wares, and merchandise, and its still more precious lives of men, women, and children. We need no forts or castles, sir, to protect our harbors; the negligence and inattention of Congress have furnished their security against enemies and friends alike, in their dilapidation and ruin.

I instance one of our lake harbors—rather an extreme case, but a tolerably fair sample of many others. For this one, the War Department has recommended and urged upon this House an immediate appropriation of $41,000, to secure it from total ruin. The report says:

"The east pier, two thousand and thirty-four feet long, was reported by Colonel Turnbull, as long ago as September, 1853, to be in a much degraded condition, and an appropriation of $21,530 was recommended by him for its repair, but it was never granted. It must now be entirely rebuilt from two feet below the water level to five feet above. There are also portions that are dilapidated to a great depth below the water surface, and, as Colonel Turnbull justly states in his last two annual reports, 'in moderate gales of wind it is entirely submerged, which renders the approach of vessels to the entrance of the river very dangerous.'

"For this object, including the tearing away and removal of the decayed portion, I herewith present an estimate marked P, amounting to $41,084 34.

"I would recommend, in order to prevent the ruin of the harbor, that this appropriation be immediately granted in one appropriation."

The city of Rochester, of which this harbor of Genesee is the port—a city of fifty thousand inhabitants, surrounded by one of the most fertile and productive regions of country the sun shines upon—according to reports of the Treasury Department, has paid into the Treasury for the past year the net income of $142,579 50—an amount exceeded by only nine ports on the whole Atlantic coast, and only by Chicago and Milwaukee on the lakes; of this sum less than one third is required and reported indispensable for necessary repairs of this best harbor, and the only one of value to commerce for safety on eighty miles of lake coast. On the submerged pier referred to, lying like sunken rocks at the mouth of the harbor, some five or six vessels have been stranded during the past year—one vessel, cargo and crew lost; and this barrier, which the Government has placed there, it will neither repair nor remove.

Not one dollar can be obtained, either in the form of ready money or credit, for the construction of a Pacific railway, that iron band, stronger than any provision of the Constitution, which is to bind together, in indissoluble fellowship, the States on the oriental and the occidental sides of the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada. Though all branches of the business and all descriptions of the labor of the country—agricultural, mechanical, manufacturing, and commercial—are depressed, sorely depressed, yet this Administration seems only busy in finding out how and where it can get money to spend, while it seems to have no sympathy with, nor plans to relieve, these prostrate and struggling branches of industry. Indeed, it appears to me that the bold, palpable fact, that the party in power proposes to do nothing for them, will startle the country quite as much as its reckless expenditure of all the moneys in the Treasury, together with all it can borrow. In so doing, it not only shows its utter want of regard for the business and laboring classes of the country, but it strikingly illustrates its wide departure from the old landmarks of "Democracy." If any one partisan idea has been ridden harder than another in late years, by the self-styled Democracy, it is their "anti-debt" hobby. With them, to run in debt at all was not to be tolerated, except under the pressure of inexorable necessity, a dernier resort when all other expedients had failed. And to contract a debt without at the same time providing, either presently or in the future, a specific mode and reliable means for the payment of the debt, was not only bad political economy, but was the very rankest type and the very surest test of "old Federalism."

And now, what do we see? We find this "anti-debt" party, this "pay-as-you-go" party, asking for an extraordinary issue of $20,000,000 of Treasury notes, and an extraordinary loan of $15,000,000, without providing any means for the redemption of the former, or the payment of the latter, except the ordinary income of the Treasury, which we all know is not adequate to meet the current expenditures of the Government as at present managed. I find in this state of things, a confession, not only that the party now in power has ceased to be "Democratic," according to the long-approved standards of orthodoxy, but has become so thoroughly convinced of its incapacity to administer the Government on any sound principles, that it has made up its mind to struggle through its four years in the best way it can, borrowing here, and "shinning" there, and throwing out its notes yonder, and to leave to its present opponents the task of providing the means, during the next four years, for the ultimate payment of the debts which it had recklessly contracted.

This brings me naturally to the consideration of the question, how are these debts to be paid? How is the country to be relieved from its embarrassment? How are its great business interests—agriculture, manufactures, mechanic arts, commerce, in a word, all the industrial pursuits which diversify American labor, and which are now so depressed—how are these to be relieved?

In my judgment, these objects can never be accomplished except by such a revision of the present tariff as will bring into the Treasury a larger amount of money; while at the same time protection is extended to all the various branches of industry. For the last few years we have been importing from foreign countries goods, wares, and merchandise, to the amount of from three hundred to three hundred and seventy million dollars annually. In the last fiscal year, the value of our imports was $360,890,141. Of this amount of manufactures, (for they were chiefly manufactured articles,) I doubt not that if the tariff of 1842 had continued in force to this time, with such modifications as experience had shown to be wise, a very considerable share would have been produced in this country.

I am not going into an argument at this time to prove the utility of a tariff policy which shall harmoniously blend the two features of revenue and protection. I think bitter experience is teaching the people that a return to such a policy, or, if it be contended that we have never had a tariff which properly blended these two features, then, that the early adoption of such a policy is absolutely essential to restore and place on a permanent basis the prosperity of all classes in this country.

Of the $360,000,000 of manufactured goods which we imported last year, it is a libel on American skill and capital to say, that under the fostering care of a wisely-adjusted tariff, we cannot

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Hunter.

SENATE.

manufacture at least $250,000,000. Look at some of the leading items. I shall use only round numbers:

Of woolen goods we imported last year	$29,000,000
Cotton	28,700,000
Silk	30,850,000
Iron and steel	26,300,000
Carpets	2,000,000
Linen	12,000,000
Embroideries	4,500,000
Laces	1,500,000

Of these eight different classes of articles, amounting to nearly one hundred and forty million dollars in the last fiscal year, we could, with proper encouragement, manufacture nearly or quite the whole. We have the requisite capital; we have the necessary raw materials, or can produce them on due notice; we have the essential machinery, or the genius to invent it, or the capacity to copy it from foreign models. We have the needed manufacturing skill, in the heads and hands of our people, native-born or imported; indeed, our country teems with foreign mechanics and artisans, anxiously waiting to be employed in their accustomed trades. We have water-power in greater abundance than any nation on earth, and we can create steam-power to an incalculable extent. All we want, then, to manufacture these one hundred and forty millions annually here at home, is to convince the people that their manufacturing establishments had better be set up and carried on in Massachusetts, New York, Wisconsin, Virginia, Tennessee, and Missouri, and their sister States, than in England, Scotland, France, Belgium, Germany, and Russia, and other European countries.

Numerous other articles of manufactured goods fall under the same category with those already named. We import annually of copper manufactures about three millions; of tin manufactures, about six millions; of lead and zinc manufactures, more than three millions; of gold and silver manufactures, including watches, about six millions; of glass and earthen manufactures, nearly six millions; of paper manufactures, about one million; of leather and leather manufactures, nearly five millions. Thus it seems that, of these ten kinds of fabrics, we annually import from abroad some thirty million dollars. Does any one doubt that, with proper encouragement to our own capital and skill, we could manufacture on our own soil nearly the whole range of articles embraced in this list?

Turning, for a moment, to inquire in respect to some other articles which we largely import, I find that—

Of molasses, we import annually	$8,000,000
Of sugars	43,000,000
Of wines	4,400,000
Of spirits	5,000,000
Of tobacco and cigars	5,600,000

Here we have a sum total of $66,000,000 in these five articles—articles good, bad and indifferent in their quality, which we annually import from abroad. Perhaps it would be impossible, or, if possible, unwise to attempt to produce the whole of this amount at home. I will not dwell upon these items, as they lie rather "out of my line." They must be looked after by those having them specially under their eye.

I might enumerate other classes of goods; but there is not time now, nor am I endeavoring to make a tariff speech, but only trying in a summary way to show, that of the $350,000,000 more or less, which we have been annually importing from abroad for several years past, at least $250,000,000 can and ought to be manufactured at home. Nor have I time to show by elaborate argument, that a tariff policy which would enable us to do this, would not, as has been sometimes supposed by superficial thinkers, be beneficial only to the manufacturer, and be fostering one kind of business at the expense of other kinds.

A system that would impel American capital, skill, and labor, to manufacture these $250,000,000 annually, on our own soil, and, in due time to manufacture another $250,000,000 annually to be exported to other countries, would directly benefit not only the manufacturers, the mechanics, and the artisans, and the laborers of all sorts who produced these various fabrics, but would equally benefit all other classes of business men in the country: as, for example, the sheep-grower, the planter, and the miner, who furnished the wool and the cotton, the iron and the coal, consumed in these manufacturing establishments; and the farmer who provided the meat and the breadstuffs, and the gardener who raised the vegetables and the fruits on which the mechanics and artisans daily fed, and the merchant with whom they did their trading, and the banker who furnished the monetary facilities to the capitalists who had embarked their means in manufacturing, and the ship-owner and the mariner who were employed in transporting the fabrics to distant nations of the earth.

In a word, if it be beneficial to a people, and tends to promote their independence, that they raise their own daily food out of their own soil, it must be equally beneficial to them, and tend also to promote their independence, that they produce at home the woolen and cotton fabrics with which they cover their backs, the hats they wear on their heads, the shoes they put on their feet, the carpets that adorn their floors, the watches that tell them when to lie down and when to rise up, the linen on which they rest at night, the blankets that cover them while they slumber, the knives and the forks with which they eat their daily food, the goblets in which they drink the health of their friends, the leaden bullets and the steel blades with which they take the lives of their enemies, the iron rails on which their locomotives dash through their valleys and over their plains, the anchors and the cables that hold their ships, while riding out the storms of the arctic and the hurricanes of the tropics, and, in a word, the gorgeous silks with which they adorn the wives whom they love so well, and the very bunting of the star-spangled banner, that they will defend with their latest breath! A wise people, a free people, will never rely upon the capital and skill of alien nations for the necessities and luxuries of life, the essentials of existence and comfort, and the very emblems of their power and their independence.

Now, sir, only about two million dollars are required for the purpose of preserving and securing the harbors of the country, and rendering them accessible to our commerce. This is a sum no greater than has been voted to this District of Columbia for unimportant objects—less by $1,000,000 than was voted to-day for three useless regiments of volunteers. I will cheerfully vote for such a loan as shall secure this object; but I cannot give my support for any loan bill, (except it be for the defense of the country,) unless provision be made for this imperatively necessary purpose of preserving and repairing our dilapidated harbors.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

DEBATE IN THE SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 27, 1858.

On motion of Mr. SEWARD, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 343) making appropriations for repairing the piers at the harbor of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, which proposes to appropriate $5,000 for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PUGH] yesterday offered an amendment to this bill, adding to it all the other harbor bills. Shall the amendment be read?

Mr. HUNTER. I want it read.

Mr. PUGH. It is not necessary to read it. I will state that I have not put on, as the Chair remarks, all these appropriations; but I have put on all those which the Committee on Commerce reported for the repair and preservation of works already commenced, together with the appropriations for contingencies, and for preserving the steam dredges that have already been constructed.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, for repairing the works at the harbor of St. Joseph, Michigan, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,588, for repairing the works at the harbor of Monroe, Michigan, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $23,421 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for deepening and widening the channel through the St. Clair flats, Michigan, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,143 15, for securing and repairing the works at the harbor of Cleveland, Ohio, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $30,000, for repairs upon the works at Huron harbor, Ohio, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,940 96, for repairs upon the works at Black River harbor, Ohio, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,679 55, for repairs upon the works at Grand River harbor, Ohio, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,620, for repairing the works at the harbor of Ashtabula, Ohio, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,020, for repairing the works at the harbor of Conneaut, Ohio, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,638, for the immediate repair of the piers at Erie harbor, Pennsylvania, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,399 96, for the immediate repair of Dunkirk harbor works, New York, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $27,679 35, for repairing the public works at Buffalo harbor, New York, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,736 65, for repairing the piers of Oak Orchard harbor, New York, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $41,084 34, for repairing the public works at Genesee harbor, New York, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,806, for repairing the piers at Solus Bay harbor, Wayne county, New York, and for dredging between the channel piers, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $46,391 14, for immediate repairs required for the preservation of Oswego harbor, New York, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,186 40, for repairs of the piers at Burlington, Vermont, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, for completing the improvements in the raft region of Red river, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, for the preservation of steam dredges and appurtenances, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 for unforeseen contingencies of lake harbors, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. HUNTER. I submit the following additional section as an amendment to the amendment:

And be it further enacted, That for the purposes of this act and to execute all improvements of harbors or rivers for which appropriations may be made by law during the present session of Congress, the President shall be authorized to borrow so much money as may be made necessary by these appropriations, on the credit of the United States, at an interest not exceeding six per cent., for a term of not more than ten years, the said money to be borrowed under the same limitations and restrictions and in the same manner as prescribed by the act entitled "An act to authorize a loan not to exceed the sum of sixteen millions of dollars," approved March 3, 1848.

Mr. President, I understand we are about to vote for a large appropriation, amounting, as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce informs me, to nearly six hundred thousand dollars, for objects for which we have no estimates from the Departments. We are about to make this addition to the estimates of the next fiscal year, which has not been asked for by the Executive, and it seems to me that those who are thus voting are bound at least to supply the means by way of giving him authority to make such a loan as may be necessary for that purpose.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Hunter.

SENATE.

I know that yesterday and the day before, when the loan bill was up, many Senators opposed that bill upon certain grounds which would apply to this proposition when it is presented to the Senate; but they were so obviously untenable that I think I shall be able to show that there is no obstacle in the objections which were then presented that should prevent them from now providing the means for this appropriation, which they are about to add to the annual estimates of the Departments.

I know, sir, that they objected to that loan bill, which was indispensable to carry on this Government, which was indispensable for the support of your Army and your Navy, upon the ground that we would not agree to introduce amendments upon it which were designed to alter the existing mode of calculating the ad valorem duties, which amendments, as was shown upon that occasion, would have added largely to the revenues to be derived from this mode of taxation. I know, too, that they objected to a loan in addition to this, because they said that, in this time of deficiency, we were bound so to add to the tariff as to provide the Government with the means and with the revenues to meet the expenditures. I think it will be easy to show that the objection which they raised to the fact that we provided for a loan, and would not agree to provide any means of altering the old mode of calculating the ad valorem system, is not founded on reason, because it is the system on which we have been acting ever since 1793. From that day to this, as I am informed at the Treasury Department, it has been the unbroken usage so to construe the law, in relation to costs and charges, as to impose the duty on the costs and charges at the port from which the article is shipped—the port from which it is imported. I know that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Simmons] said this was a false construction of the law, and that he had set up, in a report which he presented to this body, his opinion that all the Departments and all these authorities have been wrong in regard to this matter, I might almost say ab urbe condita. But, sir, against that opinion of his, that this is a false construction of the law, I set up the unbroken usage of the Department, the unbroken construction of all the Secretaries of the Treasury, and all the collectors, from that day to this. I set up the legislative exposition in 1823, when, in amending the oath which the consignee was to take, Congress required that he should swear that the invoice contained these costs and charges, which of course must have been the foreign costs and charges, for the invoice was made out at the port from which the importations were shipped. I stand on the exposition which has been given by the Federal courts, the courts of the land, on a case made in relation to this very matter. Judge Nelson decided, in the case of Grinnell vs. Lawrence, (Blatchford's Circuit Court Reports, vol. 1, page 349,) that—

"In each case costs and charges are to be added, as prescribed in the enacting clause; and the costs and charges in this case are those which have been incurred at the port of shipment."

Now sir, I say upon all this, it has been the construction of the law made by all Secretaries of the Treasury and concurred in by the country and sustained by the highest tribunals in the land, that the mode in which we are now estimating the duty is the mode which the law requires and the history of the Department shows that it has been the unbroken usage, from 1795 to this time, so to assess and to lay the duties; and because we will not depart from that usage, now more than sixty years old, gentlemen say they will not vote for a loan to satisfy the wants of the Government. Why was not that objection made heretofore? It might as well have been made to any loan that ever was made. Surely it can with as much propriety be made to the appropriation bills as to the loan bill, because if you will not vote the means of satisfying the appropriations surely you ought not to vote for the appropriations themselves. And yet, gentlemen raise an outcry and a clamor about the frauds of this system which has been sanctified by an experience so long, and rather seek to cast reproach upon us because we do not, in the face of the Constitution, which forbids us to originate revenue bills, attempt to depart from that time-honored system which has been justified by experience itself.

Now, sir, if these frauds exist, why do not the gentlemen show them? We are not to rest upon loose assertion; we are not to rest upon the clamors of persons who are often interested in getting them up. If these frauds existed to the extent that is alleged, they ought to be shown in the reports of our courts; they ought to be shown in the records of the Treasury Department; they ought to be facts that are patent. Some of the investigating committees, which have been originated for that purpose, ought to have shown them. Such committees have been originated, and they have resulted in nothing. On the contrary, you find that the late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Guthrie—I quote from memory—in his letter on home valuation, says that the present mode of laying the duties has not resulted, as far as he knows, in many cases of fraud. We know, too, that the highest inducements are held out to the public officers to detect frauds, if they exist, because they are given a part of the fines, the penalties, and the forfeitures; and if, with such stimulants and such inducements as these, none have been detected and exposed, with what face can gentlemen rise here, and assert and expect us to believe, and act upon the belief, that these frauds exist to the extent alleged? Why, sir, they attempt to eke out the absence of positive testimony by circumstantial evidence; and what sort of circumstantial evidence? The Senator from Rhode Island, in order to show it, says that we have been cheated during the whole period of the existence of the tariff of 1846 by undervaluation, because the importations did not yield what they ought to have done in the way of duty; and how does he propose to estimate what they ought to have yielded?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say that. I do not know but that it will hurt the gentleman's argument to have me correct him.

Mr. HUNTER. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to say, that because they did not yield what the importations that were brought in ought to have yielded, in his opinion, the Government must have been cheated by undervaluation.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, sir; I did not say any such thing. Those facts were not stated by me to show the frauds. I stated that there might be circumstances to induce more importations in one year than the average; that they would vary from year to year. I did not rely on that as an evidence of fraud; but I alluded to the report of Mr. Guthrie, who said a great many fabrics had their names changed so as to get them in under lower schedules.

Mr. HUNTER. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to assume that the true mode of estimating the revenue to be derived on imports was by averaging the duties; that is, by adding up the different schedules and dividing them by the number of duties. Am I wrong in that?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the way to find the average rate of duty.

Mr. HUNTER. It is by that average rate of duty we are to estimate, in his opinion, what we are to receive from the tariff; because he said under the present tariff, estimating in that way, it would be but sixteen per cent., and it would require $400,000,000 of imports to give $64,000,000 of revenue. Am I right in that?

Mr. SIMMONS. I say so.

Mr. HUNTER. Then it comes to what I said, that the Senator from Rhode Island in his argument estimates the revenue that ought to be derived from the customs to be that average rate which we get by adding together all the duties in the schedules, and dividing them by the number of schedules. He takes, for instance, the tariff of 1846 with duties of one hundred, forty, thirty, twenty per cent., and so on; adds them up and divides the sum by the number of schedules, and he maintains that the imports ought to yield duty in that ratio.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say that. I stated that the rates of duty were not a matter dependent on the class of imports, but were fixed in the law and did not change. That was not a matter of conjecture at all. What they would yield was another matter, dependent on the different quantities of imports under the different schedules.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I pass over that, if I misunderstood the Senator, and I am glad I have, for it really seems to me to be a most extraordinary calculation in one who generally cyphers so well, to suppose that we were to estimate the probable revenue to be derived by putting an average thus ascertained upon the dutiable imports. If he abandons that ground, I have nothing more to say on it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know how I can abandon a ground I never took.

Mr. HUNTER. I am glad I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SIMMONS. It seems to be very difficult for the gentleman to understand me. When I say I did not take the ground he says, he then turns round and declares that I have abandoned it.

Mr. HUNTER. I take the Senator's word; I do not insist that he took the ground if he says he did not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, that is not abandoning it, is it?

Mr. HUNTER. There was another branch of the Senator's circumstantial evidence which was adduced in order to show that we must have been cheated in the way of undervaluation on the importations. My friend from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] also fell into an error on that subject. He seemed to suppose that because, for a certain period of three years, the imports, as valued in the port of shipment—that is, abroad—were greater than the exports as valued in the port of shipment—that is, here—we were cheated out of the difference, not only between this value of the exports and imports, but out of all the profit added to the exports when they went abroad. I told him upon that occasion what he will allow me to repeat, that the true equation was between the market value of the exports where they were sent and the market value of the imports where they were brought; and that, in order to show that we were cheated, he would have to prove that the imports were of less value rated at the market price where they were bought, than the exports rated at the market price where they were sold; and when we come to institute that equation, we shall find that there may very well be a state of the tariff in which the imports reckoned at the place of shipment would be of less value than the exports which are always reckoned at the place of shipment. Take the case that he desires to export his cotton in order to get iron for one of his railroads. His cotton goes to Liverpool free of duty; the duty does not enter into the market price there. It returns in the shape of iron which, under the tariff of 1846, bore a duty of thirty per cent., which did enter into the price there. In order to obtain equal values at the market price, you had to import a less value of imports at the place of shipment than the value of the exports at the port from which they went. In other words, his statistics are only an illustration of the old "forty bale" theory, which was sustained by a distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. McDuffie, and by Professor Senior, of Oxford, a theory to which I do not subscribe in the whole, but which is undoubtedly correct, in part; for there are conditions of trade in which the exporter does pay a portion of the duty.

But, sir, even as I said on that occasion, if the Senator from Georgia had succeeded in showing, when you came to institute the true equation, that the imports reckoned at the market value where they were bought, were less than the exports at the market value where they were sent, it would not do to say that the whole of that difference was attributable to undervaluation, because it would be far more reasonable to attribute them to smuggling, to which there were so many more inducements, for which there were so many more opportunities, than to the undervaluation. Against that, we have checks of all sorts and descriptions. We have a check in the skill of experienced men who look to see whether the invoice states the true price of the article, who have the power to put it up if they find it too low. We have, too, the stimulus which is given to the custom-house officers by allowing them a portion of the fines, penalties, and forfeitures, in cases of frauds; and with all these safeguards in a system which has been maturing since 1795, it is reasonable to suppose that frauds, unless the Government should have been most unfortunate in its selection of appraisers, could hardly be so numerous as gentlemen here charge and suppose. On the other hand, the facilities for smuggling, especially since the reciprocity treaty, are very great; and I have no doubt that if the truth could be known, there is a great deal of smuggling into this country.

I say, then, that the objection which those gentlemen raise to voting for a loan bill because we would not agree to adopt the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, in regard to a change of the mode of executing our ad valorem system, is not a valid objection, because they have failed to prove the frauds alleged, either by direct evidence or circumstantial proof; and against them they will find the authority of those who have been administering the Department.

But, sir, I go further; I say that all those who voted for that amendment are forever estopped from saying anything in regard to the frauds of the present ad valorem system. Why, sir, what does that amendment propose? The duties are to be assessed on the market price or value, "to include the foreign cost, all charges, duties, and profits, or so much thereof as may enter into and become a part of such wholesale market price or value," so that under this, the appraisers would have not only all the opportunities for mistake, there would exist not only all the temptations for fraud that now exist when they have only to ascertain the foreign value, but they would have in addition, the temptations which would arise out of the opportunities for deceit, and for mistake to be given by ascertaining the charges, the duties, the freights, and the profits. Nor is this all, sir. An appraiser at New Orleans and at San Francisco was to appraise a yard of cloth by undertaking to ascertain what it would be worth at New York. It would take a skillful appraiser at New York to fix the true market value on it, if he had it in his possession, and could see it and feel it. How would it be possible for appraisers at the distant ports, and especially at the small ports, to execute any such law?

I say, then, that those who vote for this, stand committed to all the frauds of the present system, and to more besides; and that they have, therefore, no right to object to voting for a loan bill, for the simple fact that we did not impose upon it such a scheme as this; that we did not propose to add upon it such a scheme as this.

In addition to that, sir, we were justified in refusing it on the point which I raised, and which was treated as a mere technical objection, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island did raise the taxes upon the country most materially; that it did originate a revenue measure here. Why, sir, upon the twenty-four per cent. schedule it made the tax higher, far higher than it was under the tariff of 1846; and the thirty per cent. schedule it raised to over forty per cent.; and yet when I referred to the provision of the Constitution which we have all sworn to support, it was said I was raising a technical objection; and I understood my friend from Tennessee [Mr. BELL] rather to administer rebuke to me as being somewhat beneath the gravity and importance of the occasion in raising such an objection. Sir, it has been said by an eminent man that the day would come when any one would be called to order who quoted the Constitution of the United States in the Congress of the United States; but I never expected to see the day when a constitutional objection raised upon the plain reading of the Constitution itself would be treated as a mere technical and trifling objection.

But I pass over that, I put it out of the way, for we took the vote, not on the point of order, but on the merits of the amendment. I come, however, to the other point, which gentlemen raised, that they would not vote loans unless we did something to increase the revenue; that it was manifest the revenue was below what was now estimated to be expended—that is, seventy-four or eighty million dollars a year, which they maintained and asserted was an extravagant estimate. Now, sir, I ask if it would have been possible, on our imports, to have laid any tariff, any system of duties, which could have been executed, that would have raised money enough to have met an estimate of seventy-four or seventy-six million dollars this year? Could we have done it? I go further; if we could have done it, would it be proper to lay a tariff, which, in a period of such severe pressure and crisis as that we have just passed through, would have given us enough not only for the ordinary, but the extraordinary expenditures of the country? or, if it would have given us enough at such a period as that, in average times and in usual years, it would have filled our Treasury with a surplus; and we all know to what extravagance and profligacy a surplus revenue would lead.

I say it is not desirable that there should be such a system of revenue raised as would give enough, in time of pressure, to meet even the ordinary wants of the Government; and, if this be true, then the only question left for statesmen to consider is, whether the existing sources of revenue would be sufficient for the just demands of the Government economically administered; and, if they would be sufficient, then leave your revenue where it stands, and provide by way of loan for the temporary deficiency, under the just expectation that when that period passes away, and commerce fills its usual channels, we shall have, out of the existing sources, enough for the just wants of the Government. I say that that is the true plan for the statesman to pursue, and that is the plan which the Secretary of the Treasury recommends. So far from disapproving of that, I honor and commend him for it. What sort of system would that be, which would alter the tariff so as to raise revenue enough in such a period as this, if it could be done, for such an expenditure as seventy-four or eighty million dollars a year?

But gentlemen cannot pursue both lines of attack. If they say seventy-four or eighty million dollars are extravagant estimates of expenditure, surely they ought not to be willing to raise revenue enough to meet them; but if they are willing to raise revenue enough to meet such an expenditure, they ought not to say that seventy-four or eighty million dollars are extravagant, for as certain as you raise the revenue, we know from experience, it will be expended.

The sole question, then, for us to consider, was: is there likely to be enough, out of the existing sources of revenue, to meet the economical wants of the Government? I say, yes; enough to meet those wants if they do not exceed $60,000,000, or even $64,000,000 a year; and in order to prove it as nearly as could be done, (for any calculation of this sort is an approximation,) I took the dutiable imports for the year closing in July, 1857, the last fiscal year; I ascertained, by a calculation made at the Treasury Department, what rate of duty the tariff of 1857 had actually given on the dutiable imports; I imposed that rate of duty on the dutiable imports of 1857, and found that would give us something like fifty-one million dollars. I referred, then, to the experience of the tariff of 1846, and found that the imports and exports, and revenue, under that, increased something like ten per cent. per annum; and said that if we had a right to anticipate the same increase after the revival of trade, the present tariff would soon give us sixty million dollars or more. Would not that be enough, with the public lands, to meet all the just wants of the Government? If so, would it not be worse than useless, would it not be a wrong and an extravagance to avail ourselves of the present condition of things in order to force up the revenue to a higher standard, which, in periods of prosperity, would fill the Treasury to overflowing? Upon that, I am willing to go before the country. Upon that issue, I am willing to meet those gentlemen who insist that we are bound, rather than ask for a loan to meet this temporary deficiency, to impose a permanent addition on the taxation of the country.

But there was another argument which they addressed to us, which would have been an argument addressed to our feeling if it had been true; but, in my opinion, it was as unfounded as the others; and that was the appeal ad misericordiam. That was the appeal to do something for the labor of the country on the idea that we ought to raise the tariff in order to protect the operatives who were suffering. I say, in answer to that, that I do not think it fair to tax all other laborers in order to promote and to support another class. I do not think it fair to impose a system of taxation which, like the protective system, makes the consumer, for every dollar he pays to the Government, pay one, two, three, or four other dollars to private individuals, in the shape of an enhanced price, on the domestic manufacture which he is thus forced to consume. I say it is not fair to the sailor, it is not fair to the man of commerce, it is not fair to the agricultural laborer, thus to tax them for the benefit of any other pursuit. I go further. I say that if bounties were thus given, it would be found that they did not profit the laborer. Why, sir, the manufacturing laborer, no matter what your tariff is, will get no more than any other skilled laborer in the country. If there be any extra profits produced by it, they go to the capitalists, the owners of the factories, the men who are rich enough already.

But, sir, I will for a moment assume the truth of the argument, though I do not assent to it, that as regards protection we ought to disregard all other interests, and look only to the manufacturer: I deny, if we look only to his interest, that we ought to resort to a protective system again; and as proof of it, I plant myself on the experience of the tariff of 1846. Show me any other period of ten years in the history of this country in which not only all its great interests thrived and prospered so rapidly, but in which the manufacturing interest was developed with such rapidity as it was then. I proved to you the other day, from those statistics, which can neither err nor lie, that the manufacturing exports increased nearly threefold in those ten years, more than they had done at any other period of our financial history; and that is the true test of the prosperity of the manufacturing interest. I showed you the statistics of the manufactures of cotton and of wool in Massachusetts, the great manufacturing State of the Union, and showed you with what unexampled rapidity they had prospered and thrived during that period. And I say that if such are the results of that reduction of duty; if we find so much greater comparative prosperity when we come to compare that period with those of high duties, I am justified in saying that it is neither a charity nor a benefit to the manufacturing laborer to impose upon him again the protective system. I plant myself for that upon those figures; let gentlemen explain away or meet them, if they can. Until they do so, I feel that I am laboring not only for the good of all the other great interests which prospered in sympathy and amity and friendship along with the manufacturing interest during these ten years; and I say that when I adopt a system of low duties, provided it furnishes revenue enough to the country, I am benefiting not only the agriculturist, but the sailor and the man of commerce, but I am benefiting also the manufacturer himself, and that is proved by the history not only of this, but of other countries; and accordingly these great truths which lie at the bottom of all great commercial prosperity are making their way throughout the civilized world. Upon them, sir, I am ready to meet gentlemen at any time or anywhere. If that be the issue which they make, regarding it, as I do, as one of progress, I am willing to stand or fall upon it.

Mr. TOOMBS. My honorable friend from Virginia has called my attention to what he supposes to be a mistake in the argument which I made on the day before yesterday; but I think he has committed one of the most singular and extraordinary mistakes for a gentleman of his financial knowledge I have ever heard in the Senate. I will take the illustration he has given me. I held that if the imports of the country were less than its exports, necessarily allowing for the elements I took into the account, we were doing a losing trade, or the goods were undervalued; that one result or the other absolutely followed. I then showed from the state of the exchanges during the last three years, that our trade was not a losing one, that we had sold the commodities exported for more than we gave for them because there was no balance against us. He gave the illustration of my exporting cotton for the purpose of importing iron. I will take that, and I think I can satisfy my friend in an instant that he is utterly wrong. If a merchant in New Orleans buys a thousand bales of cotton for $50,000, and sends them to Liverpool, if he sells them for $40,000, of course, he has lost $10,000, besides the earnings of freight and insurance. If he brings that $40,000—and many of our imports are in coin as well as in goods—to New York, of course he has sent $50,000 out and brings but $40,000 back, and he has lost $10,000. That must be perfectly clear. The Senator, however, seems to think not, but says he must bring back something to pay the duty. Well, now, instead of bringing back the $40,000 for which he sold the cotton in Liverpool, suppose he lays out the money in British goods at Manchester. If he has only got $40,000 there to buy goods with, and he carried out $50,000, he has lost $10,000, and all the earnings of freight and insurance. There can be no mistake about that. Inasmuch as you take the valuation at Liverpool, I take that test. He sells the cotton for money and puts the money into goods. If he brings back but $40,000 of goods, he does a losing trade. I have shown you it is not a losing trade, but the custom-house exhibiting only $40,000 of import for that export of $50,000, it necessarily follows either that there was undervaluation, or that the trade must have been a losing one. If the merchant laid out the $50,000 in Liverpool in goods he would be even, though he lost insurance and freight and profit; but if he sold his cotton for $60,000, then whether he put it in blankets or hats or cottons, or anything else, the invoices must show $60,000 worth of goods exported from Liverpool to New York.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Toombs.

SENATE.

I say, then, it is an unerring test, that unless the imports do equal the exports, you have either done a losing trade, the commerce of the country has lost, or the goods are undervalued, and there is no escape from it. There were two elements which I stated that might have an effect on the calculation, and I called on the Senator from Virginia to name any others, if he could; but, after forty-eight hours, he has not been able to give another. I said it was subject to these modifications: first, the amount of goods that went abroad to pay for interest on loans; and another element to set off against that was the amount of money borrowed in the three years to carry on our improvements. If as many new bonds were issued as paid the interest on previous loans, that would not appear in the statement of the account, but it would be squared. There is no other element to disturb the calculation, except smuggling, and that I allowed for. I showed that there were $70,000,000 against us, and I allowed $20,000,000 for loss by smuggling. It was a large estimate; I think an excessive one. Then I showed that the undervaluation must amount to at least fifty million dollars a year. Then, if you put the earnings of freight, and insurance, and the profits of business on an exportation of $300,000,000, at twenty per cent., you would have $60,000,000, or an annual excess of exports over imports of $10,000,000 more, making $70,000,000; and if the profits, insurance, and freights were more than twenty per cent. the amount would go up to eighty or perhaps one hundred millions. The more profitable the trade, the greater the amount of undervaluation there must necessarily be. If cotton sold for one hundred per cent. advance; if the $50,000,000 exportation sold for $100,000,000, and the custom-house only showed $40,000,000 of imports in return, there was an undervaluation of $60,000,000; and no figures, no logic of my friend from Virginia, can get around it. He has committed the singular blunder of supposing that you may do a good business, and yet bring in fewer goods in value, buy less goods—and it will be the same, whether you take goods or money, and I will take the case of money. Suppose we export $100,000 in gold, and that we buy with it $90,000 in goods, what becomes of the other $10,000? Much of our export consists in gold—forty or fifty millions. Suppose it had all been gold, and we sent to Liverpool from New York $60,000,000, and brought in $40,000,000 of goods: then it would be absolutely certain that we had lost precisely $20,000,000, unless there was a duty on gold in Liverpool, for the gold did not lose anything in going across the Atlantic ocean. Suppose our whole exportation of $300,000,000 had been in gold, we should have received in return $300,000,000 in goods valued in Liverpool; and if it brought in imports to a less amount than three hundred million dollars, it is clear there was a loss in the trade, and the Senator cannot account for it in any other way on the best settled principles of political economy. An old idea once obtained that a nation which imported more than she exported was getting in debt, and I believe some people who write on these subjects in newspapers now have that singular idea. I say, on the other hand, it is an unailing test of prosperity. If you bring in no more than the avails of what you send out, if it is $100,000,000, it shows $100,000,000 of prosperous trade, but if you go in debt beyond the price of your commodities at the place you sell them, that is another matter. But I say that the basis which I went upon to show undervaluation is correct. The element the Senator has put in to-day does not exist, and he can find no other than the one of smuggling, for which I have made a liberal allowance.

On the other questions which have been raised, I agree with the principles laid down by my honorable friend from Virginia. I was opposed to the loan bill because it was opposed to my principles; and I think it ought to have been opposed to his. At the last session of Congress, when the tariff of 1857 was made, we estimated that, upon the then importations, it would produce but $48,000,000. We calculated to reduce taxes $15,000,000. I voted for it because it did reduce taxes to that extent. I intended, of course, as a corollary to the raising of only $48,000,000, that I would not spend more than forty-eight million dollars, with what should be raised from lands and miscellaneous sources, amounting in all to some fifty-five million dollars. I am not willing to go beyond this, except that I am ready to supply any diminution of the revenue occasioned by extraordinary causes. Such a diminution exists to the extent of $7,000,000. Owing to the commercial revulsion we have this year a revenue of $41,000,000, instead of $48,000,000, which we estimated when we passed that bill. I say that $7,000,000 is a legitimate subject for a loan. I would also borrow for extraordinary expenditures like the Utah war. We have appropriated $9,000,000 for the Utah war, and borrowed the money. There is $7,000,000 deficiency in the revenue, and $9,000,000 for the Utah war to be provided, making $16,000,000; and the Government has already had authority to borrow $20,000,000 by Treasury notes—$4,000,000 more than ought to be wanted.

MR. HUNTER. My friend is not to confine the expenses of the Utah war to the deficiency bill; because, after we have got the whole Army concentrated into Utah valley we have to supply them; and the expenses of transporting and subsisting them will be much greater than it would be if they were differently posted. That causes a great portion of the expenses.

MR. TOOMBS. My principle is that I will provide for extraordinary expenses, though I do not approve the policy, and for extraordinary diminution of the revenue; but it has not been shown, there is no exhibition of the honorable Senator at the head of the Committee on Finance of this body, that the extraordinary expenses and deficiencies amount to $35,000,000; and that is the only true basis of calculation for a loan. If he had shown that the object of the $20,000,000 loan in the early part of the session, and the $15,000,000 now, was to make up a deficiency of the estimated revenue, and to provide for extraordinary expenses, and had shown that $35,000,000 would be needed for these purposes, then the loan bills would be legitimate and proper; but, in my judgment, the chairman of the Committee on Finance has not shown that there is any extraordinary expenditures calling for this loan. I have no idea that the extraordinary expenditures of the Army, now that we have peace in Utah, will go to $15,000,000; or, if they should, I trust there will be wisdom enough in the executive department of this Government to stop it, and turn the Army back. Colonel Steptoe was there with a portion of the Army two or three years ago, on the old estimates. He was offered, by President Pierce, the Governorship of that Territory, and he very wisely declined it. We have had armies there before. It may be expedient to keep some addition to their number, but it will not do to say that because there are increased expenditures we must allow any amount of loan. What are the increased expenditures? I have a right to know them when I am called upon for a loan.

But, sir, I totally dissent from gentlemen on this side of the House. I do not intend to borrow this money, and I mean to reduce the public expenditures. I do not intend to falsify the policy which I adopted with my honorable friend from Virginia fifteen months ago. I believe that the present tariff levies taxes enough, and I do not intend to vote for any more, or to pay any more. I am pursuing my own policy, and I do not intend to be diverted from it by anybody. It is sound policy. I do not intend to spend more than this tariff yields in ordinary circumstances, but I would provide for extraordinary deficiencies or extraordinary disbursements. I will not deviate from that principle until I am satisfied it is wrong; and if it is wrong, the Senator from Virginia ought not to have brought in a loan bill, but a measure for increasing the revenue. If we are not to bring down our expenditures to what the tariff will yield under ordinary circumstances, we ought to raise taxation, because it is unwise and unstatesmanlike to carry your expenditures to $80,000,000 and leave your revenue at $50,000,000, for that policy will compel you to borrow the sum of $30,000,000 a year. I will not do so great violence to all correct and sound principles of governing a great country as to do any such thing. If your ordinary expenditures have gone beyond your estimates for ordinary revenue, you ought to raise your taxes. As I do not intend to do it, as I do not intend that the revenue shall go beyond it, I make my opposition on your appropriation bills, and will leave those gentlemen who vote to carry the ordinary expenses up to eighty or ninety million dollars to raise the money to pay them. I will not do it. I think gentlemen on the other side of the House who go for enlarging the expenditures of the Government are bound to provide for them by taxation or by loans; but that is not their policy.

The amendment of my honorable friend from Virginia is a wise one to this bill—not the wisest, because an increase of taxation in some form would be the wisest, but it is the next wisest. Inasmuch as your estimates upon which you predicated the $15,000,000 loan do not include this amount of $600,000, of course it is but the dictate of common sense and common honesty to raise the money which you appropriate. The revenue will not do it, according to anybody's calculation. The existing loans will not do it. The Administration only estimate what they mean to spend, according to existing laws, and this is not in their estimate. Then, when you appropriate these $600,000, or any other amount, for these objects, statesmanship, patriotism, and duty demand that he who votes to expend the money, ought, in some way, to provide it. The Secretary of the Treasury cannot pay the money merely because you appropriate it; and I cast no censure on him. He finds the appropriations of the past year seventy or eighty million dollars, and the revenue only $41,000,000; and yet gentlemen turn round and reproach him when he has asked loans to pay your appropriations. You tell him to pay, out of $50,000,000, the amount of $80,000,000. You appropriate $80,000,000, and then turn round and say, what a Secretary of the Treasury we have got; he comes to us for two loans in one Congress! Yes, sir; and he will come for another one next week, if you pass some of the bills on the table, that I reckon will get the vote of nearly every gentleman here who is opposed to these loans. They do not carry their opposition to appropriations. I can name a pension bill that has been started in the other House—perhaps it is here by this time—amounting to $11,000,000; I can name the French spoliation bill, involving $5,000,000; I could name three or four other bills, which, if you pass before the adjournment, it will be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, as a statesman and a patriot, to come to you next week for a loan of $20,000,000 more.

Sir, the difficulty lies here in the legislative department. It is folly, it is unmanly, it is unstatesmanlike to say you will carry the expenditure to eighty or ninety or one hundred millions, while you levy no more than fifty million dollars by taxation, and then vote against loan bills. Gentlemen can never bring down expenditures in that way. They can never get the confidence of the country in that way, for they will not deserve it. My opposition to the loan bill was on the principles I have stated. I do not get their cooperation in bringing the expenditures within the revenue. Until I do that, of course I can expect nothing from their irregular or spasmodic efforts at retrenchment and reform; it will never come from that source.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the friends of these measures will vote down the amendment.

Mr. CLAY called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BELL. I cannot agree that this question shall be taken until I have an opportunity of saying a few words in reply to the statements made by my honorable friend from Virginia this morning, with reference, in part, to some remarks that I made yesterday. The honorable Senator urged a singular ground of defense against the charges which came from this side of the Chamber, in regard to the policy pursued by him in borrowing money without making any provision to pay it, or proposing any alteration in our revenue laws or commercial restrictions, to meet the continual wants of the Treasury, likely to run through several years. We have stated the grounds on which we suppose that frauds exist to the extent we have stated. According to the views of the Senator from Georgia, these frauds go to such an extent that the Government has been deprived of the duties upon foreign imports to the amount of $100,000,000 per annum. Take, however, a moderate estimate; assume that on $50,000,000 per annum the Government has, by fraudulent devices, been deprived of the revenues to which it would be entitled under the act of 1846. The honorable Senator from Georgia, with whom the honorable Senator from Rhode Island agrees, believes that the amount is not less than $50,000,000 which is imported into the United States and should pay duty, but does not. The honorable Senator from Virginia thought the charge was made without any foundation. Why, sir, the figures presented by the honorable Senator from Georgia, and the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, show, unanswerably, that at least $50,000 of foreign merchandise have been imported into this country that do not pay the duties they ought to pay under the law. On that point, then, I need make no remark in defense and explanation of the statements I made yesterday, as to the course of the honorable Senator from Virginia upon this subject.

Sir, the Senator from Virginia has referred to investigating committees on this subject. A few years ago we had an investigating committee, of which I was a member, without any desire of my own to be put there. The committee was elected by ballot in the Senate, and at the suggestion of some gentleman, I do not know who, I was placed on the committee. The honorable Senator says there is no proof that undervaluations have taken place to any extent.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not say to any extent; I said to any large extent.

Mr. BELL. But from the general terms used by my honorable friend, it would be inferred that he said there was no proof that any fraud was committed on the revenue from that source.

Mr. HUNTER. I could not have said that, because there are cases in the reports of decisions, showing frauds.

Mr. BELL. Undoubtedly, I presume, the honorable Senator did not mean to say that; but that they amounted to no such magnitude as should attract the attention of Congress or the country, or should lay him liable to the charge of seeking to evade any corrective of these frauds. That was an injustice which I understood my honorable friend to charge on me, with others, and he alluded to me specially, or I should not now say a word. I adduced no proofs yesterday in regard to the probable magnitude of these frauds. The honorable Senator from Virginia does not mean, of course, that we shall have anything like proof judicially taken, such as would be required in a court of justice, to manifest that these frauds have taken place to the extent we allege; but I will tell my honorable friend what I referred to—the opinions of every Secretary of the Treasury ever since the act of 1846 was passed, except, perhaps, the present Secretary, alleging that the lawful revenue of the country, moneys that properly belonged to the Treasury under the law of 1846, had been withheld by various devices and contrivances, to what amount they did not know, but it was manifest to a considerable amount. I founded my opinions further on what I understood was the belief of the late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Guthrie, who stated, that on all the textile fabrics imported into the United States, frauds in some mode or other were committed to such an extent that not more than one half the revenue which ought to have gone into the Treasury on the importations of those articles ever reached the Treasury. When, as a member of the investigating committee to which I have alluded, I was charged with the commission of inquiring into the practice at New Orleans, I will say that I found numerous proofs, and I brought away several of them. I took testimony, the statements of gentlemen of undoubted character, who had been engaged in the foreign trade of the country, importing goods especially from Germany and France and the Island of Cuba, which satisfied my mind that there was a uniformity almost, if I might use the term, in the plans and systems adopted by foreign manufacturers, foreign merchants, and foreign factors, on all the States of the continent—not so much so in England, I admit—to impose upon our custom-house officers by undervaluations. The practice was, as I understood then, with scarcely any variation, that upon the purchase of many fabrics on the continent, especially those in regard to which our officers could be most easily deceived, it was usual, as a matter of routine, to furnish one invoice for the purchaser's own use, and another invoice for the custom-house. Only a few days ago I heard from an authority that I rely upon, this remarkable fact stated, a gentleman who was in Europe, wished to purchase some fine cloths in Belgium, and he bought them and shipped them for this country, and he was furnished with the papers which he supposed were the correct invoices; but when he got home he found a double invoice, and he was expected by the seller to use one, in order to advise him of what his goods really cost him in Belgium, and the other was to be used at the custom-house. He wrote back a letter of rather an insulting description, taxing the merchant with a want of proper moral honesty and sense of fairness in dealing, signifying that he was not a man to take advantage of such deception on the part of a vendor to avail himself of any profit he might make in this country at the custom-house. The manufacturers, or merchant, retorted upon him that he was as honest a man as the writer of the letter, and as much of a Christian, and what he had done was in conformity with the general habit on the continent; and that in the same ship on which this gentleman's goods were shipped there were forty-five invoices of a similar character, in the hands of forty-five different importers.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator referred to the late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Guthrie. Will he allow me to read a passage from his letter on home valuation?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Guthrie says:

"To ascertain this value, and these costs and charges, the importer is required to produce the original invoice of the merchandise, supported by his oath. The appraisers, who ascertain the dutiable value on the entry, by printed prices-current, commercial circulars, manufacturers' list of prices, and sometimes by consular communications from the country of shipment, or inspection of the invoices of other importers at their own and other ports—from some or all of these, they are enabled to ascertain the fact, with a reasonable certainty, (the only fact they are obliged to ascertain,) at what prices the merchandise in question was generally selling for in the foreign market at the date of exportation. If the article comes from a country from which importations are rare, and in regard to the market values of which the appraisers have no information other than the invoice, they are justified in taking the invoice value, supported by the declaration and oath of the importer, as reliable evidence of the general market value of the article in the country of exportation, upon the presumption that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the purchaser pays the price which the article is generally selling for in the foreign market. Such cases are, however, extremely rare; and when they do occur, information as to the current foreign prices of similar merchandise is usually obtained from other ports where such importations are more frequent, as a guide to the appraisers."

Mr. BELL. He is only giving the regulations to prevent these frauds.

Mr. HUNTER. He says, though, that with these means the appraisers can ascertain with a reasonable degree of certainty; and if they can, there is not the opportunity for fraud.

Mr. BELL. Are there no contrivances for shifting goods from one schedule to another? Does the late Secretary of the Treasury say there were no frauds on the revenue in that way?

Mr. HUNTER. That source of fraud as regards mistakes in schedules is obviously so small that it would not enter into the calculation. I was replying to the charge of undervaluation, and I asserted that I had the authority of Mr. Guthrie for saying that the foreign valuation of the goods could be ascertained with reasonable certainty. That is what I was endeavoring to meet. In regard to the other matter, the appraisers, it seems to me, will always determine it, except where there is a real difficulty as to what schedule an article does belong to, and that is a question generally determined by the courts.

Mr. BELL. I was stating the grounds on which I had drawn the conclusion that there was such an immense loss in the revenue by fraudulent devices of one kind or another, and by undervaluation. I found these evidences presented to me. Another thing I will call the attention of the honorable Senator from Virginia to. I know that the honest importing merchants had been driven out of the trade in New Orleans, on account of these devices. I know this further fact—and the gentleman concerned gave me a letter to that effect—that a gentleman quit dealing in foreign merchandise and had gone to planting on the Mississippi, and that was the ground he alleged for it. I do not say that all the American importing merchants, who continued in business in New Orleans, had a character for dishonesty; but the pregnant fact was that this gentleman said no man who would not connive at the fraudulent devices and practices to defraud the Government of the revenue, justly taxed by our existing tariff laws, could continue in the trade, and he did not intend to have his feelings or principles of self-respect violated by continuing in the business in which he had been engaged. I have in my possession the evidences collected five or six years ago for the purpose of being used on this question when it should come up, evidences which would satisfy any gentleman that all we have heard of this continued practice of double invoices is correct. I would ask the honorable Senator from Virginia, really, why is that practice continued, if there is nothing effected by it? I understood the honorable Senator from Georgia, the other day, to say that he had witnessed an instance of it a year or two ago. I do not remember whether he said that he found, on inquiry, that it was a general practice on the continent, or not, but that is the way I understood him. If no fruit is derived from the adoption of these devices by the vendors on the continent of Europe, why are they continued? Then I would ask my honorable friend, when so large a part of the foreign manufactures imported into this country are imported by the manufacturers themselves, and placed in the hands of their factors or agents here, who are generally foreigners, how is it possible to ascertain the prices of such goods at the place of manufacture, or to disprove their invoices? Their practice, I understand, is to put in interest on the capital they have employed in those manufactures, then the price of the raw material, then the wages paid to their operatives. That is the cost to them.

Mr. HUNTER. The appraiser puts on them the price at the port where they are shipped. If they are brought from Liverpool, the appraiser puts on the Liverpool price. If the invoice is under that price, he raises it to that; and if, in doing so, he raises it over ten per cent., the importer forfeits twenty per cent.

Mr. BELL. Then frauds may be committed on account of the different qualities and character of the merchandise imported. They change the fabrics in appearance and change the quality and value so as to deceive the appraisers; and in England the Free Trade Society have very strongly rebuked their manufacturers for this. They do not say that is a device to defraud the custom-

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

houses abroad; but they speak of it as a device which, if persisted in, would injure the character of their manufactures in every part of the world where they have customers, and that it ought to be looked to and guarded against. They furnish a texture similar in looks and appearance and quality, apparently, but different from the texture sold the preceding year. All these devices exist to a large extent. It may be that some of the frauds could be practiced on our custom-houses if we had a home valuation; but I think not to anything like the same extent.

The honorable Senator admitted that by smuggling there might be fraud, to a considerable amount, practiced upon the revenue of the Government; that there might be a large importation of foreign merchandise which was not entered on our custom-house books, of the value of which we knew nothing; and that is another point which I do not know that I made yesterday. By the present system of foreign undervaluations and fraudulent devices of one kind or another, I ask the honorable Senator if there is any means of knowing what amount of foreign merchandise is imported into this country, and consumed here? You do not know it. The honorable Senator from Georgia thinks, under favorable circumstances to the commission of fraud, it might amount to a hundred millions; the Senator from Rhode Island thinks it does, probably, amount to fifty millions a year, or upwards; that is the minimum. By the present system you do not know what amount of merchandise is brought in. The honorable Senator from Virginia relies on the figures as they appear upon our Treasury reports. We show that there is a diminished quantity stated in our books by that much annually—fifty or one hundred millions. Is not a system which leaves such a question uncertain, as to the amount of fifty or one hundred millions imported and consumed here, and all of which is to be paid for either in gold or silver, or by the products of the country, or in bankruptcy—is not a system essentially vicious that admits of such deception, practiced not only upon the people of the country generally, but upon all fair and honorable traders, and practiced upon the Government itself? It is apparent that the Treasury reports do not give us the amount of merchandise imported and consumed in this country which has to be paid for; but I see no reference to the uncertainty and want of any true intrinsic value in these reports at all. For example: if the undervaluations amount to $50,000,000 a year, in the last ten years we have imported $500,000,000 worth of foreign merchandise consumed and paid for, except that part which lies over unpaid, of which we have no account in our Treasury reports.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Tennessee, like the Senator from Georgia, relies on three years which have been picked; but to ascertain whether the value of the exports does exceed, for the whole term, the value of the imports, he ought to have taken the whole period from 1846 up, and he would have found that, in some years, the imports exceeded the exports. In 1846, the imports were $121,000,000, and the exports $113,000,000; in 1847, the exports were $153,000,000, and the imports $146,000,000; in 1848, they were equal; in 1849, the imports were $146,000,000, and the exports $145,000,000; in 1850, the exports were $178,000,000, and the imports $151,000,000; in 1851, the exports were $218,000,000, and the imports $216,000,000; in 1852, the imports exceed; and in 1853, again, the imports exceed largely. If he had taken the whole period, he would find that difference would not appear.

Mr. BELL. I have not made that calculation in reference to the increased amount of importations from 1847 up to this time. The honorable Senator stated it at ten per cent., and I said on the average it amounted to fifteen per cent.; but I have not made the calculation to see the correctness of the figures upon which the Senator from Georgia has proceeded, and also the Senator from Rhode Island, in coming to the conclusion that the frauds amounted to $50,000,000 a year, at least, and in some years to $100,000,000.

Mr. TOOMBS. The way I got at it was this: the last three years showed that the exports were $28,000,000 less than the imports, and then the profits on the commodities exported and the earnings of freight I take to be at least $60,000,000 a year, say twenty per cent.

Mr. HUNTER. But the Senator has not given us the estimate of the market value of the two in each place. He has supposed that, through the custom-house, all the returns that are made from the foreign trade of the country are made, whilst we know that not only is there a great deal of smuggling, but we know they do not afford any reliable information in regard to the flow of specie. There is a large amount of specie brought in by immigrants that does not appear on the custom-house books at all.

Mr. TOOMBS. I can tell my friend from Virginia that does not make the least difference; it is not counted in the exports, and therefore it ought not to be in the imports. Whatever foreign gold appears in the imports is so much in favor of my calculation and against his.

Mr. HUNTER. The exports all appear, and the imports do not all appear. How can the Senator tell, then, whether they are equal?

Mr. TOOMBS. If the immigrant brings in his gold, it disturbs the calculation of the Senator from Virginia, not mine.

Mr. HUNTER. Not at all. I referred to that as an instance to show that the flow of gold does not appear. This is one instance; there are others; the specie is not always returned; that is a notorious fact.

Mr. TOOMBS. That does not make any difference; it does not go into the exports.

Mr. BELL. The foreign gold imported by immigrants would not be a large difference; it would not even be a set-off against smuggling; but I leave that question to the honorable Senators from Georgia and Rhode Island. I founded my statements not only on that calculation of figures, to which I paid not so much attention as those gentlemen, but on examinations which I made myself, showing that it was impossible, when you exact the duties on the value at the port of exportation abroad, to obtain the full value, on account of the scores of devices resorted to by ingenious men, who have no conscientiousness, to defraud the revenue. I believe the frauds in this way would amount to at least twelve and a half per cent. on the whole average importations as they appear upon the books; and I have not the slightest doubt that the honorable Senator from Georgia is perfectly right in his estimate as to their extent. They certainly must come up to $50,000,000. There is not a gentleman who goes abroad who has not occasion to ascertain these facts. If he buys a few articles to bring home to his family, amounting to only a few hundred dollars, or five hundred or a thousand francs, he is presented with two invoices, one for himself, which is the bill by which he pays, and the other the bill by which, when he is overhauled at home, he is to pay duties at the custom-house. I have not traveled on the continent myself; but I have known gentlemen personally, of character and credit, who informed me that such is the practice at this day in every place where they buy jewelry and the finer fabrics of manufacture on the continent.

Now, in regard to the exportations also, the Senator from Virginia takes no note of the probable five hundred millions of debt that are owing, besides the thirty millions of specie we have been exporting on the average for the last ten years, over and above what is imported, which must go to the payment of the interest on that debt. I know that many gentlemen here will say that this is an uncertain calculation; that the amounts of American securities, State bonds, railroad bonds, and municipal corporation bonds, held abroad, are very uncertain, and vary. I know that; but we must only look to what those best informed on the subject believe and suppose to be the amount held abroad. I think less than four hundred millions cannot be safely taken as the estimate.

Mr. HUNTER. The late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Guthrie, estimated it at $200,000.

Mr. BELL. I do not know what his last estimate upon the subject was; but I find that the London Times estimates it at $500,000,000.

Mr. HUNTER. If it be $500,000,000, and we have to send the interest out on that sum, it would account for the difference of which the Senator from Georgia speaks.

Mr. BELL. No; the thirty millions would not account for it. What is the amount of debt due in the neighborhood of Glasgow alone, to the manufacturing establishments? I notice, by the general statements in the newspapers, that the banks there lost over a hundred millions by accommodating traders and speculators particularly connected with the American trade and the export of iron—all that has been sunk and lost. We do not know how much is the debt owing by American merchants abroad. I know it is so considerable that English financiers and merchants think it is of great importance that we should have things in a sounder condition than we have in the United States, for they want to get their money. I wish my friend from Virginia to answer me this question: has there been any such increase of prosperity in this country since the year 1847 as would justify an average increase of the ability of consumption in the United States—I mean by the increased productions, and the increased industry of the country—so as to amount to $15,000,000 of an increase every year? It is not, as he said, taking the average of the last nine or ten years, ten per cent. increase, but on the average, it amounts to about fifteen per cent.; and some years it was twenty per cent. Will my friend from Virginia answer me how that can be possible?

In reference to what I thought was the amount of frauds annually committed on the revenues of the country, I stated frankly and fairly the grounds on which I supposed I made a fair calculation. I relied upon the information of others, and upon the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, to show that at all events the fraudulent devices were considerable, and were much complained of. Now, I think no showing the Senator from Virginia can make is at all necessary to the views taken by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Rhode Island. He cannot but acknowledge, I think, that the custom-house returns do not show the amount of importations annually brought into our ports. Whether they are fifty millions or one hundred millions short, is uncertain; but that there is a large amount short is very evident.

The honorable Senator charges me with undertaking to rebuke him. If I did so, it was not because of any feeling or desire on my part to say anything offensive to him. I stated that I could perceive there was some plausible ground for taking the exception as to the constitutionality of the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, because he assumed, as did the honorable mover of the amendment, that it would increase the revenues of the country; but then there was another question behind that: whether it was not in conformity to the true construction of the law of 1846? The honorable Senator from Virginia now asserts that the practice and the interpretation have been uniform from 1795 down to this time. I admit that weighs considerably; but if it is an erroneous construction, if it may be considered open, as we have no Department that can decide such things—

Mr. HUNTER. I read the decision of Judge Nelson; that was explicit on the point. What does the Senator say to that?

Mr. BELL. Is that conclusive?

Mr. HUNTER. I think so.

Mr. BELL. Is that irreversible? Does it settle the law? If it was a construction of the Constitution it would not settle it in the opinion of the honorable Senator.

Mr. HUNTER. It settles the law. I do not think they can settle the Constitution by decision, but they can settle the law.

Mr. BELL. If this has been the uniform practice since 1795 to the present time, and it is found to be an erroneous one, and the manufacturers and traders of foreign countries have been enabled to evade the payment of duties to the amount of at least twelve and a half per cent. under it, is it not evident that we ought to give a fair interpretation to the law, so as to prevent this, if it will admit it on any plausible ground? Now the authority of a judge is interposed. Of course, I admit that all adjudications on this question must stand; but that is not the point I was on. The Senator says I undertook to rebuke him, and declared that his objection was a technical one. I urged that it might be considered so, under all the circumstances; though I did not go into details to show on what ground it might be so considered. I further said to my honorable friend from Virginia, that if it was the disposition of the ruling powers of the country, at this time, to correct the frauds by undervaluations, and really to supply the wants of the Treasury according to the fair interpretation of the existing law, and it was unconstitutional to bring forward such a measure here, why was it not done in the House of Representatives? I consider that the strongest statement, looking at it in a party point of view, stronger than any other part of the statement I made.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Davis.

SENATE.

I had not time to arrange my thoughts, or even to take any notes with such order and precision that I could present them clearly and satisfactorily to the Senate; but still I went into some argument to show that it was impossible in the nature of things that the productive capacity of this country could have increased so extraordinarily as to have justified the great increase of our importations from 1857 to this time, an average increase of $15,000,000 per annum. It was impossible in the nature of things, as I conceive, that this could have been a healthy increase. I know there were one or two years of high prices produced by the state of things in Europe when we got more for our produce and breadstuffs on account of short crops abroad; but that is an inconsiderable item of the large increase from 1847 to 1857. In 1857, the imports were one hundred and sixty or one hundred and seventy millions more than they were ten years ago. I say the ability to buy articles has not increased with that rapidity, and the inference which I wished to draw from all this was, that the gentleman who had charge of the finances of the Government ought to have seen it.

In reference to the currency, I mean to say nothing now. I shall not go into the question of the exportation of specie, because the honorable Senator has not alluded to it; and what I am now saying I wish to be strictly in reply to him. My argument was intended to show that if he would give the proper weight and consideration to this large increase of our importations in the last ten years, he would see that much of it was founded upon credit; it was artificial; it was not a true index of the ability of the country either to buy or to pay; and that when he relied upon a revival of trade and business in this country on the figures of 1855, 1856, and 1857, his calculations would never be realized, and he had better make provision at once for an increased revenue. I think, upon a fair and deliberate consideration of the facts I have presented, any man will see that they furnish no grounds of faith that this country will, within any short period, reach a similar condition of prosperity so far as it is indicated by the amount of merchandise imported.

Another thing I threw in—an appeal to the good feelings and sympathies of men—an appeal to which, as I pointed out, the English Government was ever ready to respond. I thought we might fairly adopt the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, as providing the means of paying the debt proposed to be contracted and supplying the Treasury next year; for the Senator from Virginia himself does not pretend to say that he calculates with any certainty that the ordinary receipts of the revenue will pay the expenditures of the next year, and I pointed to the fact that at the close of the next year you would have a public debt of more than seventy or eighty million dollars. Looking back to the circumstances to which I have already alluded as to the character of our trade, I thought we all ought at once to perceive that there was no good sense or wisdom in delaying for a year or two to see whether business would revive. I thought the evidence was conclusive, that it could not and would not, to such an extent as would meet the wants of the Government; and hence, I thought we might as well, at once, relieve the country to the extent that such a measure would relieve those who have been thrown out of employment, by increasing the imposts upon imported merchandise coming in conflict with the domestic produce of the country. The honorable Senator from Virginia has drawn into his short argument, made to-day, that ad captandum—I will not call it by any less dignified name—appeal which is made on such occasions about the injustice done to the poor by increasing the impositions upon the articles of imported merchandise.

Mr. HUNTER. I said nothing about the poor. I spoke of the consumers. The consumers embrace poor and rich.

Mr. BELL. I understand; but then the honorable Senator alluded to the appeal made on account of the suffering portion of the community now thrown out of employment, and said, "how could that be, when you take from one class, by imposing protective duties, to put into the pockets of the capitalists, those who are not suffering?" He said you increase the means of the capitalists and you throw the burden on the unemployed, the poor, the toiling millions. The honorable Senator from Virginia and the honorable Senator from Georgia do not differ much when we come to discuss that point. It is in that odious point of view that the arguments of some of the gentlemen on this side of the Chamber are held up and presented before the country. My own judgment on the subject is, that unless you lay a duty so great as to prohibit the importation of articles, the effect of duties affording protection to a reasonable extent on the great bulk of manufactured articles that come in conflict with similar articles which we have the raw material and the skill and knowledge to manufacture here, diminish prices in the end, and that the capitalist, after all, can receive only a reasonable remunerative price or interest on his capital, such as all other employments justify. I will not detain the Senate further.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question: how the proposed modification of the manner of collecting the duties would entirely avoid the danger of fraud? He alleges fraud to exist now, and to some extent, no doubt, it does. I wish to know how he is going to avoid it; how the proposed plan will do it?

Mr. BELL. I will answer to the best of my knowledge and judgment. You cannot altogether avoid frauds by a change in the mode of valuation. Frauds will continue to exist, to some extent, under any system. I only pretend to say that they must more exceedingly abound under the present practice of the Government in collecting revenue than could possibly be the case in collecting revenue under the system of home valuation. Of course there may be a difference between the judgment of appraisers in one port and another. One proposition is to fix New York as a standard. I have conversed with the honorable Senator from Virginia on this subject heretofore, and he asked me how you would fix a value in any one port that would be equally just in California? I replied that, if the standard was fixed at New York, and the effect should be that we lost in the revenue in regard to the goods consumed in California, the consequence would be that the importing merchant and consumers in California would pay less duty.

Mr. DAVIS. It might be more.

Mr. BELL. It might be more according to the principles on which you base the calculation, but now they would pay a less duty in San Francisco by the New York standard. I presume the standard would be fixed at the wholesale market value at New York. You might make some deductions one way or the other, if you thought proper; but that is the idea and the principle. When you take goods from New York to California, the cost of freight and transportation from New York to California adds to their value; and then, when you require the merchants and consumers in California to pay duty only by the New York standard, you lessen the burden upon them. The article, the moment it arrives there, is worth more than that standard by the cost of transportation and insurance and commissions. All that would be added; but they would pay no duty on it. That would be unfair to some extent, and might be said by some gentlemen to be contrary to the Constitution; but practically, I think, in levying revenue in a country like this, so divided as our sea-ports are, that is a matter of small consideration compared with the great importance of having our system uniform as far as practicable, and our revenues honestly raised.

Now, I will state another fact. When I was at New Orleans, some six or seven years ago—and I dare say the representatives from Louisiana can verify it—I learned that the merchants could then, notwithstanding the honesty of our appraisers, actually import their goods cheaper through New York. The honest merchants, who would not condescend to use false invoices, found it was better to have their goods shipped to New York, entered there, and then reshipped to New Orleans, with all the charges of reloading, the coastwise freight, and insurance. That was a mode by which some of them continued in the trade so as to avoid the competition which they had to meet in New Orleans with merchants who imported under the custom-house invoice system.

I am not familiar with these subjects, as my friend from Mississippi very well knows. They have not been in my line at all; but I studied them to some extent when I saw that they were likely to arise here. I do not know that I have given a satisfactory answer; but I think my friend from Rhode Island could perhaps devise a scheme that would be satisfactory.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the Senator from Tennessee does himself injustice. He shows familiarity with the general principles involved, but I do not think he removes my difficulty by any means. The question which I asked presents to my mind several difficulties. In the first place, I do not see how it would be possible (to take the ports he names, San Francisco and New York) for the appraisers at San Francisco to know the value of any article of commerce in New York upon the day when it was entered in the harbor of San Francisco. The price is fluctuating, and the time is considerable between the two ports. If the price was ascending or descending, the appraisers in San Francisco would make the error just in proportion to the ascent or descent of its value in the port of New York.

Mr. BELL. That would be a practical inconvenience.

Mr. DAVIS. Then again the Senator is quite mistaken in supposing that all commerce must incur an increase of value by going to San Francisco. I think one of the great elements in the present system likely to produce discontents among the people of the Pacific coast is that we legislate entirely in relation to our duties on imports by regarding the interests of those people, who look out on the Atlantic and draw their trade across it; but the people of the Pacific coast must some day or other have a very extensive trade of an Asiatic character. Now to take an article which is already one of considerable import into the harbor of San Francisco, Chinese rice, how would an appraiser at San Francisco determine the value of Chinese rice, in the port of New York, where not one grain probably ever enters as merchandise?

Mr. BELL. That could be provided for.

Mr. DAVIS. It could not possibly. The article has no value in New York known to the appraiser. So a very large class of French goods are imported into New Orleans which find no other market in the United States. How are you to fix a New York standard for measuring these goods which are never imported into New York? It is impossible. And if you could reach it, if goods of Asiatic production should enter into New York and become matter of merchandise there and acquire value there, would it be fair to impose upon an importer in San Francisco the increase of value of those goods when they should have been carried around the Cape and on a stormy sea to the port of New York? It would be manifestly unjust, manifestly injurious to the trade of those people who look out upon the Pacific and not on the Atlantic.

I think, therefore, that, whilst we are met at the first step with the difficulty, at last you must rely on the intelligence and integrity of the appraisers, as you do now; and, secondly, that, by such a regulation as is proposed, you give a preference to one port over another, making it the interest of the merchant to do that which the Senator from Tennessee finds that, in some cases, the merchant in New Orleans now does—making it always his interest to import into New York; having no additional charge of duty when he arrives at New Orleans, if he brings the goods from New York; but having an additional charge if he brings them from elsewhere. It is to create a preference for that port over the others, necessarily;

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Mason.

SENATE.

it is to rely, at least, upon the integrity and intelligence of appraisers, and compelling them to measure by a standard which does not appeal to their general commercial knowledge, but their capacity to guess whether the value of the article has gone up or down at the port where the standard is fixed, between the date of the last price-current and the date of the delivery of the goods at the port of entry. It seems to me to have all the difficulties, and to be liable to all the frauds—

Mr. BELL. Permit me to ask the honorable Senator a question. Is there any other civilized trading nation in the world that has duties paid on its importations on their foreign valuation, or that ever did such a thing? Do not foreign nations lay the duty on the valuation in the port in which the goods arrive?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not able to answer the question.

Mr. BELL. I do not pretend to have a perfect knowledge on the subject; but my understanding is, that this is the only country that levies its duties on a foreign valuation.

Mr. SIMMONS. My proposition—of which the Senator from Mississippi is complaining—had a provision in it to meet just such cases as he has presented. It provided that, when the duty could not be ascertained in any other way, the collector might take it in kind, and sell it in the market. In that way you could certainly get your percentage. I should like to see how the Senator can get over that?

Mr. DAVIS. My objection is, that I am afraid the appraisers would ascertain it to suit themselves. You would have one great central commercial metropolis, from which you would send out agents, trained in the one great custom-house of the country, to apply their own notions and their own standard to every port of the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Those are provisions to get rid of the abstractions which have been thrown in the way of a home valuation. I think that is perfectly constitutional—

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to ask my honorable friend from Rhode Island whether this has much to do necessarily with the river and harbor bills?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all; but I thought perhaps I could get along better by explaining exactly what I proposed.

Mr. DAVIS. I am objecting to the abstraction of money from the pockets of the importers of every other part of the United States for the benefit of the one great central metropolis of commerce. I am objecting to a scheme which is to swell the number of your custom-house officers, and to give them a larger discretionary power than they now have.

Mr. BELL. Let me ask my friend from Mississippi what effect the fraudulent system of undervaluation, in the city of New York, had on New Orleans? That is one of the grounds on which I felt excited and interested on the subject ever since I made the examination to which I have referred some years ago at New Orleans. I saw that the consequence of the system of undervaluation was to make New York the objectionable entrepôt of which the Senator from Mississippi speaks—the great emporium of trade in this country. That is one of my very grounds of objection to the present system. I ask my friend from Mississippi whether it would not be a much more easy task, on the part of the Government here, to see, supervise, and exercise a patriotic spirit in consulting the most honest and skillful officers in a single port than a dozen ports, as we have to do now?

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator presents me the objection that the New York standard is taken for the importer at New Orleans, and yet he proposes to take the New York standard at every port.

Mr. BELL. What I mean to say is, that I contemplated a different standard of men in New York, though I am told the present officers are very good. Mr. Schell, I have not heard complaint of.

Mr. DAVIS. I sympathize in the hope the Senator has on the perfectibility of man, but I hardly expect to find the full development of perfectibility in the midst of a custom-house. I think the Senator is mistaken in the case to which he refers. A large number of the mercantile houses in New Orleans are branches, having still larger houses in New York. They import through New York on account of their dependency on New York. We even sell our cotton in New Orleans for bills of exchange which are drawn on New York. New York is now the great center of the commerce of the United States, and, probably, will ever so remain. I object, however, by legislation, to giving it more than its capital and its natural advantages confer upon it.

Mr. BELL. I object to that, too.

Mr. DAVIS. The whole importation to which the Senator refers is not because the custom-house officers in New York are less honest, less capable than those of New Orleans. It results from the fact that they make their money arrangements in New York more conveniently than elsewhere, and from the other fact to which I refer, that a large number of the merchants of New Orleans are connected with still larger mercantile houses in the city of New York. That is the reason of the fact which the Senator no doubt found.

Mr. BELL. I do not know whether the Senator understood me that the case there was that it was on account of the lower duties assessed in New York.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PUGH.]

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll; but before the result was announced—

Mr. WILSON. I vote "nay" on this question to satisfy others, not myself.

Mr. FITCH. I was not in when this amendment was moved, but I previously notified the Presiding Officer that I had paired off with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] on all questions relating to river and harbor improvement bills—a general pair on these bills. If that involves this question likewise, I shall not vote. If it does not, and is so decided, I am willing, as I understand my vote will affect the question materially, to do what other Senators say is proper.

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator from Louisiana consulted me about pairing off, he being a friend of the bills, and told me he had paired off with the honorable Senator from Indiana. The friends of the bills understand that this is a vote which is covered by the pair.

Mr. FITCH. If there is any doubt whatever about it, I shall decline voting.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hammond, Hayne, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Rice, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Bigler, Broderick, Chandler, Colamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Jones, Kennedy, King, Pugh, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—26.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I move an amendment to the amendment:

That all articles now on the free list be classed among the unenumerated articles, and be charged with a duty of twenty per cent. ad valorem, on all importations made after the 1st day of July, 1858.

Mr. PUGH. I ask the President whether he considers that amendment in order? It proposes to raise revenue, to originate a bill in this House to increase the tariff.

Mr. DAVIS. It is a question which the Senate had before it yesterday.

Mr. PUGH. It is not the same by a great ways.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know on which side the Senator from Ohio was, on the point of order raised by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. PUGH. The answer then made by several Senators was, that they did not propose to raise the duties at all, but simply to affect the measure of valuation. I did not care anything about the constitutional question then, because I was against the home valuation anyhow; but here is a provision to raise duties, the origination of which by the Senate is unconstitutional.

Mr. DAVIS. It is a modification of the scale of duty. It certainly will increase the revenue. Until I was compelled to surrender to the better judgment of the Senate, I thought the origination of any bill which proposed to increase the revenue of the country by duties on imports was assuming a power not delegated to the Senate; but a large majority seemed to be against that construction the other day, and I am but bowing, as I always do, to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question of order, if any Senator desires it, to the sense of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I would rather take this vote on the point of order. We took it on the principal question yesterday—not on the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts desires the question of order submitted to the Senate. The Chair will submit it: Is this amendment in order? Senators who think the amendment is in order will say "ay."

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to know if the question should not properly be put, "Is this amendment constitutional?" That is the question. It is alleged to be out of order, because it is unconstitutional. I want to know if that is the specific question—whether it is constitutional?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state—

Mr. SLIDELL. I would suggest to the Vice President that I understood, if the point of order had not been waived yesterday, it was the intention of the Chair to have propounded the question to the Senate, "Will the Senate receive the amendment?" That was my impression, and I understood that was the usual form, when the Chair doubted whether a proposition was in order or not, in which the Chair presented it to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair indicated the other day that he would decline to decide any question of order of this character; yet, in the broad sense, it is a question of order—the precepts of the Constitution, the rules of the body, and, where they are silent, the law of Parliament, constituting the standard of our proceedings. If the point of order is raised, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate, "Is this amendment in order?" and, in his opinion, that is the appropriate mode of submitting the question.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I know very little about the rules of order. Suppose I have just come into the Senate, knowing nothing about the rules of the body, never having read them, but I have studied the Constitution: when the question is propounded to me, "Is an amendment in order?" how should I decide it? You may have some rule, for aught I know, that regulates this matter as a question of order; but, is it the Constitution that I am comparing it with when I vote upon it as a question of order? Then, when I vote on the question as you are propounding it—"Is the amendment in order?"—am I to consider that there is any other rule than the Constitution by which I am to regulate my judgment? I do not know anything about the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows of no other rule affecting this question than the Constitution.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Then, I understand I am to vote whether this amendment is constitutional.

Mr. MASON. I wish to say a single word, if the question is to be taken on this matter as a question of order, only as indicative of the reason of my vote. I did not at all agree the other day with Senators who thought the propriety of an amendment of this character was one to be decided as a question of order, if we look upon it as the Senator from Kentucky does, as a question under the Constitution. The Constitution declares that bills for raising revenue shall not originate in the Senate. I may think this is a bill to raise revenue; others may think it is not a bill to raise revenue; and our votes will be governed accordingly on it when the question is put on the amendment. I cannot perceive that the Constitution, in giving to the Senate the right to prescribe its own rules, intended to do more than to vest the Senate, and the Presiding Officer of the Senate as the organ to expound the rules, with the power to prescribe what they might consider best for the dispatch of business. I do not consider that the Constitution can affect the order of the Senate technically, so speaking, at all; therefore, whatever my vote might be on the amendment, for it or against it, I shall be constrained to vote that it is in order, although I may be opposed to the amendment.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Thompson.

SENATE.

Mr. PUGH. It seems to me that the decision of the Chair is one to which there can be no answer made. The Senate is the creature of the Constitution, and there are as many rules of order for this body, in the Constitution, as in our rules—just as many; and they are as completely binding—yea, and more so. We can change our rules, but we cannot change the Constitution. The Constitution says that each Senator shall have one vote. Suppose I attempt to vote twice on a question: where is the rule of the Senate to prevent me? There is no rule of the Senate; there is a rule of the Constitution. It is out of order clearly. The Constitution says that every bill shall be read three times in three days. Suppose I attempt to put a bill on its passage after its first reading; that is out of order, because the Constitution says it shall be read three times. I could name several cases in a few moments. The Constitution has prescribed certain rules of order for us, and we must obey them. We have prescribed others for ourselves; and those, too, we must obey until we change them. Now, the Constitution says that every bill for raising revenue shall originate with the House of Representatives. A bill which raises revenue cannot originate here; it is out of order. We cannot entertain it; it ought to be thrown out on its first reading; and the mere fact that the rule of order is in the Constitution gives it no less force, certainly, than if it were within our own rules; and therefore I say that, in my judgment, the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Mississippi is out of order. It violates not a question of constitutional law, but a plain rule of order written in the Constitution; and therefore I insist that the question shall be taken so that we may know in the future what is in order.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, the Chair has put the question in the only way it can possibly be raised. The idea that an amendment is out of order because it is unconstitutional, cannot be maintained for a moment. That is no test of order, for according to my judgment I could have objected on the same ground that the bill was out of order. It never would get in order with me, for I have no more doubt of the unconstitutionality of the bill, than I have of my own existence. Could I, therefore, get up and say, you shall not introduce unconstitutional bills, you shall not introduce unconstitutional amendments? It is all a mistake. The only question is: is this amendment within the rules of your body? It is an amendment in the second degree, and therefore in order; hence I shall vote that it is in order; there can be no question about that point on any rule of ours. I have no doubt, however, that it is unconstitutional; and yet I shall vote for it. I have a perfect right to vote for an unconstitutional amendment to an unconstitutional bill. I will put any rider on it that will kill it. Though it is unconstitutional, I shall vote that it is in order, and I will put it on the bill if I can. The business of the Senate would be embarrassed at every stage, if a question could be raised as to the unconstitutionality of an amendment. I might raise the same objection to every bill for internal improvements.

Mr. WILSON. I understood the Senator from Georgia to unite with the Senator from Virginia on the point of order in regard to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island to the loan bill.

Mr. TOOMBS. No, sir; I said it was unconstitutional, but not out of order. I could not vote for any bill with it in, on the constitutional point. This, however, is an amendment within the rules of the Senate; it is an amendment to an amendment. Whether that amendment is constitutional or unconstitutional is not a question of order, and never can be. The Constitution is the rule for my voting for measures; but it is perfectly competent and parliamentary for me to make an unconstitutional measure as good as I can, even by an unconstitutional amendment. I may be wrong in this, but I think I am correct, according to all parliamentary law. I intend to vote against the whole bill; but I will put the amendment on it because it will be better in that form.

I look on it as most extraordinary that, in the present state of the Treasury, when gentlemen know we have not the money for these improvements, they should press appropriations for them; and I am still more amazed at gentlemen who claim to be connected with the dominant party that they should, in the face of the Senate and of the country and of their constituents, vote to spend five hundred thousand or a million dollars for these objects, without giving the administrative Government a dollar to pay it with. It is very extraordinary, whatever may be their opinions on internal improvements. I can understand that an Opposition who desire to embarrass an Administration, to throw trouble in their way, would raise all the objections they could, but I am surprised that others should join them in this. Certainly, if these appropriations are to be made, the means of making them should be furnished.

I say the Chair has put the question right: "Is the amendment in order?" In my judgment, it is within the rules of your body, and that is all that is involved in the question of order—not whether it is constitutional. I shall therefore vote, without hesitation, that it is in order, and then vote it in the bill if I can, and then vote against the whole bill if I be put in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I take it, Mr. President, that questions of order are to be summarily decided; and I must confess that I am very much surprised that questions as to the constitutionality of measures are to be treated here as questions of order, and submitted as such to the decision of the Senate. I shall vote with the Senator from Georgia. I have no sort of doubt that this amendment is unconstitutional—that is, that we have no right to pass a bill of the character indicated by this amendment; but it seems to me it is not to be raised as a question of order. I shall vote against the amendment without considering its merits when we come to vote upon it; and the conclusive reason why I shall vote against it is that we have no right to originate such a proposition; but still I am not for deciding whether a bill can be introduced into this body upon constitutional grounds as a question of order. I will determine that when I come to vote upon the measure. As has been very truly remarked, there is hardly a great question that comes up here about which somebody does not raise a constitutional point; and are we to go off into a discussion of order, and have it submitted to the Senate to be determined by a solemn vote whether a bill is constitutional or not, as a question of order. I do not think such a question should be submitted to the Senate in that form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The 6th rule of the Senate provides that the President may call for the sense of the Senate on any question of order. The question is raised whether this amendment to the amendment is in order or not. The Chair believes it to belong to that class of questions which it does not become him to decide upon as being in or out of order. For whatever reason Senators may vote, undoubtedly it may be broadly stated that the amendment is or is not in order. That may be predicated of every amendment. The question being raised, the Chair presents it to the Senate: "Is this amendment in order?"

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this question can be disposed of in very few words. The Constitution undoubtedly is of higher obligation than any rules of order which this body can make. No doubt we may introduce a bill here which, in the judgment of a portion of the members, is in contravention of the Constitution, and in the judgment of another portion is not. It is not, in my judgment, in that state of things, a proper test to apply to the bill when it is introduced, to make a question of order on the ground that the party making the point of order believes the bill is unconstitutional, and can show it ever so much to be unconstitutional. That is not a question of order; because members may differ about that, and each member will vote upon the bill according to his judgment of it, as a constitutional or an unconstitutional measure, when he comes to vote on it. But where the Constitution itself determines which of the two branches of Congress may originate a bill, it presents a different question altogether—one as wide as the poles from the question of the mere unconstitutionality of a bill.

The Constitution says—I do not quote its words, but the idea is in the minds of all of us—that this body shall not originate bills to raise revenue. Now, a member rises here and proposes a bill to raise revenue. It is not enough to say that the bill is unconstitutional. That may be said, undoubtedly; but over and above that, it is to be said the Constitution declares that this body shall not originate such a bill. Then it is a question of order.

Mr. PUGH. I would suggest to the Senator that the bill is not unconstitutional; it only begins unconstitutionally.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree that my friend from Ohio is right, because, if we pass such a bill, and the House of Representatives pass it and it becomes a law, it is as good a law as was ever made. We cannot go back of the bill as passed, and show in the Supreme Court that it originated in the wrong body. We must make the objection in limine, or we cannot make it at all. The House of Representatives, when the bill is sent to them, may throw it under their table, because they say the Senate has no business to originate it; but if they pass it, it is as good a law as Congress ever made, so far as the origin of the bill is concerned. Suppose the Constitution had said the Senate should originate no bill, had created the Senate and House of Representatives as it now has, but had given the House of Representatives the sole power to originate all bills: when we, under these circumstances, were in session, a member rose in his place and offered a bill on a proper subject of legislation, would it not at once be objectionable upon the ground that, in this body, we could not originate bills? Would not every member say amen to that? Clearly I think every member would. Well, so far as this proposition is concerned, the Constitution has said that very thing; it has said the Senate shall not originate such a bill as this amendment is. In that state of things, I say it is clearly a question of order, because we are forbidden to entertain or consider the proposition.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the Senator allow me? I wish to ask whether this question which is submitted is amendable; whether the question which has been submitted by the Chair to the Senate can be amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear any amendment the Senator may offer, and then decide.

Mr. SEWARD. Because I suppose what is covered by it is, whether the proposed amendment is constitutional; and if it is, I should like to move to amend the question so that the point to be submitted shall be, whether this amendment is consistent with the Constitution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would not consider that in order.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that the question cannot be more fairly and directly presented than in the mode it is proposed to be presented to the Chair. With the suggestions I have made, asking to some extent pardon of the Senate for intruding when the question was about to be put, I trust we shall have a vote.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It is very seldom that I have anything to say about points of order; they are matters in which I take very little interest, though I was presiding officer of a legislative body once, and had very little trouble in getting along. The Senator from Mississippi submits his amendment. It is objected that it is out of order, and I understand the Chair proposes to leave it to the sense of the Senate to say whether it is in order or out of order. We have rules, governing the proceedings of the Senate, and under those rules any proposition is to be received that is pertinent, that is not scandalous, that is not objectionable to anything in the rules. It is said this amendment is unconstitutional. That takes the whole question for granted. You might just as well say this is unreasonable. You do not know what may be decided about the Constitution. You are not to take it, as has been suggested, in limine; but you are to take it when you come to the death—voting upon it. It is not submitted—constitutional or unconstitutional? Why, sir, suppose I make a motion, and a Senator gets up and says my motion is out of order. I ask him why? "Oh," says he, "your motion is an

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Collamer.

SENATE.

unconstitutional motion." Is that allowable? That is the case here.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Senator pardon me for interrupting him?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take the gentleman's own illustration. If the Constitution has said such a motion as that should not be made in the body, I ask him, then, if he could make it? If the Constitution had said in express terms that such a motion as he proposed to make should not be made in the Senate, could he make it?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I am not making any motion. I say the objection to this amendment is on the ground that it involves the constitutional proposition, the origination of a revenue measure by a proceeding in this House. I say that amounts to nothing, as a question of order. You, sir, must be governed by the rules, and, with the highest respect to the body, I think, if I were in your place, I would decide it in or out of order, and if they did not like it they might let it alone.

Mr. HALE. I did not think, sir, that I should be led into this debate; but the honorable Senator from Connecticut has advanced a proposition which I think erroneous; and as it may have some influence here, I desire to have it considered. He says that if a bill is originated in this body against the provisions of the Constitution, and is carried to the other House, and enacted there, and becomes a law, no court can go behind the record, and say that it was not constitutionally enacted, and adjudge it null. I dissent from that entirely, and I believe that several of the States in this Union have decided differently. I know that the supreme court of my own State have, within the past year, decided that, where the constitution requires the Houses to keep a journal, and requires bills to go through certain stages, and it appears, on an inspection of the journal, that a bill did not go through the stages required by the constitution, notwithstanding it has all the forms of law, signed by both presiding officers, and approved by the Governor, it is not a law. The honorable Senator from Georgia tells me that such has been the ruling in the State of Georgia. The Constitution says certain things shall be done, and that each House shall keep a Journal to show what it has done. If it appear by its Journal that a bill which the Constitution says shall not originate here, has originated here, I contend that it would be the clearest duty, and within the legitimate province of the Supreme Court, or any other court before whom the matter might be brought, to pronounce that, although such a bill had all the forms of law, it was not a law. For that reason, I think it is exceedingly important that the Senate should settle—I do not care whether you call it a constitutional question or a question of order—and should settle rightfully, whether it is within the legitimate province of this body to originate such a measure.

Mr. FOSTER. Allow me to ask the Senator, before he sits down, how, after a bill has passed the Senate and House of Representatives, and becomes a law and has all the forms which such a bill ordinarily has, he would ascertain in the courts, in which House it had originated?

Mr. HALE. In the easiest way in the world. By looking at the Journals. The Constitution says we shall keep Journals, and they are kept for the very purpose of ascertaining just such facts as those.

Mr. DAVIS. I think Senators on the other side have pushed the argument greatly beyond the practice, and any reason which exists, either in the Constitution or without it, to carry it to the extent to which they now press it. I am sorry they did not take the same position on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island to the loan bill. Carried, however, to the extent they now press it, it would be, that any proposition made in the Senate which would increase the revenue of the country, would be out of order on the ground that it was unconstitutional. The men who framed the Constitution lived before that great discovery that the imposition of duties on imports made them cheaper, and they meant that no tax bill should originate in the Senate. I have no disposition to limit it or to extend it beyond the judgment of the Senate, and I am acting now under the judgment which the Senate indicated two days ago. But, sir, no railroad grant has ever been proposed in the Senate on which the argument was not made that by giving away a part of the lands to insure the construction of a road, you would increase the value of the rest, and hasten its sale. Under such arguments as are sprung on this amendment, such a proposition was a bill to raise revenue, and unconstitutional and out of order. The propositions which are now pending to improve harbors, it is urged, will increase the commerce of the country, and so increase the revenue, the general fund of the country; and, I might just as well say, that is out of order and unconstitutional, because it is a mode of raising revenue, and that belongs to the House of Representatives. The point is pushed to the extent of absurdity in the argument, whatever may be the merits of the amendment itself.

Mr. COLLAMER. I perceive that gentlemen do that which is not very unfrequent among us—they assume that their view of the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island to the loan bill, is the true one; and they attempt, from their view of it, to apply it as an argument with relation to this case. Our opinion in regard to that amendment was that it did not raise revenues. I do not wish to be understood as using the word "raise" in the sense of "increase." If a bill were presented which made the duties all ten per cent., that would still be a revenue bill. Suppose that was the first bill for revenue that was ever offered in Congress, would it not be a bill raising revenue? Certainly. Then you are to judge of it in the same way at all periods of our history. If it is a bill raising revenue to begin with; it is a bill raising revenue at all stages of our history. The Constitution does not require that it shall be a bill increasing revenue; it means nothing more than a plan for producing money, getting it into the Treasury. The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, in our view, was nothing but carrying the law into effect, and getting the revenue which the law provided. What if it did increase the amount of revenue? I say you cannot make a law to prevent frauds, that will not increase the revenue. If it does not, it will not do any good.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Allow me to ask the Senator a question in regard to a difficulty that occurred to my mind; and it will illustrate this particular point. The proposition that he and others voted for was to adopt the home valuation. Well, I find that, taking railroad bar-iron for example, when it would be worth at Liverpool about twenty-six dollars a ton, its selling price in New York would be about forty dollars; and, by the last statement I was able to get, when the selling price in New York was sixty-two dollars, it was thirty-eight and a fraction at Liverpool—

Mr. COLLAMER. This is a pretty long question. We shall want a surveyor, with a compass and chain, to run it out.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I come to the point in this way: the home valuation is fifty per cent. higher than the foreign.

Mr. COLLAMER. I deny the fact.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is on bar-iron, as the gentleman will find if he will take the lists of prices for the last ten years.

Mr. COLLAMER. That must be owing to the freight and duty.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Exactly; and the very amendment the Senator voted for, adopted the New York valuation, and that valuation was equivalent to raising the duty on bar-iron from twenty-four per cent., as it now is to thirty-six per cent. on the foreign valuation. If that was right, what is the objection to this? If you could raise the duty by that form of language, thirty-six per cent., what is the objection to making the change now suggested?

Mr. COLLAMER. I will say to the gentleman about his question, as the witness said to the lawyer, after a very long one, with a great many expletives—"I do not know," said he, "about that, may it please the court; I cannot answer that question now, without a surveyor with his compass and chain to run it out and get at what it is." [Laughter.] I am not proposing to make any tariff speech at this time. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that I voted for that proposition.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator was among those who voted for it. It was generally voted for by his political friends, and I supposed he voted with them.

Mr. COLLAMER. The gentleman assumes a great many things in his question. In the first place, I was saying that we viewed the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island as nothing more nor less than an attempt by some efficient legislation to obtain the revenues and duties for which the existing laws provide. I deny that the foreign valuation is the present law, or ever has been since 1799. Our duties have been most generally specific; but that our ad valorem duties, so far as they have existed, have been laid on any foreign valuation, never was true, and is not true to-day, except so far as we are cheated. The act of 1795 provides for assessing the duty at the place of importation.

Mr. CLINGMAN rose.

Mr. COLLAMER. I understand what I am about. The gentleman need not trouble me with any more of his questions. He will get his answer, and get it understandingly too, if he chooses to attend to me. Neither shall I be embarrassed by the gentleman's question. I shall not be thrown off my guard in the least by it.

The act of 1795 provides for levying the duty on the foreign price of the goods as put on board the vessel, with the charges of getting them on board; and it adds "all other costs and charges except insurance and commissions," which, of course, included the cost of getting them to this country. What did that mean? Can any man on earth tell me what that means? Take it as it reads, and can there be a mistake about it? It is that you take the foreign price, with the addition of all the costs and charges, until you get the article here as the more means, the scaffolding, the elements, out of which to get the price on which to lay your duty when it arrives here. The duty is not laid on the foreign valuation; it is laid upon the price abroad, together with the costs and charges, with certain exceptions mentioned. What costs and charges? Those of shipping the article and getting it to America. All costs and charges, except insurance and commissions, are to be put on the foreign price—what for? To get the price at home. That is the law now. We find, however, that we are deceived in these elements, we are cheated in these means, and we want to carry out the true intention of the law by getting at the price in the market, simply by going into the market and ascertaining what the price is, and thus carry out the law. That it will produce more money we know. That is the very reason we want it now; but it is to produce no more than the law intended. That is the character of that proposition.

Now, sir, with the explanation I have made about raising revenue, dismissing the idea that "raising" means "increasing," I say still that any measure which institutes means of getting money into the Treasury is a revenue measure. This amendment is evidently of that character. The mover of it does not disguise that, but he uses the argumentum ad hominem on the idea that he is going to get us to vote for this measure because he says we are inconsistent with regard to another.

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me to say to the Senator in all frankness that it is not merely an argumentum ad hominem, but I am in earnest; if we are going to spend this money, and have not got it, I want to increase the revenue, and I think the proper way to do it is to tax the free list.

Mr. COLLAMER. The gentleman does not think I wish to misrepresent him?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly not.

Mr. COLLAMER. What I meant by the argumentum ad hominem, was that the Senator must have reasoned in this way: "I am moving this not because I have a constitutional right to induct this measure in the Senate; I do not pretend that; but I mean to present it in the Senate, and then I am going to address the gentlemen on the other side who, I say, voted for such a measure yesterday to vote for this to-day in order to be consistent." That, I say, is the argument he addresses to them; not that he supports it on that ground.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Simmons.

SENATE.

A word now as to the question of order. If any point which is raised is a point which should govern a man's vote on the passage of a bill, that cannot be a question of mere order. If it enters into the merits of a bill, and determines a man's vote on the bill, it is not a matter of order. I think that is a criterion which will settle any question of this kind. If a point which is presented relates to and must affect the merits of a bill, it is something more than a question of order; but, if it is of a character which would not affect the passage of the bill in the view of the voter, then it may indeed be a question of order. Now, how is it in this case? Here is a revenue bill—for this amendment is substantially the same thing as a bill—undisguisedly presented in the Senate. The point is, can any Senator rise in his place, and say to the Chair, "I object to that as out of order?" Try that question by the test which I have just suggested: would that determine my vote on the merits of the bill? I think it would not.

If the bill was just such a revenue bill as I was satisfied was a good one upon its merits, why should I refuse to vote for it? It might indeed be a question with the other House whether they would permit us to originate a revenue bill in this way; whether they would consent to it. But if they took no exception, its origination would not affect the merits of the bill; for I agree entirely with the Senator from Connecticut that if the bill passed both Houses, it would be a valid law—though at the same time I know full well that there has been some such decision as that suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. I know that there has been a decision in New York to this effect: the constitution of New York required a two-thirds majority of the Legislature to grant a bank charter, and the question arose before their supreme court in relation to the validity of an alleged law of that State which granted a bank charter. The court looked behind the mere passage of the bill to ascertain whether it had received the constitutional majority, and ascertaining that it had not received two thirds, the supreme court decided that it was not a law. But what of that? There was an objection which entered into the very merit of the thing: the bill never had the constitutional majority; here the only question is as to the inception of the paper. In point of fact that bill never passed into a law; it never passed the House by a constitutional majority. But in this instance, would the mere fact of the inception of a bill in one House or the other, nullify its legal effect if it had been passed with the consent of both Houses by the proper constitutional majority? Certainly not at all; therefore it is not a matter which would enter properly, as I think, into the vote of a man on the merits of the bill; and hence, in my estimation, it is a proper question of order, and it is in the province of the Chair to decide it as a question of order, or to submit it to the Senate.

Mr. WADE. To me this question seems very plain; and I have wondered that it led to so much discussion. When I came into the Senate, like every other Senator, I took an oath that I would maintain the Constitution of the United States. Whenever I think a proposition in any form, or in any stage of any proceeding, is palpably unconstitutional, to me it is void; I cannot make use of it for any purpose, not even to defeat a bill to which I am opposed. Whenever I think any proposition is unconstitutional, my course of action is, "hands off;" but another gentleman may think that is constitutional which to me appears to be unconstitutional; and so every man must judge for himself.

The proposition before the Senate is, to my mind, so palpably unconstitutional that I cannot give force or effect to it in any form whatever. The Senate has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter; we can do nothing with it. That is my judgment. I understand the Constitution to prohibit us from starting such a measure. The Constitution says that bills of this kind shall originate in the House of Representatives. Then how can we originate them here? Plain as the question appears to me, however, it seems that there are other minds to which it appears differently.

I can have no difficulty about the point of order. I do not think you can sink a constitutional question into a mere question of order. I do not believe it is in the nature of it to be submitted to the Presiding Officer as a question of order; but it should enter as an element into the proceeding before the body, for each member to judge of according to his own views. I do not care how it is presented to me. If it is presented as a question of order, I will say it is out of order, because it is unconstitutional and can have no effect. If I were asked whether an unconstitutional thing was in order, I would say no; it has no business here; it can have no effect; without violating my oath I cannot entertain it at all. I do not care at what stage of the proceedings you face me with an unconstitutional proposition; if I think it unconstitutional I adjudge it void and go against it in any stage, whether you make it a question of order or leave it as an element in any proceeding, or bill, or resolution.

This amendment is presented by those who manifestly wish to defeat the bill. I hope there will be no more discussion over it. I hardly ever say anything on such questions, and probably I ought not to have said what I have on this occasion. I trust the friends of the bill will have no difficulty in voting against this proposition, whether it be presented as a question of order, or whether suffered to come to a vote on its merits or demerits.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not wish to be troublesome to the Senate, but I wish to say that in putting my question to the Senator from Vermont, I had no purpose whatever to embarrass him, or to throw him off his guard, but a bona fide purpose to see if he could show any distinction in principle between this proposition and the one which I understood him to be advocating; but he informs me that he did not vote for it yesterday. From the course of his remarks to-day defending it, I supposed he had voted for it, but I learn that he left the Senate Chamber before the vote was taken, and, therefore, did not vote at all. If I understand him now, he says there is no law or usage to justify foreign valuation.

Mr. COLLAMER. I did not say usage.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, no law. I may have misunderstood the gentleman. Then, if there be no law, I confess I am at a loss to see why the Senator from Rhode Island should have introduced a proposition to change the law. I understand that it was a proposition materially to amend the existing laws.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated, when I introduced it, that it was in strict conformity with the principles of the present law, and every law that had existed on the subject.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I must remind the gentleman of what occurred in 1833. I do not know how far back this foreign valuation has been adopted; but I remember very well, at least I read of it—and I presume the gentleman's recollection, as he was perhaps, an actor at that time, will bear me out—when Mr. Clay, in 1833, introduced, and got through the system by which ad valorem took the place of specific duties, it was provided that at the end of nine years, during which period the duties were being gradually reduced, they should come down to twenty per cent. and the home valuation. Mr. Calhoun, advocating the bill, declared that he would vote for it, but that he believed, when the time came, the home valuation would be impracticable. I ask the gentleman from Rhode Island whether that bill of 1833 did not provide for a general ad valorem system; and whether it provided for a home valuation until the nine years ran out in 1841? Am I right about that?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly. While the modification was going on from specific duties to duties strictly ad valorem, how could the home valuation prevail? It could not apply until the change was effected.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That bill provided that you should scale the duties regularly down, and make them all ad valorem; and from that time the Senator, I am sure, will remember that in every tariff we have had while there have been specific duties, there have always been ad valorems. I understand that while there were ad valorems, as he well knows, in that tariff, it left them upon the foreign valuation, and the tariff of 1842 contained a number of ad valorems. I ask the Senator if that tariff made a provision for home valuation on the ad valorems?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will tell you what the provision of the tariff of 1842 is. It is, that where there is any doubt about undervaluation you shall take the duties in the article itself.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Yes; where there is a doubt about undervaluation; but that is not meeting my question. Did that bill provide for home valuation on the ad valorems—the tariff of 1842, which I presume he had a share in passing?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir; I voted for it. The provision was that the market value should be ascertained by taking the foreign cost, and adding to it all charges, except insurance, to constitute the value of the article at the place of importation on which the duty should be assessed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Did it include freight?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it did.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My recollection is the other way; but I have not the act before me. I think it did not include the duty. The gentleman's proposition includes the duty.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the gentleman will allow me to speak five minutes, I will dispose of what I want to say.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I supposed the gentleman could answer that question, yes or no.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not been in the habit of being catechised across the Chamber.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg pardon. I asked for information. If the gentleman does not choose to answer my question, of course—

Mr. SIMMONS. I will answer any question that is put in such a form that it can be answered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, I ask whether in levying a duty on the ad valorems in the tariff of 1846, it added the duty as a component part of the value, as in the Senator's proposition, or not?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will answer. I say if the Senator had understood my proposition, he would have known that it did not add the duty. I stated in it that the home value should be taken, the market value to include so much of the elements of cost as entered into the value. Does that assume that the duty enters into the value? Suppose the market value of the article should be cheaper in New York than at the place of exportation, would it include the duty then? The Senator takes it for granted that nothing is imported and sold here but what pays every item that is an element of cost.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understand all that; but we can arrive at it in this way: the Senator from Rhode Island says that the duty did not enter into the price; but in estimating the value of iron at New York, for example, they will say, "this bar-iron is worth so much if you pay the duty; but if I pay the duty, or duty paid, it is worth so much in the market." Now, which of these statements did the gentleman intend by his proposition the other day to arrive at? I understood him to take the market value of the iron, for example, in New York, the duty being paid.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not intend to be drawn into any discussion on this question. I think I understand the purpose of the amendment, and the object of the discussion. It is to embarrass the passage of these measures; and, for one, when I see such a purpose manifested, people may attack me from one side of this Chamber or the other, but I shall keep my seat, if possible. But as the Senator from North Carolina avows a purpose of merely asking questions for information, I will answer him as candidly as I know how to do. There has always been a difficulty in the minds of those who wanted to get rid of paying duties, who wanted to lessen duties, in coming at what is the market value of an article; and one great reason of it is that they generally illustrate by putting a question about some article of merchandise that they do not know anything about, and that the Senate knows nothing about. Generally they put such a question as was put by the Senator from Mississippi: "Suppose rice should be imported into California from China, and no rice of that kind came into New York?"

Mr. DAVIS. I did not say "suppose." I said Chinese rice was a large importation into San Francisco.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have always found very many of these practical difficulties. Now the

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Pugh.

SENATE.

Senator from North Carolina says there is a price in New York for iron, so much duty paid, and so much duty not paid. I should like to hear him read a quotation of that kind in any paper he ever saw. You never saw the market value in New York stated in that way, but the price is stated after everything has been paid, whether the article be free or dutiable. Then people may go on and reason, if this is the actual price, and the duty on it by law is so much, the price would be so much less if there was no duty. That is a matter of reasoning. There is no difficulty in determining the market price of an article, and nobody could misunderstand it if familiar with the article. The only difficulty, and the only strange thing I see in all this discussion about taking the market price at the principal market of our own country, is that people seem to think they can tell a great deal better what a thing is worth in a country they know nothing about, and about the currency of which they know nothing, and that they can never get at any instrument by which they can tell the price in their own country, and in their own coin. That has been argued here at great length.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The Senator from Rhode Island has substantially answered my question. He now says his proposition was to take the iron at the selling price in New York. That includes, of course, whatever addition may be made to its value by the duty, which may be much or little. He asks if ever I knew the price stated with reference to duty paid or not paid. I can tell the Senator that railroad companies of my State have imported iron, and sometimes buy it at a certain price, paying the duty themselves, or they pay a larger price, and the person from whom they buy it pays the duty. My object was to arrive at that result. He admits that his proposition was to take bar-iron, for example, at its selling price in New York. That obviously, as every Senator knows, will be affected by the duty.

The Senator says that some article is referred to, that the person referring to it knows nothing about, and the Senate knows nothing about. I do not know a great deal about bar-iron; whether the Senate knows much about it or not, other gentlemen can judge as well as I; but the effect of my question is fully obvious to the Senate, on the Senator's explanation. He takes the selling price of iron in New York, and that is from forty dollars a ton and upwards, and the foreign price at Liverpool is about fifty per cent. lower. Since the tariff of 1846 has been in operation, under the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury and the usages of the Government the duties are ascertained on the foreign price; and therefore there is no fraud in any importer adopting it. The idea is thrown out that the Senator's proposition was merely a measure to remedy frauds; but there is not one of those who supported it who, if he was importing iron himself, would hesitate to adopt the foreign value, or who would hesitate to tell his constituents that they were practicing no fraud in adopting it. If that be the case, it is idle to be professing to strike at frauds, when the feature struck at is no fraud, but the intention of the law, as at present explained, and as the gentleman admits, substantially the intention of the ad valorem system in 1833, and 1842, for he does not urge that the system which he now proposes was then adopted. My object, therefore, was to show that the very provision for which gentlemen on the other side voted yesterday, would have increased the duty fifty per cent. on some bulky articles. I took iron, and if that be the case, I think it was liable to the very objection now made; it was increasing the duties or taxes. If by any form of language we can increase the taxes, or duties, it is a bill like this of the Senator from Mississippi to raise revenue. I am free to admit that I am opposed to his proposition; I do not think the Senate can originate such a bill; but I think the objection lay with equal force on the other side of the Chamber, and therefore I put the question to the Senator from Vermont with great respect, to see whether I was in error on this point, and whether or not the distinction existed. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island has been able to show any valid distinction in principle between the present proposition and the one which received so large a vote yesterday.

I beg the Senate's pardon for having taken so much time, when I did not intend to embark in the debate originally.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is: Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi in order?

The amendment was decided not to be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PUGH.]

Mr. POLK. I wish to take out of the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio that part of it which provides an appropriation for completing the St. Clair flats.

Mr. STUART. It is rather premature to propose that now.

Mr. POLK. I do not wish to offer it now, but I desire to indicate my intention to propose that amendment, because I cannot vote for anything in this proposition except the improvement of the St. Clair flats.

Mr. BIGLER. I understand the question to be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. Of course, the Senator from Missouri can move an amendment to that if he chooses. If he does not do so, I propose to amend the amendment by striking out two items. I first propose to strike out that which is known as Senate bill No. 363, as the bills stand on the Calendar, making appropriations for unforeseen contingencies of lake harbors. The words that I move to strike out are:

"And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 for unforeseen contingencies of lake harbors, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It is only a way of defeating the whole proposition.

Mr. CLAY. I think it is worth while to have the yeas and nays on this amendment. There are Senators on the other side of the Chamber who generally object to allowing any discretion to the Executive Departments in the expenditure of money. They have preferred sometimes, as I thought, just complaints against a Department for the exercise of some discretion in the expenditure of money. They constantly complain about deficiency bills. Now, the Department which has the supervision of these works, has sent these estimates to us and proposes that we shall give a margin of $20,000 over and above these appropriations, to provide for unforeseen contingencies. I think it is a fair time to test the fidelity of some gentlemen to the principles they profess as governing their action here; and therefore I ask that the yeas and nays be taken.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PUGH. I wish to ask the Senator from Alabama a single question. I ask him whether, when he reported this bill, he reported it upon an estimate from one of the Departments?

Mr. CLAY. I did. They did not furnish any details at all; but in reply to the question which I addressed, by instruction of the Committee of Commerce, they returned me an estimate of the funds demanded for certain works, and at the close of those they say: "For unforeseen contingencies of lake harbors, $20,000."

Mr. PUGH. That is the item. I think it is safe enough.

Mr. IVERSON. I ask whether the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, which proposes to throw all these various improvements together in one bill, is not divisible, and whether we cannot call for a division, and a separate vote on each item?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. IVERSON. Then I call for a division, and ask for the yeas and nays on the first item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DAVIS. Before taking the vote, I merely wish to say that the expression, "the estimate of the Department," conveys to the country at large, and frequently to the ears of Senators, a sentiment which is not just. As I understand the case, the Department has not sent any estimate, has not asked for any appropriation; but when called upon by a committee to state what money is required for a particular work, they send back the estimate made in a bureau as an answer to the committee, in dollars and cents, to the questions which they put—not an estimate from the Department in the sense in which we ordinarily use the term.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Hammond, Hayne, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Rice, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Chandler, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Jones, Kennedy, King, Pugh, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BIGLER. I propose to amend the amendment in another point. It is due to myself to say that I voted in committee against reporting the items which I move to strike out. I now move to strike out of this amendment the item known as Senate bill No. 346, making appropriations for the completion of the improvements of the Red river raft.

Mr. POLK. I understood the effect of the call by the Senator from Georgia for a separate vote on each of these items as obviating the necessity of such an amendment as that of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. IVERSON. I was very much disposed, a little while ago, to call for that division, for this is exceedingly nauseating medicine to me; and to cram it down a man's throat at a single dose, seems to me rather hard. I prefer to take it in broken doses. I think we had better take one question at a time; but I suppose it is very much like it was when I was a child, and was sick, and my mother was administering medicine to me, she poked the jalap and calomel at me, and I would shudder and revolt; but she would say, "you must take it, my son; the doctor says it is good for you." I presume the doctors on the other side of the House, and especially the great doctor from New York say, "you will have to take it; it is good for you;" and therefore, I will withdraw my motion to divide, and take it all down at a single gulp. [Laughter.]

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from Georgia gave us a very large dose when the Savannah river was up, it will be recollected. [Laughter.]

Mr. IVERSON. I deny that I ever gave that. The Senator does not represent the facts.

Mr. PUGH. I recollect the Senator's speech; I do not recollect his vote.

Mr. IVERSON. The appropriation for the Savannah river was made at a time when I was not in Congress. The proposition which I made, was simply to change the direction of the appropriation, and not to appropriate a cent.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from Mississippi, as Secretary of War, decided that it could not be used for that purpose; and it was practically the same thing as appropriating the money over again. The Senator could not have got a cent of it without a reappropriation.

Mr. IVERSON. I voted against that very appropriation in the other House.

Mr. SEWARD. The Senator from Georgia will admit that I am very good in taking my own medicine, though administered by southern hands; I vote for the Red river raft.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foster in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to strike out of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio the following words:

"And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 for completing the improvement in the raft region of Red river, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. PUGH. This is the only one of the provisions reported by the Committee on Commerce for an improvement within the southern States, and I hope that my friends on the other side, if they strike this provision out of the bill, will have nothing more to say on the subject of its being a sectional appropriation. I have only taken those items which the committee reported. If I had made my own selection, I would have named several other rivers in the South; but I warn them this is the only one they have in my amendment; and if they choose to strike it out, it is their own affair.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Internal Improvements—Mr. Crittenden.

SENATE.

Mr. MASON. I have not looked at the proposition, but if the Senator represents it correctly, and there is but one appropriation in it for the whole South, I ask what could be more sectional than it is before striking out this item?

Mr. PUGH. I stated to the Senate that I had not offered to introduce any bill for beginning or continuing a work; but the Committee on Commerce have reported to us from the War Department certain estimates for the protection and preservation of works already commenced, and this is the only one they have reported for the South. I wish there were two or three more in the southern States.

Mr. TOOMBS. I differ with the Senator from New York. I do not take measures like this any more in the South than in the North. Believing the system to be essentially wrong both in principle and in policy, I would apply the same rule to the Red river as to the northern lakes. It is said that these items are all in accordance with the estimates of the Department, and have been reported by the Committee on Commerce. So far as their being reported is concerned, it was done in obedience to an almost peremptory order of the Senate. A majority of the committee, of which majority I was not one, determined to report them; I would never have reported one of them. You might have taken the bills out of committee so far as I was concerned, but I would never agree to report one of them. This measure is probably about as good as the Chicago improvement, according to the account of the Senator from Illinois, only probably a little worse. I have no idea that the work will ever be finished. They have been drawing out the logs from Red river for the last twenty years. I suppose the improvement will have its incidental advantages to the people of the United States. Perhaps, it will benefit the wool-grower in Vermont, because the people in the Red river region will want woolen clothes. Working in the water and spending $110,000 there, will help the wool of Vermont! That is the idea now; but as for this improvement helping anybody in the region where it is made, that is a delusion. I have paid some attention to it, for it is an old customer; it has been here ever since I have been in Congress. I suppose if you spent a $1,000,000 and got this raft out, you might have good navigation for two or three months of the year, but the first flood that came would bring the logs all back again. It is the same case with these other works.

The truth about the Chicago harbor seems to be that if you run your pier out into the lake three hundred yards this year, you must run it out five hundred next year, and seven hundred the next year, and so on until you run it across the lake. If you are to throw away money for the benefit of particular localities, I want a fair division. If you are going to distribute money in this way, you ought to distribute it more generally over the United States, north as well as south. Nine tenths of the bills which have been reported, I think are for the lakes. The enterprising gentleman from New York, imagines that he is serving his constituents by getting a large amount of money spent in that State. I think he will be able, by the aid of the Senate, to protect Gerrit Smith's wharf property; and no doubt he would vote $800,000 with much more pleasure than $80,000; but I think the people of the North had better look to these schemes. Not one of these bills is for New England unless they suppose they are to be generally benefited by taking money from the public Treasury and spending it somewhere. I do not see any other advantage they have.

If you go on the idea of sections, as my friend from Ohio seems to do, the injustice is still more apparent; but this is not a sectional question. This system is as much plunder of the agriculturist and laboring man in New York as in Georgia, but the idea is put forth that it is a sectional question, so as to combine the North, I think southern men have done injury to this and other questions, by charging them to be northern measures, and therefore making a great many northern people believe that they are benefited by them. In fact they are as injurious to a man in one portion of the United States as in another, unless he is located immediately at the spot where the public money is expended or has wharves to be protected. There is not a particle of difference between the Massachusetts man and the Georgian in that respect.

Not one of these bills is for the Atlantic coast. It is a singular fact that the engineer department, when called upon to state what amounts were necessary to preserve existing works, sent in estimates nearly altogether for the lakes. I think the majority of the committee determined to report these bills because they fell within the principle of preserving existing works. I know that, at the last Congress, the Senate passed above sixty bills, all of which failed in the House of Representatives, except five, and I think they were all for continuing existing improvements; at least that was the policy on which they started. I resisted them then one by one as I came to them, as I shall do in this case so far as I think it necessary to bring public attention to them. This is a mere conspiracy, if I may so term it. It is not by any means sectional, but it is appealing to local interests. The gentlemen who live on the Ohio and the Mississippi unite with those who live on the lakes as a general rule, and all others having rivers in their neighborhood that they want improved.

Where these improvements are to be made, a large amount of public opinion is manufactured by those who have wharves to protect and town lots to sell. A combination is made to get money out of the Treasury. It is not sectional at all; it extends all over the United States. The Arkansas river has had appropriations from time to time; and so has the Red river, and the mouth of the Mississippi. At the last Congress it was proposed to appropriate $600,000, I think, or it may have been $900,000, to complete the improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi; but it was reduced to $300,000 for one year, and in that form passed, over a presidential veto. I have noticed that the votes of members are affected according to their locations on the rivers or at the harbors proposed to be improved. This is the general rule; it is not universal, for some few who live there do not support the system. In New England, for many years past there have been very few of these improvements; many of their harbors are very good ones. Take New Hampshire; her port is a fine one; it needs nothing to be done. Maine has some very good ports, and occasionally they get an appropriation for some of them; and all along down the shore they come in for shares. This time the western rivers are left out. I do not think the Ohio gets anything now.

Mr. PUGH. Not a cent.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Ohio river is quiet this time. They either have stopped mending the works or they are not amendable—they are not even within the statute of jeofails, and I think that will be the case with a great many of your improvements, on which you have spent twenty or thirty million dollars. Where are the monuments to the skill of Congress in improving rivers and harbors? According to the accounts we receive, all these works are in the most dilapidated condition; we are called upon to appropriate for them now, immediately, quickly, instantly, at the heel of the session; and the Senator from New York wants the session prolonged, because if aid is not given now, this moment, the works will go to utter ruin. These are the magnificent monuments to the genius and wisdom of that policy by which you attempt to build up these improvements from the public money. The most lamentable account of a set of rickety, broken down, inefficient works the world ever saw, you will find in the reports of the condition of these improvements. Everything is washed away; everything is broken down; and unless you do something instantly the whole thing will be ruined. That is the history of these works. That is the reason of it. Because you have attempted to make ports where nature made none; because you have attempted to improve rivers, when, according to any known plan, it was impossible to improve them; and the only effect has been to put money in the pockets of contractors and others, to spend it in localities.

I want an opportunity to record my testimony against the Red river improvement. I wish there was a bill for the Arkansas, having a more immediate interest of my own on the banks of that river, that I might vote against it; but I will take the nearest to it—the Red river. I vote against them all, in whole and in detail, singly and together. Of course I would put in a hundred more works, if I could hurt the bill by doing so; but I despair of being able to break down the bill in that way. I believe the more money you get into such a bill, the stronger it would be with the great body of the coalition of Black Republicans and what I consider fishy Democrats, who sustain these measures. I may be one of that class of Democrats myself, [laughter,] but I say that is the coalition which has carried these measures for two or three years past.

Mr. HOUSTON. From some little knowledge of the Red river, I am inclined to think that all the money you have spent on it for the last twenty years has been thrown away, and the river has been always getting worse. From the time of Shreve, all the efforts that have been made to improve the river have been unavailing; and I am inclined to think the result of spending the $110,000 now proposed to be appropriated for it, will result in the same way. If you want to spend money on the southern waters, I could point out some that would really be benefited by an appropriation; but this is a most inauspicious time to revive the old experiments on Red river. They have died out, been resuscitated, and died out again. There has been a succession of deaths and resurrections of projects to throw away money on Red river. I must confess that I am not in favor of it. I have not had an opportunity of consulting the Senators or Representatives from Louisiana; but this river is a boundary to the State in which I reside and represent, and it is very strange that I should not have gained some information about it. I should be very glad if the bill were laid over for the present—unless there is some urgent reason to the contrary—and that it be allowed to lie on the table until I can look into the matter, and see what amount has been unavailingly expended, and what is necessary to complete it according to the report of the engineers, and who the engineers were, and what plan is to produce the advantage they anticipate. I hope the bill will be suffered to lie over for the present.

Mr. ALLEN. As one of the members of the Committee on Commerce, I have to state that $3,500,000, or more, were applied for, for repairs and extensions of works, and the committee considered that an appropriation of that amount could not possibly be made in the present situation of the Treasury. Accordingly, they requested the War Department to inform them what sum would be necessary to keep in repair works already in existence; and the Department sent a communication, on which the committee have acted, and reported bills to the amount of about five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I have, for many years, voted for appropriations to clear out the Red river; but I am entirely unacquainted with the effects that have been produced by the attempts to remove the raft, and render the river navigable. If any gentleman has any such information, I should like to receive it; for, though I think navigable rivers are very proper subjects for all the improvements we can bestow on them within our reasonable means; yet I am not disposed to vote a single dollar that cannot be usefully applied. I came to the conclusion, some years ago, that it was impracticable to remove this raft; that you might, for a little time, open a way for a boat; but that the next flood would close it up again; and that it would be infinitely cheaper to make a canal, or adopt any other mode of transportation, than to be at the continually recurring expense of opening through the raft a passage for boats. I do not know what has been done, nor do I know what this $110,000 will accomplish; and on that subject I desire information before I vote.

Mr. DAVIS. I cannot state the present condition of the work, but I can probably give the Senator from Kentucky some part of the information he desires. He will remember that many years ago an appropriation was made, and a steamboat captain of much energy, Captain Shreve, was employed to clear out the raft, and so far effected it as to make a passage through the raft for one or more boats to pass through. It was a very narrow passage, whereas the raft is a great island of interlaced logs, with some shrubs and pretty large trees growing upon it. Immediately thereafter, the logs from the sides of the raft joining with those borne down by the next flood, filled up the passage. Some other appropriations were made of such small amounts as really to effect nothing. In 1852, an appropriation was made, I think, of $100,000: my memory is never very accurate about numbers, but I think that was the sum. It devolved on me in another capacity to seek a contractor to remove the raft with that appropriation. Advertisements were issued, and proposals were invited from persons who were said to have studied the subject, and had some peculiar facilities for removing the raft; but I could never get a contractor who, for the amount appropriated, was able to give bond that he could complete the work, and I did not choose to give him a dollar with a knowledge that I should have to come to Congress for more. After various attempts, it was found fruitless to get a contractor; and, on the matter being reported to Congress, the act was changed, and power was then given to the Secretary of War to apply the money in any manner for the improvement of the navigation of Red river through or around the raft.

Upon an examination and report by a gentleman of some reputation as a civil engineer, and who is now in charge of the work, it appeared that instead of attempting to remove the raft, it would be better to clear out a bayou through which there was already a partial navigation, and which ran out of Red river above the raft, and into Red river again below the raft. They commenced the improvement of this bayou, which consisted in removing logs and stumps, and some little dredging where it expanded into a kind of lake. The work is not yet completed; I believe the appropriation is not exhausted. My expectation was, that the money on hand would make the bayou navigable into Red river above the raft; but I had no doubt it would be necessary at a subsequent period to make another appropriation, on account of the extension of the raft, which, constantly extending up the river, would finally pass the head of the bayou. Some provision was made for catching the logs as they came down the river, and transferring them into a sort of basin or natural lake, lying on each side. This would require an annual expenditure. Sometimes there are two floods in the river, and when that is the case, it would require twice in each year an expenditure of money to catch the logs and take them out of the river into some place of safety. I think the navigation may, in the manner I have stated, be made feasible for a large portion of the year for a small class of steamboats.

I would say further, that the Red river, as it runs now, is higher than the country for some distance west of it, and there is a seeming inclination of the river to find its way through bayous, and possibly to cut a new channel. I think it would have been possible, with a very large amount of money, to remove the raft; but it was not possible to do it for the amount which was appropriated, and I do not believe it was possible to remove the raft for an amount which could judiciously have been appropriated for that purpose.

I am a little struck, however, with the exception which is made to this particular improvement. The reason for taking out this particular work from the general class is, that it is not to preserve and keep in repair work already done. It is as much so as the others. You must prevent the accumulation of the raft and its extension above the bayou, which now constitutes the whole navigation; and it is as much the keeping of the navigation around the raft in repair, as the binding together of the stone piers you have built with new crib-work at the harbors along the lakes. It is additional work in order that you may keep up a navigation which has been created by artificial means. They are all subject to the same objection. It is a mere pretext to say that you are keeping a work in repair when you are in fact renewing the construction.

When the Government has generously gone into the wilderness and made a harbor where nature had made none, and upon that harbor has grown a great city; for that city, with its wealth, to come here annually and ask for appropriations to keep up its piers, seems to me more objectionable than that this region, lying, as it does, in a frontier position, should come here in its poverty, and ask aid to its navigation. Yet that is not a plea which I could make; it is not a reason on which I could ever cast a vote; but if there is any one measure in the whole list which may be excepted from the objection that we are making to the bills as a whole, it is the particular work which it is now proposed to strike out. It runs into the Indian country; the navigation leads to your frontier military posts, kept there as a cover to the frontier settlements, and to control the Indians. If that navigation were open as high as the mouth of the False Washita or Preston, it would greatly diminish the expense of keeping your military forces on the upper waters of the Red river. It might, therefore, be put on the ground of means of access to the frontier for military purposes, and hence it might be made an exception, which you might take out of the bill for the purpose of voting for it separately, when you were going to vote against the bill. But that the friends of the whole class of measures should take this one out on the mere pretext that it is not keeping a work in repair, and endeavor to discriminate against it, surprises me.

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator will allow me to suggest that I think he has misapprehended the friends of the whole class of these measures. No person here has taken that exception. The motion comes from the honorable Senator behind him, [Mr. BIGLER.] No person on this side of the Chamber, I know, has responded to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make a single remark; and I shall not continue my observations on the subject. The Senator who sits behind me, and who, I am very glad to say, is my friend, does not happen to be with me on this question. This seems to be a question that upheaves party distinctions.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not see that it does.

Mr. DAVIS. I scarcely know how to find a Democrat on the question of internal improvements.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not know about the Democrats.

Mr. DAVIS. A certain portion of them seem always to me, somehow or other, to get seduced into the camp of the enemy; and I know how hopeless it is to struggle against a great scheme, in which a variety of local interests are combined, to obtain a large sum of money out of the Treasury. Were my strength greater, my prudence would warn me not to make the attempt.

Mr. GWIN. I have no doubt that this is the most meritorious measure which has been brought before the Senate in connection with river and harbor improvements. The navigation of the Red river for two or three hundred miles above this obstruction is very good, and this raft is the only difficulty in the way of navigation from the mouth of the Red river, certainly up to the mouth of the False Washita, or even perhaps higher. It runs into a section of country where we now have to transport munitions of war at great expense, and in the direction of a region where the Indians are most warlike and commit the most depredations on our frontier settlements.

Gentlemen speak of this as a sectional question. Why, sir, there never was a more partial set of measures than these bills. In the whole series there is not a single dime proposed to be appropriated for the Pacific coast, where we have two thousand miles of sea-coast and interior rivers that need improvement. It is said these measures are for the repair of works already commenced by the Government. Well, sir, five or six years ago an appropriation of $30,000 was made for the purpose of preserving the harbor of San Diego, one of the most beautiful harbors within the boundaries of the United States. It was being destroyed by the San Diego river having broken through an obstruction which formerly existed, and washing the sand into the harbor and filling it up, instead of going through False bay, its former mouth, into the ocean. That work was progressed with to a certain point; it was not completed; and what was done there has been of great injury to the harbor, because the works are being washed into the harbor and are filling it up rapidly. If there is any case where it is necessary to appropriate money to preserve work that has been done heretofore, certainly that is one; and when the War Department was called upon to report the works for the preservation of which an appropriation should be made, that was one of those which ought to have been sent in; but, as I said before, that coast is left out entirely in these appropriations. That is the justice accorded to us.

Mr. BIGLER. I had not supposed, Mr. President, that the question of improving rivers and harbors, either making new work or extending work that had been commenced, or repairing or protecting improvements already made, ever had been considered a question of Democracy. I have not so understood it. I could not so understand it, looking at its history long before I came here as a member of this body. I do not recollect ever to have seen a distinct party vote on the subject. It is a question of policy, of expediency, on which statesmen may differ. It may be a question of constitutional power. It may be one of policy for one section of the Union, and not policy for another. It is generally understood to be a part of our commercial policy. I recollect that in the last Congress members of this body who stood high in the Democratic party advocated large appropriations to commence new works and to extend improvements of this character. I have not favored an extension of the system; but I have a settled aversion to sudden, impulsive changes of the policy of the Government.

It is not for me to attempt to inquire at this day whether these improvements were necessary for commerce; whether the policy has been a wise one. I have regarded it as part of our commercial system, which had been adopted and cherished from the foundation of the Government. I am not certain that it ought to be continued; but in deciding to vote in favor of reporting the necessary measures to protect the works which we have, I was controlled mainly by the consideration that it was unwise to change suddenly a policy which the Government had so long embraced. As stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALLEN,] the report of the topographical bureau to the War Department asked appropriations of $3,500,000, to extend and construct new improvements of rivers and harbors. I was not willing, in the present depressed condition of our finances, to report in favor of new works, or the extension of new improvements; but I was willing, and I did vote to report bills for such repairs as seemed to be necessary to protect, for a time at least, the improvements which had been heretofore made.

Now, sir, I differ with my honorable friend from Mississippi in reference to this Red river improvement. I do not believe it falls within that class which the instructions of the Senate contemplated. If I recollect aright, the resolution of the Senate was for repairs. The Senator's own showing is, that this work is never to cease; that, from its very character, the improvement which is constructed one year is to be destroyed the next, and so the work is to be perpetual. I consider such a work impracticable. I do not confine my objection to the idea that it is to commence new works, or complete a work instead of repairing one. From what I knew of it before I heard of it here, and from what I heard in committee, I came to the conclusion that it was an impracticable scheme, did not fall within the instructions of the Senate, was not an appropriation for repairs, but to prosecute a hopeless enterprise which would be continued year after year. I shall be very slow to vote for the entire bill, if I am requested to include this Red river appropriation. I think I stated in committee, that I would hold my opinion in reserve on that point; I do so now. My judgment is clear that this $110,000 will be thrown away if it be appropriated. I move to strike it out, as I intend to move to strike out every appropriation which I think not pressing necessary, with a view of voting for the bill. I shall not trouble the Senate further.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Appropriations for Lake Harbors—Mr. Goodwin.

HO. OF REPS.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Pennsylvania puts me in the attitude of a prophet, which I am not willing to occupy. I did not say the work on this improvement would never cease; but that I did not know when it would. It certainly will cease, whenever the logs shall be prevented from coming down, at a remote day.

Mr. BIGLER. I did not intend to make my language too strong, so as to misrepresent the honorable Senator, nor to dignify him with the position of a prophet; but I thought the case so strong that, in measuring matters of finance, I might say the expenditure would never cease. I have had some experience myself in this kind of improvement.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him when the logs that make the crib-work and form the piers of the lake harbors are going to quit rotting? That is what your appropriations are for now; the logs have decayed and you want to put in new ones.

Mr. BIGLER. That is a question which can be answered, and it will be answered, in reference to each specific item. If you had live oak below the water, I should say it never would rot.

Mr. DAVIS. But at the surface, between wind and water?

Mr. BIGLER. That depends on the character of the timber, and when it is cut. Some of it will last ten years and another kind of timber will not last two.

Mr. DAVIS. I want the Senator to inform the Senate how one work is interminable and the other is terminable? and when he gets through the decaying timber and makes it perennial, then I should like to know when the sands that constitute the deposits now floating against those piers and forming bars at the end of the piers, such as existed before the piers were built, are to cease their eternal roll down the lake? and beyond that, as I do not wish to trouble the Senator again, I would ask him when he expects to get through with those questions which involve the interference of the General Government with the State sovereignty, and which have arisen constantly on the claims of riparian proprietors at every one of those works along Lake Erie?

Mr. BIGLER. It is very easy to distinguish between the character of the works to which I referred, and this Red river improvement. I had reference to superstructure, to piers which will last, under ordinary circumstances, ten, twelve, fifteen, or twenty years; but they will require slight repairs. Now, the distinction which I make is this: the Red river is found, in its natural condition, entirely impassable to steam navigation. You may repair it one season, and the next season you find it in its natural condition, from natural causes. That is what I mean by a work never to be completed.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question, with his consent. I understand him to acknowledge the constitutionality of these appropriations for the regulation and protection of commerce between the States. Does he think the duty of Congress is exhausted in one year or in two years?

Mr. BIGLER. Certainly not.

Mr. PUGH. What objection is it, then, that an improvement has to be renewed and continued? The duty of Congress continues.

Mr. BIGLER. I made no allusion to any constitutional question. The honorable Senator from Ohio misunderstood me. In that connection, I spoke of it as a question of expediency, of utility. However constitutional it may be, is there any wisdom in prosecuting a work that does not answer the purpose intended?

Mr. GWIN. I differ entirely with the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Senator from Mississippi, about the practicability of making the Red river navigable around the falls; for the obstruction of the raft is not only on account of the deposit of timber, but the obstruction is not greater than the falls of the Ohio.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend from California has misapprehended me. I said, or intended to say, that not being able to execute the task of removing the raft, with the money appropriated, the work was undertaken to clear out the bayou near the raft, so as to come out of the main channel of the Red river above the raft, and enter into it below the raft, which would require an expenditure of money to prevent the raft extending itself up the Red river, until it closed the mouth of the bayou.

Mr. GWIN. I have been in that country, and when I was in Congress before, I always looked upon it as an exception; and I always thought that if there was anything really national in improving rivers and harbors, it was the removal of that raft. It was most important at that time, for a large portion of the country beyond it then, did not belong to the United States. Texas was a foreign country, and we had to have military posts on the frontier there, and transport military supplies to the Indian country. This work was then on the western borders of the Republic, and it was looked upon as a national work. I have not a solitary doubt, but that in time it may require a large sum of money, but not anything approaching what we appropriate here to keep our Navy and our Army in marching order for the purpose of preserving peace on the frontier and with foreign nations, in any one year, to make a perfect system of navigation through the raft or around the raft. I think it is one of the most meritorious works. It was commenced many years ago, and if it had been prosecuted with vigor, steamboats would now be running there, as they do around the falls of the Ohio, and the work is as necessary to that section of the country and as useful to the whole Union as any other for which you appropriate money.

The country above the raft is one of the finest in the United States, extending for hundreds of miles. It will soon be densely populated, and would be now but for the Indian territory north of the Red river. It is a splendid country. I traveled over it many years ago, and I know what it is. One of the difficulties in new portions of the country is, that you will not give us any appropriations to clear out our rivers and harbors, because we have not had a survey; and then you will not give us an appropriation for a survey, so that we are never to have any. There is an obstruction in the Sacramento river, in my own State, over which millions of commerce pass, that is every year becoming more and more a hindrance to navigation simply for the want of a dredging machine. Thirty millions of gold pass down that river for the purpose of benefiting this section of the country, and we cannot get an appropriation for its improvement, because we have not had a survey. I intend, at the proper time, to offer a resolution in this language:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation to complete the works already commenced for the improvement of the harbor of San Diego; and, also, to survey the rivers and harbors of the State of California.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know that I shall wish to say anything on this improvement; but if so, I should like to understand it better than I did when I made my remarks before. I am satisfied that it is inexpedient to make the appropriation, and that the best way it could be applied would be to take the money and throw it over this raft, and set the people to digging for it there. They might by that means get it out; but if you let one contractor, or a dozen contractors, have it, you will never get the work done. Put the money on the raft, and people will get it, and in getting the money, they will remove the obstacle, and in that way the river will be opened, otherwise it will never be opened. Now I move that the Senate adjourn, and I will finish to-morrow.

Mr. SEWARD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Shields, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bigler, Broderick, Chandler, Dixon, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Jones, King, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is unusually late, and I really can see no particular urgency for the passage of this measure now. I think we should expedite business as much by adjourning at the usual hour, and coming here refreshed in the morning, instead of coming half exhausted, having our official business to transact and our correspondence to maintain after we return from the Senate and get some refreshment. I am not in the habit of taking a lunch here; I wish that understood. I think we might get along as well by adjourning now. This is said to be a measure of peculiar and of great advantage to a lovely section of country, most desirable for occupation, with every fine prospect possible for the completion of the work at an early day, and a wise investment of the sum proposed to be appropriated, $110,000. Let me read an extract from the intelligent report of the Secretary of War:

"The prosecution of this improvement has been attended with numerous embarrassments of a character to retard its progress, and greatly to enhance its cost. Among the impediments in the way of its advancement, the insalubrity of the raft district, the difficulty of procuring and retaining laborers, the scarcity and consequent high prices of provisions and labor, and the sickness and frequent desertions of the employes, are the most considerable. Efficient laborers, white or black, could not be obtained at a cost less than thirty dollars per month for each hand, besides their board, and, in most cases, their conveyance from remote points.

"The progress of this work, from the beginning of the last fiscal year to the 1st of September, 1856, has been set forth, in details sufficiently copious, in my annual report of that date, and in the documents appended thereto. The operations subsequently performed are sufficiently explained in the annual report of agent Fuller, hereto appended." (See Appendix, Doc. No. 8.)

We have not had an opportunity of examining these documents; but they are doubtless very important, and would shed a great deal of light on this subject.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the Senator give way for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SEWARD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Although I made the motion, I shall not vote for it, because I have paired off with the Senator from Maine, Mr. FESSENDEN.

Mr. BROWN. I have paired off with the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. SHIELDS.

Mr. FOOT. I have paired off with the Senator from Florida, Mr. MALLORY.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bigler, Bright, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Hayne, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Kennedy, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Reid, Rice, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Chandler, Collamer, Durkee, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, King, Pugh, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—18.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR LAKE HARBORS.

REMARKS OF HON. H. C. GOODWIN,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. GOODWIN said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The commerce of the north-western lakes—those great inland seas—both from its national importance, the vast amount of capital invested, and the number of vessels and men employed, has come to be one of the important and leading interests of the country: as such it justly demands the care and attention of the Government. The Committee on Commerce both of the House and Senate have reported several bills making appropriations for the preservation of various harbors on these lakes; absolutely necessary for the protection of this extensive commerce, and without which the Government works at those points will be almost entirely destroyed, and the trade and business of a large section of the country seriously injured. I ask the attention of the House while with as few words as possible, I submit some plain facts and suggestions for its consideration in relation to this subject. Here allow me to remark that the principle and policy involved in these appropriations in behalf of our internal

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Appropriations for Lake Harbors—Mr. Goodwin.

HO. OF REPS.

commerce have been sanctioned by the action of nearly every Administration down to the present time; they received the practical approval of the administrations of Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson. The question now presented, is not, whether the Government will originate these works and continue these improvements, but simply whether the Government will, after expending millions in establishing these improvements; allow them to be destroyed and its money lost, for the want of small appropriations to save them from destruction? Whether this trade and commerce shall be in a great measure paralyzed, or enabled to contribute to the revenues and the wealth and prosperity of the country?

ITS EXTENT AND IMPORTANCE.

From the report made by the Committee on Commerce in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, and from other sources of information, I find that the value of the commerce of these lakes in 1855 was more than six hundred and thirty million dollars; I also have the figures to show that the lake tonnage constitutes one-fifteenth of the entire tonnage of the United States; and for the last few years the ratio of its increase has been more than double that of our ocean tonnage. I also find that the clearances of vessels from ports in the United States to Canada and entries from ports in Canada to ports in the United States for the year 1855, were greater in amount of tonnage than between the United States and any other foreign country. The value of our trade with Canada, carried on mainly over these lakes, is greater than with any other foreign country, excepting England and France; and this trade is rapidly increasing. The coast line of these lakes on the American side is eighteen hundred and sixty miles, and they have an average breadth of about forty seven miles. This lake shipping has also access to Lake Superior, opening new and rich avenues of trade and commerce which will rapidly increase in value and extent.

REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES.

In the discussion a few days ago in relation to the extravagant expenditures of the Government, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] seemed to include in that term those bills making appropriations for lake harbors, and for river navigation. Now, sir, I will briefly refer to this point. From 1837 to 1855, inclusive, the revenue derived from duties on imports at the various ports on the great lakes amount to $5,713,129 98. The total amount appropriated by the Government for the improvement of the navigation of these lakes, from the beginning to 1855, inclusive, is $2,884,125, less than has been appropriated for a custom-house at New Orleans; surplus revenue received by the United States, $2,829,004 98.

The following table will show the amounts of duties collected at the different points on the lakes from 1837 to 1855:

Oswego.....	$1,296,932 00
Genesee.....	159,866 26
Niagara.....	224,651 84
Buffalo Creek.....	615,295 62
Oswegatchie.....	189,150 84
Champlain.....	558,763 91
Cape Vincent.....	150,626 38
Presque Isle.....	8,504 51
Miami.....	320,561 87
Sandusky.....	246,469 73
Cuyahoga.....	530,331 65
Detroit.....	218,695 43
Michilinauckinac.....	10,876 61
Chicago.....	1,044,917 96
Milwaukee.....	137,485 45

It will be found, by examination, that the Government has realized from this commerce a handsome income over and above all expenditures and expenses.

But, sir, I do not ask for these appropriations because of the profits this commerce has yielded to the Treasury of the nation. I place it on a broader ground. Our domestic commerce is as much entitled to the care and protection of the Government as our foreign commerce. The preservation of these harbors is essential to this commerce; necessary for the safety of the property and lives of the people engaged in it. The fact cannot be denied that these harbors have saved the country the amount the Government has expended on them over and over again. In principle, the commerce of the lakes is a national commerce, as well as our ocean commerce. Seven of our States, containing about half of the population of the country, are bounded, in part, on the great lakes. By rivers, canals, and railroads, this commerce is extended to, and connected with, the tide waters of the Atlantic and the Mississippi river, threading with links of intercommunication many States, and adding to the wealth and prosperity of the whole country.

CONDITION OF THE LAKE HARBORS.

The annual report of Colonel J. D. Graham, the officer in charge of the lake harbor works, made September 30, 1857, and published by the order of this House, sets forth the condition of these harbors and earnestly recommends immediate appropriations to save them from destruction. I would call the attention of members to this valuable official report, containing as it does, a great amount of information on this whole subject. It will be found that the harbor works are in a ruinous and dilapidated state, the improvements heretofore commenced by the Government, and partially completed, are being rapidly destroyed, and without some aid the millions of money already expended by the Government on the lake harbor improvements, necessary for the preservation of life and property, must become a total loss. Your present Committee on Commerce, in the report on this subject, says:

"In many instances the fruits of repeated appropriations are now perishing for want of proper attention; and in all, the works may be not only saved at their present state of completion, by timely appropriations, but preserved for future improvement."

Mr. Chairman, in this connection I wish to refer to the situation of Oswego harbor, New York, the most important one on Lake Ontario, and necessary for the protection of the commerce of the lakes; it will afford an illustration of the condition of the lake harbors generally. The following is an extract from Colonel Graham's report:

"OSWEGO HARBOR, NEW YORK.—The works for the protection of this harbor are in a very precarious condition.

"They were constructed at a period when, it would seem, there could not have been a just appreciation of the force of the lake sea which they were intended to resist.

"During the present season a portion of the work has crumbled, which was built only four years ago, at the extremity of the west pier. The crib work has been undermined at four different places, and the stone washed out by the force of the sea. One of these breaches is within one hundred and fifty feet of the light-house. We have endeavored to make temporary repairs at these places, in the best manner practicable, with the very small means at our command; and, indeed, while writing this report, our attention has been frequently attracted from it, under the necessity of endeavoring to save important parts of the work from more serious injury. We have not, however, the means to do it in the permanent manner required to make it last.

"I consider the light-house to be in danger from the storms which must occur between the present season and the ensuing spring.

"The inner harbor, designed to be protected by the works, is also in imminent danger of being seriously injured, if not altogether ruined, unless immediate appropriations be granted for the most urgent repairs required.

"For these repairs I herewith submit an estimate, marked S 1, amounting to $46,391 44.

"I would earnestly recommend that this sum be granted with as little delay as possible, and in a single appropriation, because it is very important that the requisite materials be collected, and certain portions of the work be done the ensuing winter. The whole work of repairs should be in full vigor on the opening of spring.

"The harbor of Oswego, whether considered in a commercial or military point of view, is undoubtedly the most important on Lake Ontario.

"By canals and railroads it has a direct commercial connection not only with Syracuse, Albany, and the city of New York, but also with Philadelphia, to which it is the nearest port on the great lakes. The value of its internal and coastwise trade is not less than sixty million dollars per annum, the statistics of which I shall endeavor to present in detail in a future report. It is certainly the most extensive wheat market in the State of New York, and its trade with the Canadas is greater than that of all other ports in the United States joined together.

"The Oswego river empties into Lake Ontario at this point. It is a powerful stream, studded with falls and rapids, and the water power derived from it operates a great number of mills and other factories.

"It brings into one torrent within its channel, the waters of nearly all the small lakes in the western part of the State of New York. The united waters of the Canandaigua, the Seneca, the Cayuga, Oswego, and the Oneida, all flow into it.

"Fort Ontario is situated on the east side of this harbor, about twelve hundred feet from the light-house. It overlooks and completely commands the harbor entrance.

"It is an important work in the chain of defenses requisite in times of war for our northern frontier, but its importance would be greatly diminished if the harbor were to become deteriorated for want of the requisite protecting works."

This report was made in September, 1857; since that time these works have sustained serious injuries, as will appear by the following letter from Captain Malcolm, United States custodian at that point:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC WORKS,
OSWEGO, April 14, 1858.

SIR: I would most respectfully call your earnest attention to the deplorable state of the Government pier at this place, and to the absolute necessity for an early appropriation by Congress for its repair.

For several years past the stone work has been rapidly crumbling away, and during the past winter two hundred cords of stone filling have escaped from the undermining of the old crib work, built some twenty-five years since.

Indeed the whole pier is in a most dilapidated condition. The counter ports or small piers inside, which strengthen, and are the backbone to it, are fast washing away.

The oak plank sheathing which faces the pier at the light-house, with a portion of the crib timber, is cut away some forty feet, by the action of the waves.

If no appropriation is made this year, another year will find us without light-house or pier.

The loss will not end here, for the remains of the work will be carried into the channel, entirely closing its entrance to the inner harbor, for which the work was designed to protect.

In conclusion, I would most respectfully refer you to the admirable report of Colonel Graham, for 1857, which places this subject in its true light.

I am very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM SCHUYLER MALCOLM,
United States Custodian.

Hon. H. C. GOODWIN, Washington.

Again, under date of May 13, 1858, he says, in a letter urging action on this subject:

"There is not a harbor on the American side of Lake Ontario where the piers are not washing away, and filling up the channels to them. As there is nothing now in the pier (at Oswego) to keep it in its place, the first severe gale will completely demolish the whole work, and, of course, destroy the commerce of this port."

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] in his remarks made several days since, in opposition to the proposed appropriations for completing custom-houses at various points, referred to Oswego as a port where the collection of the revenue cost the Government more than it received, and condemned the expenditure for a custom-house at that point. I replied to the gentleman at the time. Now, I have, from the Treasury Department, the figures to show how the matter stands between Oswego and the Government. The duties collected at the port of Oswego, from June, 1848, to June, 1856, amount to $1,209,113 84. The amount of appropriations for this harbor, from the beginning, is but $271,086. After deducting the cost of the custom-house, and the cost of collecting the duties at this point, it will be found that the port of Oswego has paid to the Government, for the eight years prior to 1856, an average net income of at least one hundred thousand dollars per year.

Now, sir, it is true, that since the adoption of the "reciprocity treaty" the revenue at this point has fallen off, for certain property is allowed to be imported duty free; but while the duties collected are less, the importations and trade have greatly increased. The imports have to be entered at the custom-house so that the officers may decide what are free from, and what are to be charged with duties. The duties paid at this port for the last calendar year before the treaty went into effect, amounted to more than two hundred and ninety thousand dollars. Some of this amount was afterwards refunded under the operation of that treaty; but had the old rate of duties been paid on the imports at this point in 1856, I am told they would have amounted to near half a million dollars. Allow me to call attention for a moment to a few facts illustrating the importance of maintaining this harbor, in a commercial point of view. In 1856, the arrivals of vessels at this port numbered three thousand five hundred and fifty, with thirty-eight thousand four hundred and fourteen men, and a tonnage amounting to eight hundred and fifty-six thousand seven hundred and seventy tons; this statement is only for arrivals. Colonel Graham, in his report, refers to its importance as a market for wheat. There are at Oswego and its vicinity some twenty mills, capable of manufacturing more than ten thousand barrels of flour per day; and twenty-one elevators that can deliver fifty thousand bushels of grain per hour. I have hastily glanced at these various facts to correct any erroneous impressions that may have been made by the remarks to which I have referred. I also desire to call attention to the remarks of Colonel Graham as to the importance of this harbor in a military view. In case of a rupture with Great Britain, this harbor, being protected by Fort Ontario, would be of the utmost importance to our vessels engaged in this commerce, and would also be essential for the safety of Government vessels and stores, and although a war may be utterly improbable, yet all experience and recent occurrences show the propriety of not allowing the usefulness and efficiency of such defenses to be destroyed for the want of attention on the part of the Government.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Personal Explanation—Mr. Smith.

HO. OF REPS.

Mr. Chairman, there is another point to which I will briefly refer, showing the importance of these appropriations for the lake harbors, and that is the fearful loss of life and property that occurs on these lakes from the want of proper protection in the shape of harbors. For a period of eight years the value of property lost on the lakes and damage sustained, was more than five million eight hundred and twenty-eight thousand three hundred and forty-six dollars; number of vessels lost in that time one thousand two hundred and thirty-one; of those, five hundred and sixty-six were stranded. The total loss of property on the lakes in 1857, was more than one million three hundred and eighty-seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-five dollars. Total loss of life in 1857, was four hundred and ninety; in 1856, four hundred and seven. Those most intimately acquainted with the commerce of the lakes unite in saying, that much of this loss, both as respects life and property, is owing to the want of harbor accommodations and protection. This applies particularly to the loss sustained by the stranding of vessels. Why, sir, the value of the property exposed to the perils of lake navigation is about equal to the total value of all the merchandise exported from the United States to foreign countries added to the value of all that is imported into our country. Some years it exceeds in value the sum total of our exports and imports, and in other years it falls but little short.

Mr. Chairman, we are near the close of the session. These bills have been for a long time before the House and Senate. We have just appropriated a million dollars to continue the works for bringing water to the city of Washington. We shall appropriate near a million dollars to continue the works on the Capitol extension. Now, after all this, is it right for Congress to refuse or neglect to make these small appropriations for the protection of these vast interests, for the safety of life and property, for the improvement of these grand highways of trade and commerce? Sir, let not the Government turn aside from these duties that lie directly in its pathway, but mete out to the commerce of the great lakes—a national interest—the same measure or justice that it has not been withheld from our interests on the sea-board.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

SPEECH OF HON. WILLIAM SMITH,
OF VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. SMITH said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I have been here for twelve hours, under quite feeble health; for until to-day I have not felt tolerably well for ten days; but a purely personal matter was thrown into the discussion in which I participated to-day, of new matter out and out; and I was denied the comity, which is rarely refused, of responding to that matter at the time. I owe nothing to the gentlemen who objected. At this late period of the session, it was obviously a matter of great interest to me that the remarks which I might deem proper to submit on that question should go out with the main debate; and yet they denied me the floor.

The gentleman, also, who has just addressed the committee, [Mr. LEITER], has certainly entitled himself to some reply from me. I must confess that the line of his remarks has provoked no little indignation; for I consider it politically unjust, and politically very abusive, in its character.

Mr. Chairman, of course I am obliged to be very brief, it being past ten, p. m. It will be recollected by those of the committee who were present that to-day I forbore, as much as was in my power, to make any reference to one of the members from Illinois—the member who last spoke, [Mr. MORRIS.] I avoided it simply from an indisposition to introduce him into this discussion, beyond what was indispensable. Nevertheless, he came into it with matter obviously prepared, and with a view, if possible, to make an issue with me on a question of fact. And, sir, never was I more astonished than when he introduced the affidavit of an old soldier, of impaired hearing, and who can hardly have heard or understood an entire sentence of the conversation, and “Whose trembling limbs have borne him to your door,” with a view to secure him a pension, not from the justice, but from the sympathies of Congress. I was astonished that the member should have sent home and got the affidavit of this old man as to a question of fact between the member and myself, who were conversing upon an interesting subject, naturally calculated, from its character, to arouse our liveliest attention. It is a deep wrong, Mr. Chairman, which the member has perpetrated on that old man, and I now propose to show it. I will read here what the member himself did say on a former occasion in this connection. It will be recollected, sir, that I charged that a certain conversation had taken place. Now, here is what the member said:

“If I ever had a conversation with the gentleman from Virginia, (and I recollect having one,) it was some time in December last, in my private room at the United States Hotel, in the presence of my family. I invited the gentleman to my room for the purpose, as I think the gentleman will bear me witness, mainly of introducing him to an old friend who formerly lived in Virginia, and who had come on here for the purpose of obtaining a pension, and I was desirous of enlisting the members of the House in his favor. The conversation to which the gentleman alludes came up incidentally. I entered into it with him with a view of ascertaining if this Kansas question could not be settled without any serious division in the Democratic party. In that conversation much was said. I remember remarking to the gentleman from Virginia that he ought to recollect that in Illinois we were differently situated from himself; that we had a different constituency; that the Democracy of Illinois had, before the meeting of Congress, with scarcely an exception, taken their position in opposition to the Lecompton constitution, and that neither DOUGLAS nor any other man could be returned from that State to the United States Senate if he favored an instrument of that character. I recollect stating to him that southern gentlemen ought to have some charity and feeling for our position.”

That is what the gentleman himself admitted to have been the character of the conversation, and yet he introduces to this House this poor old man's affidavit, backed up with a certificate signed by a number of persons, which was gotten up for another purpose in the year 1855, as to his reliability and trustworthiness; and he makes this poor old man say as follows:

“Affiant further states that said SMITH came to said room about half-past seven o'clock, p. m., of said day, and remained there from one half to three quarters of an hour. That the only persons present were the said SMITH, MORRIS and his wife, and affiant now most positively states that no such statement as said SMITH has attributed to said MORRIS, in a speech recently delivered by him (SMITH) in the House of Representatives, in substance, that ‘the Illinois delegation in Congress had had a conference, and determined or agreed that the only way for Judge DOUGLAS to secure his reelection to the United States Senate was by opposing the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution,’ were made by said MORRIS at the time, nor was anything said by said MORRIS which could be so construed as to bear any such meaning.”

It is only necessary for me, Mr. Chairman, to fix attention upon the statement of the member himself, which I have just read, and to contrast it with the affidavit of this old man. The truth is, it raises an issue of fact with himself, and disproves, if anything, his own statement, which I have read. But that is not all. I did not advert to the statement of the gentleman [Mr. BURNETT] who spoke on this subject on a former occasion; but I will now read sundry extracts from what he said. He said:

“The gentleman from Virginia, some time ago, in a conversation between us, when we were discussing the action of the Democratic party upon the Kansas question, or of those of the Democratic party who differed with us, and the reasons for their course, said to me, substantially, what he has stated here. I remarked to him then that I had had a conversation with Mr. MORRIS, in which he repeated, substantially, the same language to me.”

Again:

“The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRIS] approached me this morning, and said that he understood that I had stated that I had had, substantially, the same conversation with him which the gentleman from Virginia repeated yesterday.”

Again:

“Now, sir, as to the facts. The time I cannot fix. Some time early in the session, I, in company with another gentleman, who is a member of this House, met the gentleman from Illinois on the street. I introduced him to the gentleman, and some conversation passed between us of a light and trivial character, I do not now recollect what. He then asked me to call at his room, saying that he desired to talk with me. I was then on my way, I think, to the War Department. I did call at his room on my return, and a long conversation took place between us. I cannot pretend to give the whole of that conversation, nor will I undertake to give the language used, because every gentleman, whether he be a lawyer or not, knows how impossible it is to give the details of such conversations, or the precise language used by any individual. I do not desire to do the gentleman from Illinois any injustice. The conversation was commenced by him. I did not know what his purpose was. He commenced by speaking of the position which had been taken by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, and by his colleagues in this House upon the Kansas question. I understood him distinctly to say, that upon a conference of the friends of Judge DOUGLAS—the friends from Illinois—it had been agreed that he should take the course which he has pursued in reference to the Kansas question as the only means by which he could sustain himself at home; that unless he did take that course he would not only inevitably suffer defeat at home himself, but his friends would fall with him.”

“During this conversation, which, as I have said, was one of some length, and which was held with me as a friend of Judge DOUGLAS, something was said about some arrangement by which the Democratic party could act together, and stand a unit upon this question. We talked a good deal upon that subject. During the conversation there was a statement made, that one reason why Judge DOUGLAS felt himself aggrieved, and why he had pursued this course, was, that there had been an attempt upon the part of the present Administration to destroy him, to crush him, to break him down; that his friends had been neglected in appointments, and the claims of Illinois overlooked; and that Judge DOUGLAS did not intend to be crushed by the present Administration.”

In my speech of the 26th March, with such statements from honorable gentlemen, the extraordinary course of Judge DOUGLAS and his colleagues in this House, and other evidence of a highly significant character, which I did not feel at liberty to use, I think I was fully justified in saying in reference to Judge DOUGLAS:

“I fear ambition has done its work. I fear imaginary private griefs have been actively at work. I have heard of a meeting of the Illinois delegation to consider of the policy to be pursued.”

And, sir, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSHALL,] in his first speech, breathed forth the general dissatisfaction of Judge DOUGLAS and his friends, as the following extract will show. Speaking of Illinois, the gentleman says:

“From the moment she became a sovereign State to the present time, she has never failed in her adherence to the national Democracy. With men of acknowledged talents and statesmanship in her midst, not one of her sons has ever, at any time, received a first class appointment from the Federal Government. Her claims in this respect have been disregarded. Notwithstanding all this, we have adhered to our faith and battled for the right without a murmur.”

Mr. Chairman, I will add, in this connection, that there are other gentlemen to whom I might have referred, the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. DAVIDSON,] and another gentleman from Kentucky, both of whom had similar conversations, in effect, with the member from Illinois [Mr. MORRIS.] And yet, sir, after that admission, after my statement, after the evidence to which I have referred, the member brings in this affidavit to raise a question of veracity with me! Sir, I consign him to that destiny which he deserves and which will be accorded to him by the judgment of the House as well as by the country at large.

Having said thus much, sir, allow me to turn in another direction. I am surprised, beyond degree surprised, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEITER] should have indulged in the speech with which he entertained us to-night. He has sat here in comparative silence during the whole winter; he has heard, for five months, this discussion go on; he has waited until this late hour of the session, and this late hour of the night, to make a violent attack upon the Democratic party in general, and upon his colleagues from Ohio in particular, when he knows that there is a great chance that they cannot possibly have any opportunity of replying to him. I submit, sir, that it was not treating the question, or his colleagues, or the Democratic party, fairly. But that I happen to have the floor at this late hour of the night I should have had no opportunity to advert to it, and now, having the floor, I beg leave to indulge in a few remarks.

The gentleman commences remarkably, very remarkably indeed, by charging that there are

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Personal Explanation—Mr. Smith.

Ho. OF REPS.

traitors in the Democratic party in the North. Well, the gentleman is competent to judge, for he has had experience upon that subject.

Mr. LEITER. Yes, I have seen them.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Yes, sir, he has seen them, and been of them. I understand that up to 1854, you were of the Democratic party yourself, and now you charge treason upon that party which brought you into distinction, and gave you honor and fame.

Mr. LEITER. I wish to say that I have in my possession means to prove that I stand upon the same platform now that I did before.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Oh, certainly—exactly. No man ever changes, but a great party swings around to enable the gentleman to preserve his consistency! Shame on him! I would not so add insult to injury as to affect to be unchangeable. Who sent the gentleman here? Did the Democratic party?

Mr. LEITER. A part of it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Ay, a very small part, I will be bound. A hundred, perhaps, gentlemen, who had a little fellow-feeling for his old Democracy, whom he took into corners, perhaps in some retired place. Sir, he was sent here by the Black Republican party, and he insults them by getting up here now and claiming still to be a Democrat. By the gods! I have never seen such cool and deliberate assurance. Yes, sir, he played false to the Democratic party in 1854, and, as he acknowledges, practiced treason against those whom he now denounces. Nor is that all; he insults the very party to whom he owes his present greatness by scorning it and telling us that he still cleaves to the Democracy and is still a Democrat.

Mr. LEITER. I do not claim to belong to that Democratic party. I claim that essentially, and to all intents and purposes, the Republican party is standing upon Democratic principles.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Exactly! Lord! "how we apples swim." Why, sir, that is the game such changelings ever play, as is shown in the history of parties in this Republic of ours for seventy-five years; the opposition to the Democracy have all along been trying to get our name. They have nicknamed us almost every other day; yet, under the influence of sound principles, and those ennobling sympathies which bind us to our kind, we have made even their nicknames popular. The gentleman undertook to prove us knaves. Sir, he proves himself and his party fools in doing it.

Mr. LEITER. I wish to say that I attempted no such thing. I talked about the northern Democracy.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. He charges the Democratic party with hypocrisy. He used the term hypocrisy more than once deliberately. He charges us with playing the country false; with falsifying our pledges. He arraigns Mr. Buchanan, the head of the Democratic party, as a criminal. In charging us thus, he undertakes to prove us knaves; and what does he prove, if anything? That the people of the country are fools; that his party, with his best efforts, claiming the right, had not the sense to make the right appear before the country; that we—we, the groundlings, the unwashed, the uncombed, the unperfected, as the enemy sometimes maliciously call us—had the intellect and the brightness, in spite of all the efforts of the Opposition, to honey-fuggle and obfuscate the great mass of our intelligent countrymen in whose hands repose the greatest sovereignty, it may be, under the sun!

Now, sir, it is a matter of astonishment—positively a matter of amazement—that the gentleman should so far forget himself as to stand boldly before the country in the attitude of acknowledging that having the right on their side, he and his party had not the smartness to make the people understand it. He reflects upon himself and his party by showing what weak vessels they are, or, at any rate, that they are of very inferior capacity, or else that the people are as dull as the ground on which he treads, and are incapable of appreciating the truth.

Mr. LEITER. I will say to the gentleman that the canvass before the people upon the issue as now made up has not yet taken place. We will try it next fall. Wait till then.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Yes, sir; the gentleman is now playing the part of Mr. SEWARD and others, in the grand canvass of 1856, who gave us the very number of hours that we, the Democratic party, had to live. After the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, Mr. SEWARD told the country, in that dogmatical and prophetic vein in which he sometimes indulges, the exact number of hours that it was our destiny to linger in this vale of tears; and the gentleman humbly follows his illustrious predecessor. Sir, I thank God that there is intelligence enough in the people to unmask the hypocrite. I thank God that there is intelligence enough in the people to detect the wolf in sheep's clothing; and that, when traitors stalk abroad, there is power enough in the great masses of the people to detect them, and hang them as high as Haman.

The gentleman talks about a time-honored compromise, and the repeal of the Missouri restriction. He says that "the great first sin" was perpetrated in 1854, and that the whole nation sent up one howl of indignant anguish. Sir, what was that question? What was it? The gentleman was a Democrat up to 1854, and concurred in the universal reprobation of that Missouri restriction. It was almost universally conceded to be a wrong. But what did its repeal do?

Mr. LEITER. I wish to ask the gentleman if he did not indorse it in 1845?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. No, sir; no.

Mr. LEITER. Nor in 1849?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. LEITER. Not in the annexation of Texas?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Oh, my dear sir, you know how all that question is. It is not worth while to go into it now. I am ready to meet the gentleman upon that; but I want to deal now with the popular aspect of the question. What did the Missouri compromise do? Who did it wrong? who? The Missouri compromise, which the gentleman now whines over, did undertake, to be sure, to interdict the right of popular sovereignty, and to say that persons owning slaves should not go on one side of a given line. What did its repeal do? It simply said that all free white persons should have the power of doing their own will; that they should establish their own government; and that there should be no geographical distinctions. And who is there, having proper sympathy in his heart and an element of moral justice in his bosom, will object to every white citizen in America being entitled to the same rights and privileges? Who can object to it? The gentleman from Ohio does. It is the misfortune of those going over from the Democratic party never again to see a ray of that glorious light which is destined to illumine the world, and conduct it on in its glorious career.

Well, the Democracy repealed that line, and the gentleman says a struggle ensued. So it did; and the Democratic party were floored, in 1855, by the howls of fanaticism of that party with which the gentleman is so proud to act. They floored us for a time; but Democracy, though floored—true to its exultant and buoyant nature—springs with elastic bound to its feet again, knocks all kinds of isms into pi, and promptly recovers its beneficent ascendancy. The intelligent people were aroused, spoke the voice of command, and elected our present Chief Magistrate.

But that is not all. The Black Republicans came into this Hall with a majority. What was the result? It undertook to revolutionize the Government.

Mr. LEITER. Does the gentleman mean to say that we had a Republican majority?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. You had, until your atrocities lost it to you. You came here with a heavy majority; but your conduct was so damnable that some of your own men left you with disgust. You came with a majority full of all the hope that is borne upon the vision of a glorious triumph, and full of unction and delight; but a nipping frost came, as was the case in 1841, and has been the case on various occasions.

Mr. LEITER. Is it not the fact that the highest number of votes we were ever able to give for our Speaker was one hundred and three out of two hundred and thirty-four members?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Yes; but you got your Speaker, and you got the committees, and you, in effect, undertook to upset the Government. The people took away your power of mischief. A reaction ensued, and we came here in power. Unhappily there were differences of opinion in regard to Kansas affairs, in regard to the obligations growing out of the Cincinnati platform, and in regard to certain proceedings in Kansas. That is all true; but let me tell the gentleman that the doctrine of popular sovereignty is a doctrine which recognizes the power of the people to govern according to law, not according to mobs or incendiary assemblies. That is the great, the fundamental principle which regulates our Government in all its forms. The people establish what Government they choose. Squatter sovereignty is the right of a few to go into the Territories and exercise in their infancy the powers and privileges of full-grown maturity.

Mr. LEITER. Who is the father of that doctrine?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. He was no conservative man. The Territories possess no power except that which the Federal Government itself possesses. It is qualified in character, and limited in extent; but it recognizes the will of the people when exercised in conformity to law, and in no other case.

I claim that the Cincinnati platform has been respected by the Democratic party, and by the chief head of that party. What have they done? What frauds have they perpetrated? They submitted to the people of Kansas the propriety of calling a convention; and the people, by a vote which cannot be impeached, determined that they would have a convention. That convention was accordingly called. Delegates were elected, and they met in convention to perform their duties. What were those duties? To frame a constitution and submit it or not to the people. Mind you, the people were acting through their representatives. Do not we represent the people? Are not our acts binding upon the people? Do not the people speak when we speak? Facit per alium, facit per se.

Those delegates assembled, and they had the right to form a constitution; and, in the absence of all legal requirements to the contrary—and it is not pretended that there were any—to adopt a constitution in toto or in part, and to submit it in toto or in part.

Mr. LEITER. Did not Governor Walker desire them to submit it under the instructions of the President?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. No, sir; Walker, in my opinion, was a meddling man, out in Kansas, and did a great deal of mischief. The President's instructions to Walker, as the gentleman has shown, were to protect and sustain the legal voters and to resist and punish illegal ones. So say I. And that was what he ought to have done; and having done that, he would have acted up to the limit of his power and authority. But he did not stop there. He had ulterior views. He made himself active in shooting from his sphere, and disturbing the repose of that Territory. I take the ground, then, which the President took in his instructions. How have they been disregarded? What voter was withheld from the polls who did not choose to stay away? The election came round, but did the revolutionists stop there? No, they meant to have nothing to do with the organization of the government under the constitution. Who voted, then? Was not the proclamation to all to come in and vote? and who have the right, in questions of this sort, but those who speak through the ballot-boxes?

Gentlemen talk about the election of a free-State Legislature and Governor. Is it not remarkable, if it be true as charged, that there was a disposition to commit frauds, that they were not cheated out of the returns on those officers. But the January election comes on, and ten thousand good voters, says the gentleman, spoke their voice, instead of the insignificant number of two thousand and five hundred, who voted in October. I would like to know how the gentleman finds out that they were good voters. Where there is no contest, and a disposition to make a grand show, I think it likely that almost everybody went to the polls, and no questions were asked. But there is evidence which marks the character of that vote.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Political Organizations—Mr. Leiter.

SENATE.

When they took the census upon the free-State side, they got the voters to sign a petition to this Congress to allow Kansas to come in under the Topeka constitution. It was done at leisure. Every man was put down who had any claim to being a voter. It was presented here by the Delegate from that Territory, and is in these words:

"Memorial of four thousand one hundred and seventy citizens of Kansas, asking that Kansas may be admitted into the Union under the Topeka constitution."

Mr. LEITER. I want to know from the gentleman if he supposes they are all the voters of the Territory?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It is the census of the Topekaites, taken by their own party, in their own way, and I take it for granted it contains all the voters they have got. It is not to be supposed they did not swell the number as large as they could, and yet four thousand one hundred and seventy votes are all they have, according to their own showing.

What argument, then, is to be derived from the assertion that they have ten thousand voters in the Territory? Why, sir, the men in buckram of Falstaff are no comparison. Here is their own official testimony, presented by their own Delegate from that Territory.

But now I come to another statement of the gentleman from Ohio. Sir, I traveled through several counties in that State last fall, before the election, and I know the monstrous tales that were told to excite the people there against the Democratic party. But, sir, the sober second thought of that people operated, as it always will in this country, and you may see the result by looking at the majority with which Chase was elected then, and at the vote he got in this last election.

Mr. LEITER. Governor Chase was not elected by a majority vote on either occasion.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Well, that makes no difference. I ask you to look at the vote he received at the former, and the vote he received at this last election. Sir, truth will always triumph with the people when they come to reflect; and you see the mesmeric influence which it has had there. Well, sir, this being the case, there is a great outcry raised by many, and you see here men who have left the Democratic party, men who are mere political bawds, absolutely calling us to account for want of patriotism. Why, I recollect some days ago, when the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] with his adroitness, had succeeded in drawing the Black Republicans into positions which violated the principles which they professed, and which they consented to occupy for the purpose of success, and after all were defeated, he challenged any one of them all to say that they did not vote with their eyes open for the Montgomery amendment. He repeated his challenge, when a member from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] acknowledged that his party had acted with their eyes open, but had not consented so to vote until assured that certain gentlemen would stand by them to the end. Another gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] stated that he came into the arrangement with extreme reluctance, and not until he was assured of the pledge of honor of the Douglas wing of the Democracy to stand by them to the last.

And that was not all. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] at another time read a paper, in which was put down what he regarded as the understanding between the two parties. It turned out, upon examination, however, that a great many of the Douglas Democrats had not gone into the arrangement, and that the Black Republicans had been sold. And now, in their spite, in their vexation, this pure, immaculate party, embracing the gentleman, [Mr. LEITER,] undertakes to call us to account. Yes, sir, even he himself, and they, in the vexation of their heart at having been sold, at having been thwarted in their political schemes for success—for they gave up their principles to accomplish that, and nothing else—this party, which stands before the world as political charlatans and tricksters, talks about calling us to account!

Well, sir, I have no fear of them. This party, which stands before the country convicted, by their own confessions, as political bawds, that party whose only end is to win and rule this people, and who strive to accomplish that end by means absolutely shocking to the moral sense of the people, excites no fear with me.

Sir, in the mad fanaticism of the North—I will not say the gentleman from Ohio is included in that mass, but so far as his action is concerned it goes to accomplish the same purpose—it is notorious that the great heart of the Black Republican party is unfriendly to the continuation of the Union, unless they can rule it all. They had rather be the first man in a village than the second in Rome. They had rather rule in hell than serve in heaven. "Rule or ruin" is the great doctrine—is the great doctrine of that obnoxious party.

But, sir, I have already said enough; and will now conclude by quoting, as applicable and appropriate to the Black Republican party, these words of the infernal one to his roaring associates:

"But of this be sure:
To do aught good will never be our task,
But ever to do ill our sole delight."

POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS.

SPEECH OF HON. B. F. LEITER,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. LEITER said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: My friend from Washington Territory has devoted one hour of the time of this committee to the discussion of the relations between the red men and the white men on the Pacific coast. I think, sir, that gentleman succeeded in proving, to the satisfaction of every gentleman present, that the red man is treacherous; that there is no faith to be put in his pledges and his promises—in short, that the red man on the Pacific is a treacherous hypocrite. Now, sir, in the hour allotted to me by this committee, I propose to consider other relations than those existing between red men and white men—other relations than those existing on the Pacific coast. I propose to consider relations existing between white men of the North. I propose to consider relations which political parties of the North bear to each other; and I think I shall be able to succeed in proving to this committee that there are other men than red men who are not to be trusted, and who are treacherous and hypocritical. I propose, in this hour allotted me, to prove that the leaders of the Locofoco party are equally treacherous with the red man of the Pacific coast, and that their pledges and promises are mere hypocritical pretenses, unworthy of the confidence of the people. I do not propose to include in my remarks the rank and file of the so-called Democratic party, because, in my judgment, they are as much disposed to do right as any other men of any other party. This I know from the relations which I at one time held with that party, and my intercourse with them.

Now, sir, I wish it distinctly understood by this committee that I find no fault with any gentleman who may differ with me in regard to the great political issues which divide the people of this country. I say, as a Democrat, that I respect every man, although he may differ with me in opinion; and when I see gentlemen from a certain section of the country advocate in this House principles which I deem to be antagonistical to good government, I have the charity to believe that they, coming from the section which they do, are honest in their convictions, and intend to do right. They, by education, have been taught to believe that the peculiar institutions of their locality are sanctioned, not only by man, but by the Almighty, which, in my judgment, is a fundamental error; yet they are entitled to their opinions, radically wrong though they may be. But, sir, when I look about me, and see men whose education has been the reverse, who have been taught from the cradle principles entirely different from those which they advocate—I say that although I respect the men, I have no kind of respect or regard for the principles which they advocate. Although I may treat them with the civility due between gentlemen, yet I have my misgivings that they do not themselves believe in them, and as much despise those principles as I do. I have had the fortune, or misfortune, of being born and brought up in a slave State. My early education was received in a slave State. Nevertheless, I was never taught to believe that slavery was a godly institution or a great blessing, but that it is a great wrong, opposed to every principle of republican government. Now, sir, if I could not get that education in a slave State, I appeal to gentlemen who have been raised in free States, and who have been educated there and taught that every man has the God-given rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which every other man is bound to respect, whether they would be found advocating the principle they do, were it not for the political organizations of the day? Were it not for power and political plunder, in my judgment, you could not find a single man north of Mason and Dixon's line who would advocate the institution of slavery as these gentlemen do. It has been but within a few years that I have heard it defended by southern statesmen as a matter of right, and never by northern men, until they found the success of Locofocoism dependent upon that course, since which time they are its most zealous advocates.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it has been the universal practice of the political parties of this country, ever since their organization, to make declarations of principle, to govern them in the administration of Government, in case of their success. The Democratic party has ever laid down its principles and platform; the Whig party has done the same; and each of them has gone with those principles before the people, solemnly pledged, in good faith, to administer the Government accordingly. I do not propose now to go further back in our political history than 1854, where I can successfully commence to show the hypocritical partisanship of the Locofoco party leaders, by advocating slavery and slavery-extension in the South, and half-way slavery and anti-slavery at the North. It is a matter known to every man, especially those of the North, that when it was proposed to repeal the Missouri compromise a storm of universal indignation pervaded the entire free States. Petitions and remonstrances by the hundred thousands were sent here, protesting against the injustice of the act. Public meetings were held in all the towns, cities, and school districts of the free States, in which the members of all parties participated; and resolutions were passed, sufficient to fill a large volume, in denunciation of the attempted outrage.

But, sir, for some reason or other, the remonstrances of the people were disregarded, and their petitions unheeded by the political parties of that day. Not only the Democratic leaders, but the Whig leaders, participated in the repeal of the Missouri compromise. When this storm was coming thick and fast, the Democratic party became alarmed, disorganized and disbanded at the North, and their flag was left dragging in the dust. Then it was they were bound to apply all of their ingenuity and all their inventive powers to bring before the country issues never before known, not recognized before, never proclaimed before by any party, North or South. It was a kind of afterthought on the part of these politicians. It was a thing never dreamed of by any party, until they saw the burning, withering, damning indignation of an insulted and betrayed people, and found it necessary, for the purpose of success, that they should get up some swindle to deceive the people, and thereby succeed. The Democratic party of the North commenced creeping and crawling, and dared not show their drooping faces before the people, until they had got up some excuse for the extraordinary course of Pierce's administration on the slavery question. As soon, however, as they recovered from the first shock, they began to preach Free-Soilism. They commenced to tell the freemen of the North that the Kansas-Nebraska bill was the great measure of freedom, and that the North would be vastly benefited, and the area of freedom extended by the repeal of the slavery restriction. This I then regarded as a mere hypocritical pretense, and my mind has not undergone any change since.

Why, sir, I heard it publicly proclaimed by the Locofoco stump speakers in Ohio that it was the peculiar province of the Democratic party to extend the area of freedom; and that the Kansas-Nebraska bill was the first step in that great programme; that by means of the repeal of the Missouri compromise, and the inauguration of the new doctrine of popular sovereignty, we of the North would gain at least three new free States out of the territory now contained within the boundaries of the State of Texas. We were told this, too: that if we left all these questions to the people of the Territories, then, as a matter of course, the free States of the North would have all the new States that would come into the Union; that no slave State could be ever again admitted under this new doctrine of popular sovereignty. Well, that plausible doctrine gave the Democratic party considerable strength with the people, and they again showed their faces and gave battle to the faithful friends of the country. Although the Loco-foco party had violated faith, yet I must say it always had a facility for making attacks on the Opposition, and showing the plausibility of their course, so as to meet the approbation of the people when it was unmerited. It always had the means of argument to use to the people; it had the means of persuasion in discussion which were always formidable, and, in my judgment, dangerous to the best interests of the country.

Well, sir, the campaign of 1854 came on, but the people were not satisfied with the pledges and promises of that so-called Democratic party, nor were they satisfied that the idea of popular sovereignty was just exactly what it was represented to be; nor did they believe, although they had been often so told, that in the doctrine of popular sovereignty the people would have perfect security against the aggressions of what they believed to be a great wrong in the country—the extension of slavery. The party was overthrown in every free-State, and all its forces were put to flight in 1854. Eighteen hundred and fifty-five came on, and by that time their appeals had been heard, long and loud and effectively, in many of the States, and although they had been, in 1854, overthrown, perfectly demolished, yet they had such power of attraction about them with their declarations of leaving the people of the Territories to do just as they pleased, not alone in regard to slavery, but in regard to everything else, that they again rallied, and gave battle to the Opposition. That doctrine, I must confess, is a very popular doctrine, and very readily commended itself to the people. I would like that way of doing business myself. I would like right well to have things just as I want them, and have nobody interfere with me; and I judge that all people have the same feeling. Therefore the doctrine of popular sovereignty was very formidable to the Opposition party, and indeed the only argument that could be used against it effectually was that the so-called Democratic party would not in good faith carry out its pledges, the truth of which is now fully verified.

Well, sir, 1856 came on. The time for the presidential election was approaching, and it became necessary then for political parties again to make declarations of their principles; and, true to its instincts, the Loco-foco party was ready again to make any and every kind of pledge in order to succeed. I hold in my hand the platform and pledges of that party in the official proceedings of the Cincinnati convention—the convention which nominated James Buchanan as the Loco-foco candidate for President of the United States. On pages twenty-five and twenty-six I find the following resolutions declaratory of their supposed principles:

"Resolved, That claiming fellowship with, and desiring the cooperation of, all who regard the preservation of the Union under the Constitution as the paramount aim, and repudiating all sectional parties and platforms concerning domestic slavery, which seek to embroil the States and incite to treason and armed resistance to law in the Territories, and whose avowed purpose, if consummated, must end in civil war and disunion, the American Democracy recognize and adopt the principle contained in the organic laws establishing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska as embodying the only sound and safe solution of the 'slavery question,' upon which the great national idea of the people of this country can repose in its determined conservatism of the Union—non-interference by Congress with slavery in States and Territories, or in the District of Columbia.

"2. That this was the basis of the compromises of 1850—confirmed by both the Democratic and Whig parties in national conventions, ratified by the people in the elections of 1852, and rightly applied to the organization of Territories in 1854.

"3. That by the uniform application of this Democratic principle to the organization of Territories, and to the admission of new States, with or without domestic slavery, as they may elect—the equal rights of all the States will be preserved intact; the original compacts of the Constitution maintained inviolate; and the perpetuity and expansion of this Union insured to its utmost capacity of embracing in peace and harmony, every future American State that may be constituted or annexed, with a republican form of Government.

"Resolved, That we recognize the rights of the people of all the Territories, including Kansas and Nebraska, acting through the legally and fairly expressed will of a majority of actual residents, and whenever the number of their inhabitants justifies it, to form a constitution with or without slavery, and be admitted into the Union upon terms of perfect equality with the other States."

We are informed by this pamphlet that the reading of these resolutions "was followed by long continued and enthusiastic applause, in which every delegate joined in the most earnest manner."

Here was a time of great rejoicing and universal applause, demonstrative of the deep feeling that animated that august body of political schemers, on the adoption of a platform to be repudiated by their party before the first year of the administration of James Buchanan had terminated.

Good faith and fair dealing, as well as consistency, required that they should carry out these pledges and promises, and their failure to do so is a violation of every principle of right and justice, and convicts them before the country of hypocrisy and false pretense in making them, notwithstanding the "enthusiastic applause of all the delegates" of that convention upon their adoption.

A violation of good faith has received the condemnation and denunciation of the virtuous and good in all past time, and will continue to do so, while truth and integrity have a votary.

For the purpose of showing how James Buchanan held those who violated their pledges and promises to the people, I will read an extract from a speech made by him, in 1841, in the United States Senate. Then he had no regard for those who made pledges and disregarded them, and made the following emphatic record, to which I invite your and his attention, and particularly the attention of the country:

"If you go into the sacred walks of Christianity—Christianity, the purest and best gift which ever descended from heaven upon man—and you there find its professors preaching what they never practice, and never intended to practice, what would be your conviction of the sincerity and true character of such professors? What would you think of that man if, with the principles of this sublime doctrine on his lips, his life gave the lie to his professions? You would not hesitate to pronounce him guilty of the grossest hypocrisy? All mankind would unite with you in calling him a hypocrite."

It might have been well for him and his party if he read this speech before his wanton violation of his platform. He saw fit to adopt the very familiar word "hypocrite," and I propose appropriating it freely in my remarks, and make a proper application of it in my arraignment of his Administration. When they adopted their platform, they knew that there was no danger of a dissolution of the Union, yet they found it necessary to make a "Union-saving" plank for their platform, for the purpose of bolstering up their rotten cause, under the hypocritical pretense that the Union was in danger. They found that popular sovereignty was not strong enough to carry their party through the presidential election, and, therefore, they adopted this "Union-saving" resolution, hypocritical as it was, for the purpose of alarming the people, and thereby gaining support to their tottering party.

They further hypocritically pretended and proclaimed to the country, that the Republican party was in favor of the dissolution of the Union, and that they, the great Democratic party of the country, which was preaching anti-slavery at the North and pro-slavery at the South, were the peculiar friends of the Union, and would preserve it forever. Sir, if I have any knowledge of political parties in this country, I do know and believe that neither is in favor of a dissolution of the Union, and that this charge is false, and the men that made it knew it to be false when they made it, and that it was made to deceive the people, and thereby they would receive their support. I believe that but a very small portion of the people, either North or South, are, in good faith, in favor of a dissolution of the Union. And yet, in order to make their dogma of popular sovereignty stick and be effective, it was necessary to put this Union-saving plaster upon it. Well, sir, after they get through with the saving of the Union, they come in with the declaration of popular sovereignty—that doctrine which was dug up after the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, as I have heretofore shown, for the purpose of appealing to the freemen of the North by telling them that the people of the Territories could regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, and bring in all Territories as free States. If any gentleman had then said that this party ever intended to digress in the least to the right or to the left, or to permit a violation of any single jot or tittle contained in that resolution, he would probably have been branded as a traitor to his country, as a disunionist.

These men themselves violated their own platform, which was given to the people as a panacea for all their evils, and a certain remedy against slavery extension at the North, where that is unpopular with the masses. Yes, sir; that resolution was "adopted amidst applause, in which every delegate in that convention joined." The doctrine was popular; it was a hard doctrine to combat; it was a correct doctrine; and the only mode we had of combating it was, to tell the people that these men did not intend, in good faith, to carry out the principles laid down in their platform. Well, they succeeded; and in their success it was implied that they would carry out the principles laid down in that platform. On the 4th day of March, 1857, James Buchanan was inaugurated here, at the east portico of this Capitol; and there, in the presence of the vast multitude of assembled citizens, he said:

"What a conception, then, was it for Congress to apply this simple rule—that the will of the majority shall govern—to the settlement of the question of domestic slavery in the Territories!"

"But be this as it may, it is the imperative and indispensable duty of the Government of the United States to secure to every resident inhabitant the free and independent expression of his opinion by his vote. This sacred right of each individual must be preserved!"

Prior to that time he had said to the country that he stood upon the Cincinnati platform, and would not add one plank to it, nor take one from it. He stood pledged, then, to carry out in good faith the doctrines laid down in the platform, and I say that it became his solemn duty to do so. Good faith to the country required he should do so. The doctrine was established. The principle was settled. The country relied on the pledges of these men that nothing should hinder or delay them in carrying out the principle which they had thus warmly advocated, and which had thus been applauded by the intellect congregated in the Cincinnati convention. It became necessary, in the course of events that some action should be taken in regard to matters in Kansas, and then the President again reiterated this same doctrine, in his instructions to Governor Walker, of that Territory. Why, sir, the old gentleman had become eloquent—absolutely eloquent. The enthusiasm with which that resolution had been adopted in the Cincinnati convention, had kindled such a fire in his soul that he could not avoid belching forth his patriotic sentiments, when he sent forth his instructions to the Governor of the Territory of Kansas. Hear him:

"Freedom and safety for the legal voter, and exclusion and punishment for the illegal one, these should be the great principles of your administration."

Again:

"And a fair expression of the popular will must not be interrupted by fraud or violence."

"Freedom," "safety for the legal voters," and the "exclusion and punishment of illegal ones." This was sound doctrine; and the people of the country had a right to expect that this President, their Chief Magistrate, sworn to administer the laws of the country in accordance with the principles of the Constitution, thus pledged by the Cincinnati platform which, in party organization, is higher and deeper and wider than all constitutions, thus pledged in his inaugural address and in his instructions to Governor Walker—I ask what had the country a right to look for at the hands of the President? Nothing but good faith and fidelity. Governor Walker, as a faithful servant of the people, considered himself bound, not only by these instructions coming from his superior officer, but by his oath, the Constitution, the law of the land, and the pledges of his party, to see that the people of the Territory of Kansas should be protected in their rights and privileges as American citizens. And what has been the sequel of all this? Nothing more nor less than treason to every pledge made by the Administration, which authorizes me in branding it as hypocritical, in the language of the President in 1841! Why, sir, Governor Walker could not have survived a day had it been known that he intended to do just what the President told him he should do.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Political Organizations—Mr. Leiter.

HO. OF REPS.

Popular sovereignty had by this time taken a new turn. The party found it necessary to change front, as they had done on the Kansas-Nebraska bill. They were playing a double game. It was a two-faced party, having one face for the North and another for the South. It had a South wing and a North wing; but the latter was unsound, and broke in our contest. When it was found that the free-State men had taken possession of the Territory, and that upon a fair and proper vote there would be a repudiation of the institution of slavery, all of a sudden, when the Administration party had its face turned to the right, and in the right direction to carry out popular sovereignty, where do you find it? Without a moment's notice, this political engineer who had hold of the machinery of the Government made a sudden halt, and the word was, "right about face," and away went the great mass of people one way and this Locofoco juggernaut the other. Thank God! it did not go the same way the people did, or it might have rolled over them all; as it is, the people will crush them. Where then were your leading Democrats? Where then was the gallant Douglas, who had stood by you in 1856-57, and elected James Buchanan President, and a majority of Locofocos to this Congress? Where was your Wise, who had immortalized himself in his campaign against Sam? Where were your men of the North, and of the South, who had been preaching the doctrine of popular sovereignty? They stood firmly by popular sovereignty, and are now denounced as traitors; and if they remain in this party, they must do service in the rear ranks. Why, sir, the President's guillotine was put to work taking off the heads of the friends of the very men who had been put upon the track of popular sovereignty by this same political organization called the Democratic party.

Now, I say these are very unkind acts in the President. If he intended to change front, he should at least have given a little notice. He should have at least given as much notice to his friends, as we have to give a man in the State of Ohio to turn him out of our premises. But, sir, I can imagine an orator in our country addressing an assemblage of Democrats, upon the stump, dilating upon the beauties of popular sovereignty, when a horseman comes up at a high speed, in the middle of the speech of the stump orator, bearing the intelligence that the party has changed front. That the Administration at Washington have decided that, instead of popular sovereignty being a good institution, although it had pleased all our people all over our country, North and South, it had become a most abominable heresy; and every man engaged in that kind of preaching was to be ostracized, and forever held in disrepute by the party. Think of the surprise of the stumper at such an announcement. Yet this is illustrative of the course of the Administration. No matter if they were men who had always stood by the party even in its evil days; even in days when many good men had left it they had stood by with the hope of reforming it; because they would not abandon a doctrine of the party, a doctrine which had been preached so long, so loud, and so effectively to the people. One single day swept them out of existence; and the great misfortune is that they have got to go down to posterity as delinquents and political renegades. They can never recover from such a shock unless they join the Republicans, and make themselves useful to the country by adherence to correct principles. There are a great many of them good men. I know a great many Democrats, good and true men, who are included in this class.

Well, sir, during the time these things are taking place in the General Government, we, the people in the States, who, though we were at first suspicious about its origin, had pretty much made up our minds that this doctrine of popular sovereignty, as proposed to be carried out by the President, in the first place, was a reliable and good doctrine. The Democratic party in the State of Ohio, in 1857, became highly elated with the doctrine; they made it the watchword of the party, and with it they made the party stronger than it had been since 1854, because they adhered more closely to principle. In 1857, that party met in State convention at Columbus, and nominated Henry B. Paine for Governor. Their candidate, an eloquent man and a man of learning, came out and made them a speech, from which I will read a short extract, which shows conclusively where they stood, if they were honest, and if not, that they are of that peculiar class called hypocrites. He went on to eulogize the Administration; but that was before the Administration changed front on this popular-sovereignty doctrine.

It was before popular sovereignty had become a heresy in the Democratic party. He says:

"Under his administration Kansas, protected alike from New England and the South, is working out the peaceable results of righteousness. At a day not distant or doubtful, as from the beginning had been predicted, Kansas will be admitted into the galaxy of States, with a free-State constitution, by the votes of her own people; abolishing forever slavery in her midst, thus furnishing an application of practical Democratic doctrines."

• Here you see it declared again that it is the destiny of Kansas to be admitted as a free State, by the votes of its own people, under the auspices of the Democratic party. This is called the "practical results of righteousness." This is just what was "predicted from the beginning." There the Locofocos are anti-slavery, here pro-slavery. It was upon that doctrine that this Democratic candidate for Governor of the State of Ohio went into the canvass, and received a very large and complimentary vote. If he had avowed any such doctrines as are practiced by northern Locofocos here, he would not have received one third the vote he did, and would have been a disgraced man. Yet, with this hypocritical doctrine, he came high being elected Governor of the great State of Ohio.

Why, sir, what is the principal Democratic doctrine? At the South it is the admission of Kansas as a slave State; is it not? Is not that what the Democracy of the South want? At the North they pretend to favor its admission as a free State, and yet their Representatives voted for her admission as a slave State. This I regard as unadulterated Locofocoism.

MR. SMITH, of Virginia. I will answer the gentleman, if I can get the floor.

MR. LEITER. You will have to answer your own Democratic Governor first, who will hold you up in your true light in Virginia.

MR. SMITH, of Virginia. I will answer you first, and him afterwards.

MR. LEITER. Well, you will have a nice job of it. Now, sir, that this doctrine might be fully disseminated in Ohio, it became necessary to have more than the speech of their Democratic candidate for Governor, and on the 7th September, 1857, the Democratic State central committee of Ohio issued an address to the people; and there is some tolerably good reading in that address. I commend it to the consideration of my Democratic friends on this floor. I will read a short extract from it:

"The committee point with pride to the firm and statesmanlike attitude of the President and the Administration in reference to the affairs of Kansas. The determination of Mr. Buchanan to use all his constitutional power, to secure to the people of the Territory the free exercise of their suffrages upon the adoption of the State constitution, meets the unqualified approval of the whole national Democracy, North and South. In the North it could demand no more; in the South it could claim no less. The position taken by Virginia at this juncture is sufficient to arouse the exultation of her sons, wherever they may be found within the limits of the Union, and should be enough to excite the emulation of Ohio to take a stand of equal patriotism. In the eloquent language of one of her Democratic organs, 'Virginia will pray that the Union, as its affairs are now administered, may, in duration, exceed that of the Egyptian pyramids, which, after the lapse of four centuries, still stand erect and unshaken above the floods of the Nile.' The obstacles interposed to prevent a peaceable settlement of the affairs of the Territory, by the people at the ballot-box, in order to create capital for the tottering Republican factions in Ohio and New York, cannot be too severely reprehended."

Here is an endorsement by that central Democratic committee, of the doctrine of popular sovereignty, of the right of the people of Kansas to settle their own domestic affairs in their own way, without interference from the North or the South, or any other quarter. That was good Democratic doctrine in 1857. It was indorsed by the Democratic party of Ohio. The Democratic candidate stood upon it in his canvass for the gubernatorial chair. Then Kansas was to come into this Union as a free State, "thus furnishing an application of practical Democratic doctrine." Here you gentlemen of the South have evidence of the hypocrisy of the Locofocos of the North, and their double dealing on this question. But prior to the election in Ohio, a convention had been called to meet in Kansas for the purpose of framing a constitution, the delegates to which were publicly pledged to a submission of the constitution to a vote of the people of the Territory; and this, too, was urged in Ohio in defense of their position. That convention, called the Lecompton constitutional convention, met. Mark you; the word must have been passed around that Kansas should be a free State, or Mr. Payne would not have made such a speech; nor would that address have been published; for he and they are the most arrant hypocrites that live. Fearful of the results which would follow the action of that convention, a sudden and unexpected change of policy was adopted by the convention, and it adjourned its deliberations until after the election in the States were over. The Republicans in Ohio, and all over the country, sounded the tocsin of alarm, that treason again had entered the camp, and that the enemy were about to usurp the rights of the people of Kansas.

Boldly and manfully were the rights of Kansas upheld by the Republicans all over the country. The President and his party, instead of carrying out their pledges in good faith, with an unworthy disregard of the rights of the people, cast their promises to the winds, and the hypocrisy of their professions became apparent, and the country now is left to depend upon broken promises and violated faith from them. This Lecompton constitutional convention met on the seventh of November, and framed a constitution for Kansas: Then the Legislature of Ohio was elected, and all the elections of the State were over. What, then, was done? They framed a pro-slavery constitution for Kansas—a pro-slavery constitution from the beginning to the end, without a mitigating clause for the relief of the people. Yet, pro-slavery as it was, and pledged as they had been, they dared not submit it to a vote of the people of Kansas. By a system of political thimble-rigging and legerdemain they expected to entrap the free-State men in that Territory. It was all the time claimed, however, by them, that this Lecompton constitution was not a pro-slavery constitution. It was said that portions of the constitution could be stricken out; but the villainy of the thing was too apparent to deceive.

That that constitution is preëminently pro-slavery no fair-minded man will gainsay or controvert; yet it was, and is, claimed by some that such is not its character; and that the people, by the vote provided, could make it a free State. I must dissent from all such constructions of that instrument. I deny that it is susceptible of any such construction; and charge that it is pro-slavery, and pro-slavery only, be the vote what it may. In this opinion I am confirmed by the following extract from the speech of Mr. Randolph, a member of that notable convention from Atchison:

"Now, what was this scheme? What is said? Why, here we have two constitutions—one for slavery, and one without. Well, that's a good one. [Laughter.] Yes, you may laugh; it's just humbug. The fact is, it's a slave-State constitution, and a slave-State constitution. That's it; you may laugh. I'll tell you, the world will soon be laughing at us. This is a grand humbug. It's not fair. It is supposed by some of the gentlemen here that they are awful smart, or that the Abolitionists are awful fools. We expect them to vote for a slave State in this way. They are not such fools as you suppose. But let us suppose that they are such fools. Is it right to swindle them in this way? It isn't fair; I won't do it. If we are to submit it at all, submit it fair; let them have a free-State constitution if they vote to beat us, or do not submit it at all. I tell you this scheme of swindling submission will be the blackest page in your history; and we will never hear the end of it."

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

River and Harbor Improvements—Mr. Hatch.

HO. OF REPS.

This gentleman has spoken like an honest man, pro-slavery as he is, and denounced this scheme of submission as "scoundrelism and humbuggery," intended to defraud and deceive the free-State men of Kansas. I commend this extract to the special consideration of gentlemen here, who claim that the people of Kansas had an opportunity of making a free State, and obstinately refused.

But, sir, this is not all. I have other evidence to prove that instrument pro-slavery. Another gentleman, a member of that convention, and who assisted in forming the constitution, has also spoken on this subject; and I now direct the attention of gentlemen to the following extract from his speech; I allude to Mr. Mobley, a pro-slavery delegate, who said:

"He was a pro-slavery man, and wanted to take steps to make Kansas a slave State. He denounced the trick of the majority report. There were but two ways of making a State constitution. One of them was to submit, and the other was to send direct to Congress. He denounced the majority report. It is a swindle—a monstrous fraud. It wears falsehood on its face in letters of brass. It pretends to submit the constitution, and does not. This is a glaring fraud. It was concocted, not by the pro-slavery party, but the political Democracy. It is a lie, a cheat, a swindle. He is a pro-slavery man. He wants to make Kansas a slave State. He, therefore, puts in the clause requiring the oath. Their enemies will not take that oath. They will thus proceed in a straightforward, regular manner. What do you expect to catch the Republican party of Kansas with that bait? You can't do it. I tell you, if you adopt that report, there will not be five hundred votes for the constitution. The Republicans will never touch it. The true pro-slavery men will forsake it. Where will it be? You can't induce the free-State men of Kansas to vote under such a cheat."

It is to be presumed that this gentleman knew what he was doing, and what he was speaking; and no man will venture to say he was an Abolitionist, determined to make Kansas a free State, or had any motive to do anything less than make a slave State of Kansas. He brands this submission scheme as "a monstrous fraud, a lie, a cheat, a swindle," and a pretended submission of the constitution, when it did no such thing. Notwithstanding these bold and manly declarations, men are found here from the free States of the North who claim that this swindle is a bona fide submission, and that the people are bound by it, and should have voted. These gentlemen, representing free State constituencies, voted to force this fraud, cheat, and swindle, without any change or modification whatever, upon a patriotic and free-dom-loving people who had rejected it by an overwhelming majority; and now these gentlemen, with an unparalleled audacity, set themselves up as rulers and lawgivers for the Democratic party, with power to read Jeffersonian Democrats out of the so-called Democratic party, for refusing to force upon that unwilling and greatly injured people a repudiated constitution.

I congratulate the country upon the fact, that notwithstanding all the schemes and machinations of these Locofocos, they were unable to force the Lecompton constitution upon the people of Kansas. Being foiled in this, their favorite scheme, they applied themselves to getting up another swindle, by which to cheat and defraud that people. The English bill was the result of their deliberations, as the last resort, to make a slave State of free Kansas—a favored scheme of these men. That bill is no less a fraud and cheat than the submission scheme proposed in the Lecompton constitution. We have, in this case, the first trick of the kind ever attempted by any party to influence the people to vote for slavery in consideration of a land bribe and their admission into the Union as a sovereign State, with a pro-slavery constitution and forty thousand population, while they had the penalty for refusal held out to them in the proposition, that, if they did not accept it, they should not be admitted into the Union until there should be a population within that Territory of from one hundred and ten to one hundred and twenty thousand. This is the first instance of an infliction of punishment for the love of freedom, since the days of George III. and the American Revolution. I specially call the attention of this House and the country to this matter, and now, in my place here, give the slave-Democracy notice that I shall hold them responsible before the people for this flagrant outrage upon the people of Kansas, and their usurpation of the rights of the freemen of the United States. This disparagement of free institutions, by these pretending Democrats, shall be published throughout the whole length and breadth of the land, and upon it we will go before the country and take the judgment of the people at our coming elections.

We have again the humiliating spectacle of free Kansas in the North, and slave Kansas in the South, that was so hypocritically and shamefully practiced upon the people of those sections of the Union, with only this difference: that it is now submission of the Lecompton constitution under the English bill in the North, and non-submission in the South; thus playing off the same old game of fast and loose that was too successfully played under the Kansas-Nebraska act.

The Lecompton Locofocos of the North are now placing themselves upon the high ground of submission, and that party at the South put themselves upon the opposite ground, and claim there is no submission; and, with this important decision upon an essential question, they are now before the country claiming to be a national party, with principles harmonious in both sections, while, in truth, their principles are antagonistical and diametrically opposite. Let them settle this inconsistency. They dare not submit it to a vote of the people of Kansas, and they know it.

The December election was held, at which there were some twenty-five hundred legal votes polled—I say nothing of the fraudulent votes—and this is now claimed as an indorsement of the swindle by the people of Kansas. The Legislature which was elected in Kansas, being a free-State one, organized and passed a law to submit that constitution to the people on the 4th day of January. The result you have: overwhelming was the condemnation of that fraud and swindle, that attempted usurpation of the rights of the people of Kansas. I will not discuss the legality of the elections of December or January. The facts are before the people. The country understand the position of parties, and they well know how to make up their action with regard to them. Condemned as that constitution was, pledged as Mr. Buchanan and his administration had been to a submission of the constitution to a vote of the people, yet the President, a Democratic President—God save us from all such!—sends to this House a miserable, whining, sickly, regretting message, recommending its adoption, in violation of all the confidence ever reposed in him by an honest people, who had been deceived into his support.

Gentlemen tell me that the men out there would not vote. I admit it. What was the use of their voting? What propriety was there in their voting? None, sir; for if they had voted they would have fared no better than they did without voting; but, in my opinion, worse, infinitely worse. The thing was set upon them. It was prearranged. The programme was fixed. The trap had been set to catch the free-State men in the Territory of Kansas; but they were not caught; this trick, at least, failed.

Mr. COX. I ask my colleague whether he ever adopted the Lecompton constitution?

Mr. LEITER. No, sir.

Mr. COX. Did you ever vote for the preamble to the Crittenden-Montgomery bill containing that sentiment?

Mr. LEITER. My dear sir, there never was a vote taken on that preamble.

Mr. COX. Yes, there was.

Mr. LEITER. There never was a vote taken on that preamble, and I call the attention of the officers of the House to that fact.

Mr. COX. Let me read it. Will the gentleman allow me to explain? I simply wish to call my colleague's attention to it, for I want to have the fact on record, for use in the next campaign.

Mr. LEITER. Certainly; I know what the preamble is.

Mr. COX. Let me read it. The preamble is:

"Whereas the people of the Territory of Kansas did, by a convention of delegates called and assembled at Lecompton, on the 4th day of September, 1857, for that purpose, form for themselves a constitution and State government, which said constitution is republican, and said convention having asked the admission of said Territory into the Union as a State on an equal footing with the original States—"

Mr. LEITER. But you cannot show that I ever voted for that preamble, and you know it, if you know anything.

Mr. COX. You voted to strike out all after the enacting clause, and that was before the enacting clause.

Mr. LEITER. Exactly; and instead of taking a vote on the preamble as usual, no vote was taken; and you cannot show that there was.

Mr. COX. I can refer the gentleman to the Congressional Globe, showing his vote. He will find it at page 1438.

Mr. LEITER. Show it to me, sir. This vote was not on the preamble, but upon what followed; and I repeat, the preamble was never voted upon, nor was it ever adopted by this House.

Mr. COX. I do not say but my colleague may have done it in mistake.

Mr. LEITER. No, sir; I do not make mistakes in voting. I never voted for that preamble, and I never would vote for it, and I challenge you or any other man to produce the record or vote that will show it. The preamble remained upon the bill by bad engineering, and not by the vote of any one.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

SPEECH OF HON. I. T. HATCH,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. HATCH said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I shall ask the attention of the committee for a brief time to the consideration of the subject of river and harbor appropriations.

No general appropriation since the year 1852 has been made for the improvement of harbors on the northwestern lakes, and of the navigation of our north and southwestern rivers.

The millions of property and the thousands of lives lost upon these waters through the neglect of the Government, it would seem, should arrest public attention. The loss of life and property is still annually increasing. It is doubted, now, whether the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce for the mere repair and preservation of the public works on the northwestern lakes will receive any consideration proportionate to the magnitude of the interests involved.

Your Committee on Commerce say, in their report, they "accept for their guide on this occasion that legislation of their predecessors which, having been now nearly consummated by appropriations, appeals not only to their judgment with the force of a precedent, but presents to their discretion the impropriety of suffering, through neglect, the sacrifice of the millions of money already expended. The vast expanse of commercial enterprise which occupies the extent of the country, and employs the myriads engaged in its pursuits, is well worthy of the fostering hand of Government, stretched to the utmost constitutional verge." They also say "the fact has been quite apparent that without some assistance the money now expended at various points along our sea, lake, and river lines must become a total sacrifice. In many instances the fruits of repeated appropriations are now perishing for want of proper attention; and in all, may the works be not only saved at their present state of completion by timely appropriations, but preserved for future improvement. Your committee, therefore, though arrested by the exhausted condition of the Treasury in their desire to extend liberal assistance to all works of internal improvement, yet have determined to report a bill comprehensive of appropriations required for the preservation of improvements commenced at harbors and in rivers, but in an unfinished and incomplete state."

The amount recommended by your committee, is $1,479,861; an amount almost equal to the cost of four or five gun-boats or screw propellers proposed to be now built to protect your foreign commerce!

The reason assigned by your committee for recommending this limited appropriation is the "retrenching policy." This committee must speak sarcastically when they talk about retrenching river and harbor appropriations! As before remarked, no general appropriation for these purposes has been made for six years. During this period your Treasury was overflowed; now that it is empty, you cannot appropriate, because you must retrench. The resumption of the improvements of the harbors and rivers is not to be determined, as we have seen, by an empty or full Treasury; not as a question of constitutional or equal rights; but, sir, it will have to be determined as a question of political power. Persistent refusal to grant these appropriations, and indiscriminate opposition to them, is forcing on this issue; every new State added to the Northwest hastens and insures the resumption of the public works. My constituency are deeply interested in the inland commerce of the country; and, as their Representative, I am bound to urge these appropriations. I shall only now present the subject briefly, leaving a fuller vindication of their justice to the future.

I believe none will dispute the proposition that the external commerce of a nation is entirely dependent on the internal commerce and trade. Foreign commerce cannot exist without domestic commerce.

The history of the rise and fall of nations, in past and modern times, attests this truth. There is only one exception among the four Powers of the world, and the colossal wealth of that country has been accumulating from national robbery and conquest throughout the earth.

No nation on this globe has an inland commerce that equals that of this country, either in the grandeur of its geographical characteristics or in the magnitude of its agricultural and mineral wealth. Nowhere can be found such a chain of inland seas—Lakes Champlain, Ontario, Erie, St. Clair, Huron, Michigan, and Superior—all connected by rivers, canals, or ship-canal, and bound to the valley of the Mississippi by a net work of railroads. But, sir, it is only the agricultural and mineral wealth which annually pours through these inland channels of commerce to which I wish briefly to call attention. All the gold that has passed through the golden gates of California since its discovery does not equal one year's value of our inland commerce.

Its origin was the completion of the Erie canal in 1825, which opened the vast wilderness and boundless prairies of the West to an eastern emigration such as never before has been witnessed in any exodus of the human races. Here the industrious poor of the world found homes, and founded States. The products of their labor established an inland commerce, from which has arisen foreign commerce sustaining an ocean marine that rivals British supremacy on the seas.

I shall briefly now, sir, refer to the character, extent, claims, and mode of protection of this inland commerce.

THE CHARACTER OF INLAND COMMERCE.

Chief Justice Taney says, in 12 Howard, page 452, (1851:)

"These lakes are, in truth, inland seas—different States border on them on one side, and a foreign nation on the other. A great and growing commerce is carried on upon them between different States and foreign nations, which is subject to all the incidents and hazards that attend commerce on the ocean. Hostile fleets have encountered on them, and prizes have been made; and every reason which existed for the grant of admiralty jurisdiction to the Government on the Atlantic seas, applies with equal force to the lakes."

THE EXTENT OF INLAND COMMERCE.

For the extent of the inland commerce, I refer to the official report.

Andrews, in his Colonial Lake Trade, 1852, says—page 49:

"The whole traffic of these great waters may be now unhesitatingly stated at $326,000,000, employing seventy-four thousand tons of steam and one hundred and thirty-eight thousand tons of sail, for the year 1851. Whereas, previous to 1800, there was scarcely a craft above the size of an Indian canoe to stand against an aggregate marine, built up within half a century, in what was then almost a pathless wilderness, of two hundred and fifteen thousand tons burden."

In 1856, you will find in a report of the Committee on Commerce to this House (No. 316, page 9, vol. 3) an elaborate statement of the tonnage, imports, and exports of each of the lake districts, as follows:

Commerce of the lakes—exclusive of freight and passenger trade.
	Tonnage entered and cleared.	Value of imports and exports.
Buffalo district.....	$3,330,232	$303,023,000
Cuyahoga district.....	1,782,493	162,185,640
Sandusky.....		59,966,000
Maumee.....	1,034,644	94,107,000
Chicago.....	2,062,000	233,878,000
Detroit.....	1,588,000	140,000,000
Milwaukee.....		35,000,000
Oswego.....	1,607,000	146,325,000
Double exports and imports.....	2)	1,174,394,650
Other ports on Lake Ontario omitted....		587,197,320
		42,226,000
Total value of commerce of the lakes, exclusive of Presque Isle and Michilimackinac.....		639,423,320

I will also add from Graham's official report to the Senate—page 401:

"The States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and the Territory of Minnesota, have their shores washed by the great inland seas, whose intercommunication, by ship navigation, is much interrupted by the want of a safe and sure channel over these flats.

"The States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and a portion of Michigan, on the one side, are crippled in their important commercial relations with the remaining portion of the State of Michigan, and with the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and the Territory of Minnesota, on the other side, by this intervening obstacle. Something would seem, then, under the purview of the Constitution, to be necessary to be done, in order to regulate the commerce between these States. Viewed in this light, the subject becomes one of great public concern.

"The value of the articles of commerce and navigation which passed over these flats during the two hundred and thirty days of open navigation, in the year 1855—say between the middle of April and the 1st of December—will be presently shown to have amounted to the immense sum of $259,721,455 50; that is to say, two hundred and fifty-nine million seven hundred and twenty-one thousand four hundred and fifty-five dollars and fifty cents; or, per day, during the navigable season, $1,120,923 72. The improvement, then, when undertaken, should be executed with a degree of permanency and celerity combined, commensurate with its importance and the magnitude of the interests involved."

Those who wish to make the comparison between the inland and foreign commerce will find that the former always largely exceeds the latter whenever a healthy prosperity exists among the people, and the balance of trade with foreign countries is preserved. Exports are the credits of a nation and imports its debits; internal commerce furnishes its exports. This commerce had received every sanction which could establish its claim for protection from the General Government. The highest tribunal pronounced it identical in feature and substance, in every commercial and national view, with that carried on between nations on the ocean. So large and of such kind was it, that in 1845, from the necessities of trade, Congress was obliged to pass a law extending over it the whole body of the admiralty laws—a system of laws never before made applicable save to the high seas.

The inland commerce, sir, has not only had judicial and legislative recognition, but its general protection has been sanctioned by the practice of the Government until 1852. I add, from a report of Colonel Albert to the Senate, No. 44, Executive Document, second session Twenty-Ninth Congress:

Recapitulation for the construction and repair of roads and improvement of harbors.
Under Mr. Jefferson.....	$48,000
Mr. Madison.....	250,000
Mr. Monroe.....	707,000
Mr. Adams.....	2,310,475
Mr. Jackson.....	10,582,882
Mr. Van Buren.....	2,222,544
Mr. Tyler.....	1,076,500

I will not stop to comment here upon these appropriations, except to mark the fact that three quarters of the harbor and river appropriations have been made by Democratic Administrations.

The rule which governed these enumerated appropriations was laid down by Mr. Monroe:

"That Congress has a discretionary power, restricted only by the duty to make appropriations to purposes of common defense, and of general, not local—national, not State, benefit."

This was recognized by Jackson. He says: "The practice of making appropriations for light-houses, public piers, harbors, and ports of the United States, to render the navigation thereof safe and easy, had been coeval within the Constitution itself, and been continued without interruption or dispute."

THE CLAIMS OF INLAND COMMERCE.

Now, sir, as to the claims of this inland commerce on the General Government.

In the census of 1850 it will be found that more than half the white population of this country was in the lake States.

The increasing population of the Northwest and the advancing immigration have enlarged this proportion. If it be true that the consumer pays the duties, then, sir, the lake regions pay over half your revenues—some thirty millions. They are the consumers and the producers. They are doubly taxed by the delays, the obstructions, and dangers of the navigation of your lakes and rivers. The additional charges for freight and insurance from these causes diminish the value of their productions and increase the cost of articles of consumption. Duty-paying merchandise which they consume they buy dearer, while they sell their own products cheaper, from the neglect of the Government to improve their lines of inland commerce. I will refer again to Graham's report to show the beneficial influences which the neglect to improve a single work—the national gateway of the inland commerce of this country—has had upon the people of the Northwest. At page 408, he says:

"Freights over St. Clair flats in American vessels in the year 1855, were $13,761,840; and in foreign vessels trading with American ports $551,256.

"These results are derived by allowing six dollars per register ton as the price of freights upon the amount of tonnage that passed over the flats to and from the ports mentioned in the districts of Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Oswego, and Ogdensburg, as shown in the accompanying statements marked from N. 55 to N. 70 inclusive. These sums are, of course, the gross amounts of the receipts accruing on freights.

"The net proceeds would be the difference between these sums and the expenses of navigation, such as the hire of crews, insurance on vessels, repairs, tugging off St. Clair flats when aground, losses from detention while thus aground, pilotage, harbor fees, &c.

"Among these enumerated expenses, that which arises from the detention, damage, and towage by steam tugs, caused by the obstruction to navigation at the flats, is the one regarded as the most onerous by the navigators, the merchants, and the farmers of the nine States and one Territory beforementioned." They all have to bear a portion of the additional charges which arise from this cause. The farmer, has, however, the most oppressive part of the burden to bear; because the navigator clears himself, in a great measure, by his increased charges for freight, and the merchant by increasing his prices at retail on account of the losses by the detention and risk growing out of this obstruction to navigation. But the farmer is compelled to be governed by current prices for his grain, and the diminution of price allowed him by the shipper, on account of the contingencies due to the want of free navigation over the flats, is a direct tax on the fruits of the farmer's industry.

"The increase on the rates of freights owing to the obstructions, as it now exists, may be estimated at full fifteen (15) per cent., or annually to the sum of $2,064,276. Full two thirds of this amount falls on the farmers. They may, therefore, be said to pay an annual tax on their produce, and necessary articles of consumption, arising from this obstruction, of $1,376,184; which is more than two and a half times the estimated cost of the work upon the most extended plan proposed."

I have referred to the fact that the largest portion of the revenues in this country is paid by those interested in the inland commerce. If this be not true, I ask, sir, to what cause will you look for the decline of the revenue? The southern staples have gone to market in increased quantities and enhanced prices.

From an overflowing Treasury the Government suddenly becomes a borrower. You will have to look to the decline in the inland commerce for the cause. I add the comparative returns for two years of the Erie canal, in the State of New York, which is the greatest channel for the exchange of the inland and foreign commerce, and has made New York city the merchant carrier and banker of the Union:

Statement showing the aggregate quantity and value of the property transported upon the canals during the years 1856 and 1857.

	1856.	1857.
Tons.....	2,774,412	2,047,884
Value.....	$208,418,441	$122,206,259
Decrease in tonnage 1856 and 1857.....		726,528
Decrease in value " ".....		$86,212,182

* The States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Missouri, and the Territory of Minnesota, (now State.)

† It will be remembered that the farmer is burdened in a two-fold capacity, viz: first, as a producer; and second, as a consumer.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Post Office at Columbus—Mr. Cox.

Ho. OF REPS.

The millions of this decrease of the inland commerce, whilst it gives a solution of your financial difficulties, shows unerringly the source of your revenue.

I might follow this inquiry and show that every facility you added to inland transportation and every consumer and producer that emigrated to the West increased the means of your foreign commerce, and in return, increased your revenues.

As a question in political economy in the augmentation of national wealth, the improvement of harbors and rivers should be the first care of the Government.

If those who bear the burden of Government are entitled to share any of its benefits, then these inland interests should not be longer neglected.

You do not hesitate to vote annually millions to protect life and property engaged in foreign commerce in distant seas; yet upon your inland seas, millions of property is there sacrificed and thousands of lives there lost by your persistent neglect to appropriate insignificant sums to preserve their harbors from destruction.

You do not hesitate to vote millions for fortifications, and harbors on the Atlantic coast, but your inland coast, equal in national importance and almost equal in extent, is unfortified, and harbors neglected and perishing receive no consideration, even for common defense; when all know that in the event of war with England, now threatened on this floor, hostile fleets, as in 1812, will again encounter on every inland sea, and our whole frontier again smoke and blaze with contending armies.

It is true you appropriate a few thousand dollars every year for light-houses on our lakes, for which we are thankful, as that gives "light" to warn our mariners in the darkness and the storm to shun your decaying and dilapidated piers, and your dangerous and treacherous harbors.

THE OBJECTIONS TO APPROPRIATIONS.

In the remarks I intended to make, I cannot notice fully all the objections against these appropriations. I can only refer to two, which are the principal ones: First, That they involve schemes of private speculation and public corruption.

If this allegation be true, it assails the integrity of the representative and the fidelity of the public servant. It proves too much; it proves a decay of public virtue that strikes at the fundamental principle as well as the progress of self-government. When the public welfare of millions of our agricultural people must be neglected and sacrificed because the Government has not vigor and virtue enough to prevent political profligacy from dividing with them the means which the Government appropriates for the promotion of these paramount interests, then our representative system is not worth preserving.

The other objection made to appropriations for our commercial conveniences and securities in the West is, that the collection districts, as they allege, produce no revenue. This is a modern cavil.

To make revenue a test of these western appropriations is a fallacy not creditable to the intelligence and statesmanship of those who make it. It is answer enough that these general appropriations are demanded by the "public welfare" and the common "defense."

The reciprocity treaty diminished the revenue, but increased the business, and has required enlarged commercial conveniences. If the vigilance now maintained by the custom-house police on the frontier were relaxed, you would find the West soon underselling your New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore merchants, from the supplies of contraband goods, and the necessities for the palatial custom-houses on the Atlantic coast would no longer exist, as you would have no revenue to collect.

The revenue which the West pays to the national Government is not to be measured by the meager returns of your custom-houses—it must be estimated by what its millions of consumers pay; for no fact is more undeniable in political economy than that revenue is a tax upon the consumption of the country.

Yes, sir, the consumers and producers of the West demand these appropriations, not as concessions of favor, but of right—constitutional and equal rights among the States and the people of the States of this Union, to have their harbors improved, their rivers and channels of commerce cleared for the cheap transportation of their articles of consumption and production to and from the markets of the world.

The enemies of inland appropriations vote free trade on the frontier, and then claim that we are not entitled to any appropriation because we collect no revenue. Their logic is as bad as their inconsistency is unpardonable. I will add here, to remove the misrepresentation constantly made on this floor, on these points a statement of the amount of revenues collected, and appropriations made for northwestern lakes, from 1837 to 1855:

The revenues collected in fifteen districts amounted to.....	$5,511,129 98
Amount appropriated for lakes.....	2,884,125 00
Excess of revenue over appropriations.....	$2,627,004 98

It will thus be seen that appropriations for the western lakes are in the aggregate about equal to appropriations for the construction of the New Orleans custom-house, which still cries "give!"

THE ONLY CONSTITUTIONAL MODE FOR THE PROTECTION OF INLAND COMMERCE.

I have now to refer to the only mode for the improvement of harbors and rivers suggested, except that sanctioned by the practice of the Government since its origin—the tonnage system. This, sir, I believe, is impracticable and unconstitutional. It was tried under the Confederation, and one of the causes which led to the early formation of our present Constitution was the conflict between the States in their internal and external commerce.

The result was the transfer of the power over both, as well as of the revenues of all the States, in trust for the "public welfare," to the General Government as the only remedy for angry collisions and conflicting rivalries between the States.

The history of that period is full of admonition as to its inexpediency, even if it were constitutional, to return to this exploded system.

We would suppose our Constitution plain on this point:

"Nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another."—Sec. 9, art. I.

Free trade among the States was the policy of the framers of the Constitution, and in analogy with its spirit and all its provisions. It was recognized in the ordinance of 1787:

"The navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying places between the same, shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said Territory as to the citizens of the United States, and those of any other States that may be admitted into the Confederacy, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor."

This was reaffirmed by Congress after the adoption of the Constitution by an act of Congress of 7th August, 1789. So it will be seen that in the Constitution as well as in Congress, the principle of liberty was not only intended to be established as an equal right of the people, but free trade between the States was made a part of our organic form of government.

I felt called on, sir, to refer to this tonnage system, from the distinguished recommendation it has received for the last six years—[Mr. DOUGLAS.] It is to be regretted that it has been renewed by some of the friends of the inland commerce of the country, as the effect can only be to divide them on the only constitutional and practicable measure of relief.

I have thus, sir, concisely presented the leading features of our inland commerce, and its claims for these very limited appropriations. It is idle for gentlemen to suppose that they can much longer successfully resist them. This great interest must be restored to its equal position as a branch of public service. The time was when these national questions occupied the attention of this House, but, unfortunately, slavery and anti-slavery abstractions have crowded from these Halls all fair consideration of the public welfare. This cannot continue. These long neglected inland interests must resume their place in the public mind!

Their recognition here will be enforced by the political power that is accumulating in the North and Southwest from the increasing immigration. The elements of political power with us are population and the ballot-box.

The strip of a sea-board on the Atlantic, and the manufacturing portions of the country bordering on it, must sooner or later yield to the just demands of the numerical supremacy of the West for the improvement of their great lines of internal trade and commerce, which will and must ever be kept free, open, and common to our people. Inland commerce is the peaceful sovereign of the Union.

Its seat of empire is in the summits of the West; the sources of the mighty rivers of this country are there. They cannot be in one Government and their outlets in another. Inland commerce, will hold all together—sea-board, lakes, rivers, valleys and mountains, and from its outward movement to the ocean will be created a community of interest and a fraternity of feeling that will bind the Union of these States together and forever.

POST OFFICE AT COLUMBUS.

SPEECH OF HON. SAMUEL S. COX, OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. COX said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I did not come here this evening with the intention of saying a word; I expected only to have been a hearer; I wished to pay that compliment to a distinguished colleague, [Mr. LEITER.]

During the course of my colleague's speech, I asked leave to propound this question: whether, notwithstanding all his repudiation of the Le-compton constitution, and after all his statements that the people had repudiated it, he did not record his voice in favor of the preamble of the Crittenden-Montgomery bill? That preamble is as follows:

"Whereas the people of the Territory of Kansas did, by a convention of delegates called and assembled at Le-compton on the 4th day of September, 1857, for that purpose, form for themselves a constitution and State government, which said constitution is republican, and said convention having asked the admission of said Territory into the Union as a State, on an equal footing with the original States—"

My colleague denied having so voted. I referred him to his vote in the Globe, page 1437. He insisted on saying that he did not thus vote. I told him, as I thought very charitably, that he no doubt did so vote for the preamble, under a mistake. My colleague replied that he made no mistakes in legislation. He knew what he did when he voted. I take him, then, at his word. I confess, for myself and many anti-Le-compton Democrats, that we did not know we were voting for that preamble; though I do not consider preambles of much legislative force. But my colleague makes no such mistake—not he. Let us see, then, what he did knowingly.

Mr. LEITER. We were entitled to a separate vote on that preamble.

Mr. COX. Did you get it? Did you ask for it?

Mr. LEITER. That preamble was never adopted by this House.

Mr. COX. I will refer to the record. The gentleman, it must be remembered, never votes by mistake. I have the Congressional Globe before me. Turn to page 1436, where Mr. MONTGOMERY offered his amendment:

"Mr. MONTGOMERY. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:—"

After voting down Mr. QUITMAN's amendment, the amendment of Mr. MONTGOMERY was voted in. Then Mr. CAMPBELL, an old legislator, who knew well the effect of the vote, called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. What was that bill? I have it before me. It has a preamble before the enacting clause. All after that was stricken out; but the preamble remained. Mr. CAMPBELL called for the yeas and nays on the preamble and amendment of Mr. MONTGOMERY, which constitute the entire House bill. On that vote my colleague's name is recorded for the preamble and amendment, page 1437, fourth line from the bottom of the last column.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Post Office at Columbus—Mr. Cox.

Ho. of REPS.

Mr. LEITER. It must be remembered that resolutions and bills are always passed before the preambles.

Mr. COX. We will come to that in a moment. He did not vote for that preamble; and he never votes by mistake, he says. There is no escape for the gentleman from this dilemma. I would not call attention to it, but for the fact that my colleague's political friends in Ohio, in the course of their unexampled abuse of my vote for the conference bill, have quoted the same preamble which all the Republicans voted for, for my condemnation. I do not profess to understand this thing as well as the gentleman. He never votes by mistake; therefore, he must have sustained that bill as it went from the House to the Senate; and that bill, as it passed the House, had the preamble in it. How could it have got through this House without his vote? for on this bill he voted every time with the majority! Can there be any doubt about it? Turn over to page 1438, and you will see that Mr. MONTGOMERY, after "the bill, as amended, was passed," moved to "strike out of the preamble a part of the language used."

Mr. LEITER. We ought to have had a separate vote on that preamble. It was poorly engineered. I looked on the management then as bungling.*

Mr. COX. Whether it was good engineering or not, my colleague voted for the preamble; and he never votes by mistake. If it was bad engineering and bungling, my colleague is in for it; and cannot help it by his denial. Ah! the gentleman is beginning to understand the matter. If it was all right, and he made no mistake, and he did not vote for the preamble, where is there any bungling? Where the bad management? If my colleague did not vote for the preamble, there is no bungling, none at all. Why should Mr. MONTGOMERY move to strike out a part of the preamble, if the gentleman [Mr. LEITER] voting with the majority did not vote for it? Allow me to quote from the Globe, page 1438:

"Mr. MONTGOMERY. Is it in order to move to strike out of the preamble a portion of the language?"

"The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it is not. The question has been suggested within the last few minutes. The proper time to have moved any amendment to the preamble was, in the opinion of the Chair, before the bill was ordered to a third reading."

So that it was then too late, as it is now too late, for any of us to get rid of that vote for the Montgomery bill. I have no such desire. I think, before the fall election is over, certain gentlemen will be sorry for their attacks upon members who honestly voted for the conference bill,

*The complaint of Mr. LEITER is, that he did not get a chance to vote against the preamble; that it ought to have been submitted to a separate vote. The inference he would like us to draw is, that as he could not get a separate vote, he had to vote for the whole bill—preamble and amendment. Now, he had a clear chance to take; if he did not like the preamble, he could have voted against the previous question, which estopped a separate vote. This he did not do. He voted to sustain the previous question. He therefore voted to cut off his own chance to get a separate vote; for it is well settled that after a bill is passed under the previous question it is out of order, as Speaker ORR decided, to amend or strike out the preamble. Never has a point been more notoriously settled. It was settled in the Twenty-Ninth Congress, famous for its accomplished parliamentarians—Winthrop, Cobb, Douglas, John Quincy Adams, Toombs, Ingersoll, and others. It was settled in the Mexican war bill. Its famous preamble ran thus: "Whereas, by the act of the Republic of Mexico, a state of war exists between that Government and the United States: Be it enacted," &c.

Many of the Opposition wished to vote supplies, but believed the preamble false. But they had no power, as they knew, to amend the preamble, or strike it out. They could not get a separate vote on it after Mr. Brinkerhoff demanded the previous question. Mr. Garrett Davis, laboring under this dilemma, said: "I object to the preamble, because it sets forth so bold a falsehood. I protest solemnly against defiling this measure with the unfounded statement that Mexico began this war." Congressional Globe, vol. 15, page 794. Mr. Garrett Davis asked to be excused from voting; but he was not excused. He voted for the bill, but he did what Mr. Leiter did not—protested against the preamble. He never claimed a separate vote on the preamble, because he knew it was unparliamentary. The parliamentary law was before then well settled. No doubt many (Deiano, Root, Giddings, Adams, Vance, and others) voted against the bill because they did not like the preamble. Mr. Leiter had the same privilege on the House bill. He did not exercise it; and it is too late now to complain. Certainly he cannot complain of the Democrats who voted with him for the same preamble—in the Senate bill, the House bill, or the conference bill.

which, as Mr. MONTGOMERY himself says, is the same thing in substance, except, perhaps, a "few verbal alterations."

How, then, can the gentleman say there is a preamble to the House bill, unless he voted for it? He never gave a vote against the bill in any shape. The preamble was voted for by him when he voted for the bill as amended.

Mr. LEITER. It was permitted to remain there, when it should have been stricken out.

Mr. COX. Very well. I have said all I desired to on that point. That remark of my colleague is enough for him. I do not refer to this matter now for any other purpose than to advise gentlemen that they are not to be allowed to put the Democracy of Ohio to the defense of that which they themselves did—knowingly did—did under no misapprehension. And when we are charged with voting, by way of preamble, that the "people of Kansas" made Lecompton "for themselves," we point to the entire Republican record to show that gentlemen, under "no mistake," recorded the same thing as their opinion.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose principally because I desired to express my views, briefly, upon a matter of local importance to my State, district, and city. I wish to place upon record the views and facts which appertain to a local measure that lies close to my heart, and which I have pursued this whole session with a sleepless anxiety. I hold in my hand House bill No. 539, reported unanimously from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, "providing for certain public buildings for post offices and other Government purposes." Among the hundred cases submitted for their consideration, the committee, on the 28th April, wisely selected about a dozen, and, among them, the city of Columbus, and have reported $50,000 "for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building there, for a post office, and other Government purposes." Yesterday, the Post Office Committee of the Senate selected Columbus, with three other cases, for the favorable action of the Senate. To-morrow the vote will be taken on it in that body.

With this double and emphatic recommendation, I propose to give to the House some of the reasons I have been urging for the appropriation.

I know that it is an unpropitious time for such matters. The Treasury is empty, although the country is rich. The Government, however, has no debt of any consequence to a nation like ours; and although the Secretary of the Treasury frowns upon such objects at present, yet I do hope that a case of necessity like that of Columbus will not meet with a rebuff from Congress. At least, I shall have done my duty in presenting its merits now; trusting, if not to the present, then to the next session, to do what ought to be done now.

I desire, at least, now to lay the foundation of a claim on the legislation of Congress which, at a more seasonable time, I will urge, with no such drawback as a poor Treasury.

No one who has ever seen the present Columbus post office building would doubt that there exists a pressing necessity there for the construction of a Government building. Some eight hundred of its prominent citizens have memorialized Congress upon that subject.

The following among other reasons are urged in its behalf:

1. Columbus is the capital of Ohio, in which is annually assembled the Legislature of the State, composed of about one hundred and sixty members and officers. This body is in session at least three months. The supreme court of the State holds terms during one half the year. The executive offices and nearly all of the public institutions are located here.

Other State capitals, among the rest our neighbors, Indiana and Illinois, have had the benefit of a post office building conferred on them. Our State has at least equal, if not superior, claims to the same regard.

2. The city contains a population of about twenty-seven thousand inhabitants, and is the center of extensive and important business transactions. There are four railroads radiating from thence—to Cleveland, to Wheeling, to Indianapolis, to Cincinnati—each cardinal thoroughfare to the four points of the compass.

3. The office performs the business of a population of nearly forty thousand, in addition to the population of the city. Its revenue is $4,224 65; but that is no adequate criterion of the importance and service of the office.

4. It is one of the three distributing offices of the State, and has in its service the labor of twelve clerks, and requires really a larger force.

5. The building now in use is poorly adapted to the business of the office. Its construction does not afford the necessary facilities for the convenient transaction of business. It is badly lighted, and cannot be warmed without danger. It is not a safe depository for the valuable matter passing through the office. In its rear is a bake-shop and coffee and spice-grinding establishment, which has three times been consumed by fire. On the last occasion of fire, an adjoining building was destroyed, and many others put in danger. On one side is an extensive eating establishment, which has its kitchen under the office. In the upper part of the building are offices, and a public hall for concerts and exhibitions. The rent for the present office is $800. It is on the south side of the public square, in a most convenient location, but wholly inadequate for the purpose for which it is used.

6. There is no building in the city, with a proper location, and of proper construction and arrangement, which can be rented for the office. The building ought to be in the heart of the city, and no such building can be had at present.

7. There is another claim which central Ohio makes for the accommodation of the capital. There will be terms of the United States courts held again at Columbus, when the law now reported for that purpose in the Senate shall have passed. The exigency of the case demands such a law. The separation of the State into two judicial districts, in 1854, was a loss to the capital, in more than one sense. It was a great disadvantage to one third of the counties of the State, which were interested in the litigation of the United States courts. Ohio furnished at Columbus, for years, a building, rent free, as I believe, for the United States courts; and now she asks, in her necessity, for a building for Federal purposes—as one sign, at least, of Federal recognition.

8. She has had but little attention of this kind. Although paying, as I shall show, over six million dollars annually, into the Federal Treasury, she has received in appropriations for buildings, altogether, only about six hundred thousand, as follows:

Cincinnati.....	$201,130
Toledo.....	75,001
Sandusky.....	74,571
Cleveland.....	159,800
	$601,502

I might show what other States, which pay smaller tribute to the Federal Treasury, have received, not counting immense appropriations for sea-coast improvements, but simply for buildings alone. Maine has received more than $650,000. Little Rhode Island over $264,000—a State with one tenth of the representation which Ohio has on this floor. The New Orleans custom-house alone has already cost $2,675,258, and requires, to finish it, $1,500,000 more. It has already cost nearly five times as much as Ohio has received altogether. Virginia—less than Ohio in her Federal representation and Federal taxes—has received $800,000 for public buildings.

But these comparisons are invidious. I venture to say that Ohio, by the votes of her members of Congress, has contributed liberally toward those improvements which lie out of her State. She has been as liberal by her votes to the Atlantic and other States, as she has been by the payment of her Federal taxes. She pays, as I said, one tenth of the Federal revenue. The taxes paid by the people of Ohio stand thus:

Taxes paid to the State.....	$2,609,395
Taxes paid for local purposes.....	6,063,903
Taxes paid to the United States.....	6,000,000
	$14,673,298

The taxes paid to the National Government are more than double those paid to the State Government; and the people of Ohio pay for the support of the State government but one sixth what they pay for the support of the National Government; for one half of the above $2,609,000 is paid for schools.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Washington and Oregon War Claims—Mr. Stevens.

HO. OF REPS.

The statement that we pay $6,000,000 to the national Government is based on these facts:

1. The average national revenue (wholly indirect) is about sixty-five million dollars per annum. This year it may be $70,000,000; but $65,000,000 is a fair average.

2. The entire amount of this is paid by the white inhabitants of the United States, excepting, perhaps, a very few free blacks.

3. Of the white population of the United States, the State of Ohio has just about one tenth.

4. The people of Ohio have as much property, and live quite as comfortably as the people of any section of the Union.

5. From these facts, it follows inevitably, that the people of Ohio consume one tenth of all the products on which the custom-house tax is levied, as iron, sugar, &c. They also, undoubtedly, pay their full proportion of what is paid for public lands. In the last ten years, full seventy thousand people have gone from Ohio to Iowa alone. This is a matter of certainty. Millions of our capital have been sent West and invested in the public lands of the new States and Territories, and have contributed to swell the Federal exchequer. The conclusion, then, is unavoidable, that the people of Ohio contribute one tenth, namely, $6,500,000, to the national revenue. For caution's sake, I put it at $6,000,000.

Is it not fair and just that a State so liberal and ready to do her part toward the Federal revenue should receive some consideration. Even in a time when the Treasury seems depressed, when she presents a case of necessity and urgency, should she not have a small quota of the public expenditure? Ohio gives freely to the improvements of the coast. She has paid her tribute for the maintenance of our noble little Army. She has voted to sustain the Navy which bears our flag; and though "inland far she be," she is as ready today to vote supplies of balls and powder, shells and ships, and other instruments of naval warfare, to punish British insolence and aggression, and maintain the nationality of our flag, as she was in her youth, on the 10th of February, 1810, when, by the resolutions of her Legislature, she pioneered the sentiment which led to the late war with England. In every relation which Ohio sustains to the Federal Government, she has shown a fidelity and a patriotism which it is not now in bad taste, I trust, to recall, when I ask for her beautiful capital, which I am proud to represent here, a structure which may at once decorate it with a monument of elegance, and subserve the most practical purposes of a prosperous and growing population.

I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by moving that the committee rise.

Mr. LEITER. I wish to ask my colleague a question here. Have I not quoted correctly the remarks of Governor Paine?

Mr. COX. I expect you have. I expect that Governor Paine will say the same thing upon the stump in Ohio in the next canvass. We will stand up to the doctrine of the Cincinnati platform, and we will, I have no doubt, after the election, have the gratification of knowing that we have again thrashed our Republican opponents. We will not claim the victory until it has been won. We will not go into ecstasies over a result until it has been announced. We will not, as the gentleman from Virginia says my colleague has done, count our chickens before they are hatched.

Mr. LEITER. Did I not quote from the Democratic Central Committee of Ohio correctly?

Mr. COX. I am not positive about that. I should like to examine for myself. I have no doubt the gentleman has endeavored to quote correctly.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The Democrats of the South only ask that the people of Kansas shall manage their own affairs in their own way. Let that be conceded to them, and there will not be a murmur from us.

Mr. COX. That is my doctrine.

Mr. LEITER. My colleague must know that I would not quote what was not a true extract.

Mr. COX. I concede that.

WASHINGTON AND OREGON WAR CLAIMS.

SPEECH OF HON. I. I. STEVENS,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. STEVENS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I take this occasion to present a few observations in regard to the Washington and Oregon war claim. This is a matter certainly of some little consequence, for it involves no less a sum than $6,000,000. Incident to this, however, is another question of more importance still, namely: the character and honor of the people of those distant Territories, and the honor of our whole country. One question touches the Treasury of the United States, and the other the good name of the people of the United States. I shall dwell upon them both. I shall endeavor to vindicate the character and conduct of the people of those Territories, and the operations undertaken by the authorities of those Territories for the purpose of suppressing Indian hostilities. I shall endeavor to show that those operations were necessary, that they were economical, and that they are entitled to the confidence and sympathy of the country; and finally, I shall endeavor to show by precedents, by the course of the Government in regard to other portions of the country, that we have a right to expect prompt and ample justice from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it has been often charged against us that that war was brought on by outrages upon the rights of the Indians; that it was gotten up for the purpose of speculation; and that it was the treaties which caused the war. Well, sir, suppose the treaties did cause the war; suppose we did have vagabonds in that country who committed outrages upon the Indians; suppose some few citizens were operated upon by the motive of making a speculation out of the war; if these things be true, did they make it any less the duty of the people and of the authorities of the Territories, a war having come upon them, to protect the settlements? What account would an Executive have had to render, who, when he heard that the Indians were devastating the settlements, burning the houses, and massacring the women and children, had declined to protect those settlements, on the ground that here and there a white man had outraged the Indians, and had driven them to arms? Suppose the treaties did incite the war, was it the fault of the people of those Territories? Was the appointment of commissioners, the calling together of councils, and the forming of treaties, their act? Not at all. It was the act of your Government. It was the act of your Congress. It was done under the orders of your President. The people of the Territories certainly were not responsible, nor were the Executives of those people responsible. Sir, it does seem to me that it would be trifling with the intelligence, and insulting the understandings of gentlemen of this committee, if I were to undertake to defend the people of those Territories from the charge of having brought about this war for purposes of speculation. Who are the people of those Territories? How did they get there? Were they mere vagabonds and outcasts? Did they go there without law, and give to the world an example of lawlessness and insubordination? No, sir, they were American citizens, the very choice and flower of your yeomanry. They went there carrying with them the arts and arms, the laws and institutions of their country, and there they planted empire and civilization. How is this Government, and how are the people of these States known upon that coast? It is through the eighty-odd thousand people there who have given to the world, from their first settlement, an example of a law-abiding, an industrious, a patriotic, a suffering—ay, and a heroic people. You are known there through them, and through the institutions which they have carried there with them. Sir, when men talk about vagabonds in that country, I might with propriety refer them to Baltimore, and to Philadelphia, and to New York, and to all your large cities, and even to this national capital.

Have you no vagabonds? Have you no courts, no juries, no jails, no penitentiaries? Why, even here, murder stalks at noon-day, and has marched in procession. It has controlled the elections of a neighboring city; and this, too, in your densely populated old States—this, too, in your cities, where civilization and refinement reign. I say to gentlemen who fling the term vagabond into our faces, first pull the beam out of your own eye, and then you can see clearly to pull the mote out of your brother's eye.

But, Mr. Chairman, I most emphatically deny all these charges; and I speak from the most abundant opportunities of personal observation. The good name of that people is dear to me. They have behaved in such a manner as entitles them—not to sufferance, not simply to be passed along, but entitles them to your admiration and praise. They have held high advanced the flag of their country's honor, and have maintained the humanity and beneficence of its institutions.

Mr. Chairman, the Indian tribes of those two Territories number some forty-odd thousand souls: in Washington some twenty-two thousand, and in Oregon some twenty thousand. When the war commenced, in 1855, we had in Washington only about seventeen hundred able-bodied white men. The Indian tribes were all greatly disaffected; and their friendship could not be depended on. They numbered in the neighborhood of Puget Sound alone some two thousand five hundred warriors, whilst on that sound we had not over one thousand able-bodied white men. East of the Cascades the Indian tribes are rich, proud, and brave. They had great chiefs—such chiefs as Kam-ay-kan and Pu-pu-mux-mux. They had shown their prowess in war; at one time requiring the provisional government of Oregon to exert all its strength in order to punish them for the atrocities committed in the robbery and murder of Mr. Whitman and his whole family. In the summer of 1855, just before the war commenced, the general impression in both Territories was, that there was little or no fear of war; for, Mr. Chairman, we had had rumors of this during previous years. The Indians had been, more or less, disaffected for a long time. There were many rumors of disaffection in the spring of 1855, though they were generally discredited. In the spring of 1855 both Colonel Bonneville, in command of the Columbia river district, and Major Rains, in command at the Dalles, came to the conclusion that the Walla-Walla chief, Pu-pu-mux-mux, ought to be seized and put in confinement, on the ground that he was getting up a general Indian war; and he would have been seized, and put in confinement, had it not been for the persuasions of the Indian officers, who, equally with myself, discredited the reports, and had confidence in Pu-pu-mux-mux.

Previous to my going to the Walla-Walla council, word was sent to me by the good father Richard, the superior of the missions in Yakima and Cayuse country, that the Yakimas, Cayuses, and Walla-Wallas would attend that council with a hostile purpose, and that I would go there at the hazard of my life. I had warning from various sources; but the council had been called, and I went there in good faith, in order to attend to the business for which it had been called. We were in council fourteen days, in friendly council and friendly converse with the chiefs and the great body of the people of all these tribes. All these chiefs, who afterwards took up arms, were in my camp, and sat at my table during these fourteen days. I talked with them morning and evening, besides our formal talks in council; and in regard to that council this House has now in its possession an official record of its proceedings—a record which was taken verbatim by two secretaries separately. It is not a fixed up or patched up concern. It has been charged that the Indians there were threatened, and that force was brought to bear in order to get their consent to the concessions they made. Mr. Chairman, how ridiculous the charge! General Palmer and myself were the commissioners, and with the Indian agents, a few employes, and twenty-five soldiers to preserve order on the council ground, we met there fifteen hundred warriors, brave and proud men; and I say it is ridiculous to talk of our using threats and bringing force to bear to get them to yield to our terms. The record speaks for itself. The commissioners have no reason to be ashamed of it; nor has the Government reason to be ashamed of it.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Washington and Oregon War Claims—Mr. Stevens.

HO. OF REPS.

When the Indians separated, it was with a cordial farewell on all sides; Kam-i-a-y-kan was the last man I saw; and that chief parted from me in the most cordial manner, expressing the utmost satisfaction at the results of the treaty.

I said to him on parting, "the agent Bolon will soon go into your country to select a site for the mills, and schools, and agency; and I wish you to advise him in the matter." And he replied, "I shall be glad to see him, and will point out a good place for the mill."

Pu-pu-mux-mux also parted from me in the same manner; and if ever the face of an Indian expressed joy and satisfaction, it was the face of Pu-pu-mux-mux. Such was the fact in reference to every Indian chief, and every Indian there assembled. I may remark, in regard to Puget Sound, that it is the testimony of the Indian chiefs, without exception, and also the testimony of all well-informed and disinterested white men there, without exception, and such is my own deliberate judgment, that if we had not made these treaties, the war would have been general. The treaties were the controlling element in maintaining peace. Had it not been for these treaties, the field of war would have stretched from the coast to the divide of the Bitter Root mountains.

But, sir, in the observations I submitted a few days ago, I spoke of the conduct of our people, and of the conduct of the volunteers during that war. Their conduct was throughout humane and meritorious. At no time during that war was there any unauthorized killing by the volunteer forces.

The Indians, whether friendly or hostile, were sacred in the camps of the volunteers; and it is this fact that we hold up in the noon-day sun to disprove the accusations made against the people of those Territories.

The first act of war was by the Indians. I have referred to Kam-i-a-y-kan, to his cordial farewell when I left him, and to his promise to assist the Indian agent Bolon, when he went into his country. The Yakimas occupy a country from the Cascades to the Columbia, one hundred and fifty miles east and west, and some two hundred north and south. In the month of August we began to hear of our citizens being murdered by the Yakimas. Finally the reports became so well authenticated that a military force under Major Haller was sent there by Major Rains, to demand the surrender of the murderers, or, on the event of refusal, to punish the tribe.

Who were killed by these Indians? The victim of most mark was this Indian agent Bolon. He was killed by the Yakimas, and by the order of Kam-i-a-y-kan, though he went there as their agent, loving the Yakimas. He went there, and went alone, unwilling to believe that the reports of their having killed our people were true, and hoping that the results of his investigations would show that no such killing had been done. He was much beloved by the Yakimas, was recognized by them to be their friend, but having resolved on war, they said, (referring to Bolon,) "we kill our friends as well as our enemies." He was one of our slaughtered citizens on the grounds of the Yakimas. We had some ten or twelve others—there were one or two of my own neighbors; there were two or three from Pierce county, as well as several from the neighboring county of King; men of sobriety, men of character, men who had means at home in the settled portions of the Territory, but who had gone, as our adventurous American people will go, into the wilderness to see whether they could not better their fortunes. They were killed on their way to the mines at Colville. I submit it to the gentlemen of this committee: was it right that the military arm of this Government should be stretched out, when a tribe of Indians, in violation of the plighted faith of treaties, guaranteeing safe conduct to all whites passing through their country, slaughtered an officer of the Republic, and citizens of the Republic; without cause or provocation?

I trust that I have not to pause for a reply. Such has been the general policy of the Government. Such has ever been the policy of the British Government upon that coast, although under the control of a simple trading company. The Hudson's Bay Company owe their ascendancy over the Indians to this fact more than to all things else; that the life of a Hudson's Bay employé has been held sacred, and the Indians who did violence to it were held to a strict accountability. I could mention many instances when this course was pursued.

It has been alleged that the miners passing through the Yakima, violated the Indian women, and committed other outrages, which provoked them to retaliate. I heard nothing of this on the Spokans coming in from the Missouri, though I used every means to ascertain whether the war had been provoked by indiscretion and wrong, conferring not only with the Indians of the Spokane and neighboring tribes, but with the fathers of the mission at the Cœur d'Alene and at Colville, and with the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company at the latter place.

In consequence of these murders, Major Haller marched into the Yakima country with about one hundred regular troops; was met and attacked by a force of from ten to fifteen hundred warriors; and though for a time entirely surrounded and cut off from water, maintained his position, reached water after an obstinate and protracted fight of some twenty-four hours, and finally succeeded in making good his retreat and saving his command with a loss, in killed and wounded, of one third of his entire force. While surrounded, he was fortunate enough to get off a friendly Indian, who made his way to the Dalles, and gave information of the condition of Major Haller's command. There was great excitement throughout both Washington and Oregon in consequence. Major Rains immediately made a requisition upon the Governors of Washington and Oregon for volunteers; and that requisition was promptly complied with. The volunteers moved into the field; and thus this war had its origin, so far as the volunteers were concerned. I have here a whole volume of requisitions and orders and correspondence, demonstrating these facts, but will not read from the volume, as it will occupy time needlessly.

The volunteers, Mr. Chairman, came into service in consequence of the attack of an overwhelming force of Indians upon the troops of the regular service, in virtue of a requisition of the officer in command of the military district, and because the regular troops were inadequate to protect the settlements, and bring this war to a conclusion.

On Puget Sound we had extraordinary difficulties to contend with. The war first broke out by the murder of a settlement of twelve persons on White river, and under circumstances of great atrocity. The settlers became alarmed in consequence of the floating rumors that the Indians were bent on war, and had fled from their homes to the nearest town—Seattle. The Indians who were their neighbors, went to them at Seattle, and told them that they were needlessly alarmed; asked them to go back to their claims, and assured them that if any danger should threaten them, they would give them timely warning. They returned back; but before the morning's sun had risen, they were all slaughtered in cold blood, and by the Indians who had invited them back. Not men only were murdered, but helpless women and tender children. Two children, with the mangled remains of their mother, were thrown to the bottom of a well. The Indians on that sound exceeded the whites as five to two. It was time, certainly, that our citizens should take up arms, and by energy and vigor, endeavor to reduce to subjection the Indians engaged in this terrible massacre, and prevent the other tribes joining them. It was done, and I have yet to be convinced that it was not done rightly.

Why, Mr. Chairman, on that sound, so inadequate was the force of regular troops, and in such imminent danger was the whole community, that a volunteer company—raised for the field—was detained for the defense of Fort Steilacoom, in charge of the regular troops. Lieutenant Nugen, in command at that post, took the responsibility of raising a company of forty men, under Captain W. H. Wallace, and then wrote the adjutant general of the volunteers, trusting that the acting Governor would approve his action; and he also wrote for cartridges to be sent them, as he was deficient in ammunition. I give his letters in full, establishing these facts:

FORT STEILACOOM, W. T., October 31, 1855.
SIR: I have the honor to state that I have called upon the citizens of Pierce county for one company of volunteers, to act against the Indians on White river and vicinity, who have been murdering our citizens, and attacked the company of rangers under Captain Eaton, mustered into the service of the United States.

This call has been promptly responded to, and a company of forty are now ready to take the field, under the command of Captain Wallace, who will report to you for orders.

I wish you would come down to our post, as I think your presence would expedite matters. I trust you will succeed in getting another company in your place, as I am of the opinion that no less than one hundred men should think of taking the field, they to act together, and the work will speedily be finished. I trust that the acting Governor will approve of my action, as I could see no other way to maintain the peace of our country.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your most obedient servant,
JOHN NUGEN,
Second Lieutenant Fourth Infantry, Com. Post.
JAMES TILTON, Adjutant General W. T. Volunteers.

HEAD QUARTERS, FORT STEILACOOM,
November 1, 1855.

SIR: I have detained Captain Wallace's company of volunteers to assist in protecting this post, in case an attack should be made. Dr. Folmie, just in from Nisqually, informs me that one of his shepherds saw a band of some twenty Klikitats, just in rear of Nisqually, last night.

I have nearly all the women and children in the country at the post, and will, of course, protect them.

I would respectfully request that all the men in this section of the country be called out, as I am firmly of the belief that we are to have a general Indian war in this vicinity.

Send me down cartridges at the earliest moment, as it is reported that the Indians are to make an attempt at taking our fort to-night. This is just a report, but I wish to have plenty of ammunition, and I am rather short just at this time.

With great respect, I have the honor to be, your most obedient servant,
JOHN NUGEN,
Second Lieutenant Fourth Infantry, Com. Post.

JAMES TILTON,
Adjutant General W. T. Volunteers, Olympia.

These letters show the cordial relations between the regular and volunteer service in the Territory, when the difficulties first occurred. Such had been our relations from the first organization of the Territory. Such they continued to be until the veteran commander of the department of the Pacific pronounced the war the act of unprincipled white men—as having been got up as a matter of speculation; denounced authorities and people as Indian exterminators; refused to recognize the necessity of calling out volunteers, and endeavored to ignore them when in the field.

However, this same commander did finally call upon me in March for two companies of volunteers for the defense of Puget Sound, which I refused to respond to for reasons given in full in the official correspondence.

It is a fact well known on that coast to the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, that the Indians of southern Oregon have always been so hostile that the employes of that company did not dare to trap there. Parties passing through to California never ventured to stop there for a day. I have this from the chief factor of the company, at Vancouver. I need not go over the ground in southern Oregon; for it has been fully occupied by the distinguished Delegate from that Territory.

Here, then, was the origin of this war—a war entirely unprovoked, a war caused by no bad conduct of our people; but caused altogether by the feeling of antagonism between the two races. The Indians there had heard of Indian difficulties on this side of the Rocky Mountains; and it was a combination with them to drive the whites out of the country.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to say to my friend, at this point, that his country, in respect to this charge of the Indian difficulties having been commenced by the whites, is precisely in the same situation that our whole Indian frontier has been for the last ten years. Whenever there have been hostilities, there are traders and others who have carried abroad the idea that the first assaults were made by the whites. Never mind what atrocities have been committed by the Indians, such are the reports circulated. It has been in my experience, and I have no doubt such is the case in Oregon and Washington, that the Indians are always the aggressors.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Washington and Oregon War Claims—Mr. Stevens.

Ho. of Reps.

And I accord my testimony to that of the gentleman, that these charges against the white people of the frontier are most unjust. I had no opportunity before to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GARNETT,] who insinuated that all these Indian wars were got up on speculation. I recollect that many years ago Indian wars were quite as common as on the frontier; and I would like the gentleman to say whether, when John Smith had charge of the Virginia colony, he was not provoked by Indian warfare, and had not his calamities with them as we have at this day?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. They were not so expensive.

Mr. CURTIS. But they destroyed your colonies. There was nothing but your bones left. Your soil was red with the blood shed in the Indian wars, and the history of the country shows that that has been the character of this warfare.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I am greatly obliged to my friend from Iowa for the remarks which he has made. I know, myself, that in 1853 I had a strong feeling that there was much of outrage committed by the whites upon the Indians, and that that was the prolific cause of Indian wars. But, as I became acquainted with the frontier population, and as I came to know facts as they were, my mind was changed, and I here declare, on my responsibility, that the charges are utterly unfounded.

Mr. Chairman, in regard to the military operations undertaken in those two Territories, I desire to say a few words. I shall mainly confine my observations to the operations at Walla-Walla, for that is the salient point of the whole business. It is admitted on all sides that there was a war in southern Oregon, and on Puget Sound, in the Territory of Washington, and that it became absolutely necessary that the white settlers should organize for defense. But it has been said that the advance of the volunteers upon Walla-Walla, drove the Indians into hostility; that the Walla-Walla chief, Pu-pu-mux-mux, was friendly; and that even when the volunteers reached the valley he endeavored to make peace; that he was treacherously slain under the protection of a flag of truce; that the volunteers commenced the attack, and that the Indians resisted simply to get in safety their women and children. The fight of the Walla-Walla was a four days' fight. I was moving at the time from the Spokane to the Nez Perces country. I was in the midst of an Indian council with the Nez Perces, making my arrangements with that tribe to get the services of its warriors, to force my way through the hostile Walla-Wallas, Cayuses, and other tribes, under the lead of Pu-pu-mux-mux, to the settlements, when the news came of that fight. The Indian, who had rode one hundred miles the previous eighteen hours, told all the circumstances of that fight, at one end of the council lodge, to the Indians there assembled, and it was interpreted to me, sitting in council, at the other end. I had previously conferred with the chiefs of the Nez Perces tribe and with the chiefs on the Spokane, in order to satisfy myself of the attitude of Pu-pu-mux-mux. I became satisfied it was one of unmitigated hostility.

When I reached the Nez Perces country, the chief Joseph, the third chief of the tribe, an old man of over seventy years of age, had returned but a short time from a mission of peace to the Walla-Walla. He had endeavored to dissuade Pu-pu-mux-mux from going to war. But Pu-pu-mux-mux drove him away with scorn and contumely, telling him, "I am the chief here—I am like yonder mountain above other men. I counsel with no man. Go home! Perhaps your own people will listen to you." Joseph then went to the Cayuses, and saw their chiefs—the Young Chief, the Five Crows, and Camespelo—and intreated them to continue friendly. They treated him with the same scorn and contumely as did Pu-pu-mux-mux, the more significant, as he was allied to them by blood, being a half Cayuse. And Joseph went home discouraged and heart-broken. These same facts I had, on reaching the Walla-Walla, from the friendly Cayuses and Walla-Walla chiefs, small in number, who persisted in their refusal to join the war party. Howishwampo, Tintemitse, and Stickas, of the Cayuses; and Pierre, of the Walla-Wallas, with their followers, had maintained their friendship at the hazard of their lives, having left the main camp of their tribe and encamped with the settlers who remained in the valley. These settlers were not attacked by Pu-pu-mux-mux and the allied chiefs, because it could only be done by passing over the dead bodies of the friendly chiefs. All these facts I learned before any controversy had grown up, and before I imagined any controversy could possibly grow up, in regard to the position of Pu-pu-mux-mux and the allied tribes and chiefs.

A gentleman who has made himself conspicuous by his denunciations of the volunteers, and his defense of Pu-pu-mux-mux, has admitted that the seizure of Fort Walla-Walla was an act of hostility; that the appropriating of Government property there, and distributing it among the several tribes, was an act of hostility; that the burning of the houses of all the settlers in that valley was an act of hostility; but that there was convincing evidence that all these acts of hostility were not the acts of Pu-pu-mux-mux, but the acts of the Yellow Serpent. Now, Pu-pu-mux-mux and the Yellow Serpent are one and the same man. Pu-pu-mux-mux, in the Walla-Walla tongue, Serpent Jaune, in French, and the Yellow Serpent, in English, are the several names of this renowned chief, known to all voyagers and well-informed men in that country, and well known to myself. And this Indian chief, whether he be called Pu-pu-mux-mux, Serpent Jaune, or the Yellow Serpent, was guilty of the acts of hostility above enumerated, and this, too, by the admission of Pu-pu-mux-mux's defender and apologist.

The record evidence is overwhelming and conclusive of Pu-pu-mux-mux's hostility. It was early reported by the Indian agent on the ground. It was testified to by all the settlers of that valley, and by the factors and employes of the Hudson's Bay Company posted at Walla-Walla. And the record evidence is equally overwhelming and conclusive that all the charges of Pu-pu-mux-mux being entrapped by a flag of truce and treacherously killed, are utterly unfounded. The officers, the Indian agent, and the interpreter, present at the first conference—every eye-witness, and they are men of unimpeachable honor and integrity, present at his death, agree as to the essential facts. Pu-pu-mux-mux did approach the volunteer camp with a flag of truce, and a conference was held. Colonel Kelly, in command of the troops, refused to receive him, except as a prisoner. Pu-pu-mux-mux went to his camp as a prisoner, his object being to gain time in order to concentrate the Indian forces; and also by cunning and management to induce the troops to occupy a position where he could attack them with advantage. On his reaching camp, Colonel Kelly still refused to receive Pu-pu-mux-mux on any other terms except as a prisoner, and offered to let him go home. Pu-pu-mux-mux continued with the volunteers, receiving from them kind treatment, and, as he stated, sent word to his people to keep friendly. The volunteers marched towards the Indian camp, Pu-pu-mux-mux accompanying them, when they were attacked by Pu-pu-mux-mux's people. In this manner the action commenced, and while it was going on the chief endeavored to make his escape, and was killed whilst furiously attacking his guard. He was killed while struggling with his guard and endeavoring to wrest the gun of his guard from his hands. This action lasted four days, resulted in a complete victory over the Indians, and drove every hostile Indian to the northward of Snake river. Its effect on the Indian mind was prodigious, as I personally know from my own intercourse with the Indians of the interior at the very time.

Mr. Chairman, this movement on the Walla-Walla, therefore, did protect our frontier. It maintained the peace of the interior for the long winter of 1855-56. In this connection I desire to refer to the general order emanating from the conqueror of Mexico, Lieutenant General Scott, complimenting the valiant officers and men of the army, who made an expedition of twelve days against the Apaches of New Mexico. It was an expedition of eight companies—four hundred men—moving against one of the nomadic tribes of the far-famed Apaches. In that general order, twelve officers and twenty-six men are mentioned as having particularly distinguished themselves. Here are three reports, [holding up the open volume containing them,] one from Colonel Bonneville, a gentleman well known to me; another from Captain Ewell, a friend of my youth, three years with me at the Military Academy, a most gallant and meritorious man; and the third from Colonel Miles, giving all the details of this action. It was not a case simply of soldiership, but of conduct. It was not enough that the men were brave, but they must be well managed. It was a case of tactics and strategy, of flanks, and rears, and reserves.

These reports show that eight companies of troops—four hundred men—pursued, overtook, fought, and defeated—how many? Forty warriors. There is your feat of arms made the subject of a general order, in which twelve officers and twenty-six men are reported for distinction. I speak of it with entire respect. The gallant Scott knew full well that the disparity of force did not make the affair ridiculous.

Now, gentlemen, go with me to the distant Territories of Washington and Oregon, and to the plains of the Walla-Walla, where three hundred volunteers fought seven hundred Indians for four days, and defeated them, killing some seventy Indians. Go with me to the Grande Ronde, where the gallant Colonel Shaw, with one hundred and sixty volunteers of Washington, fought three hundred Indians, killing some forty, and striking a great blow upon the hostile Indians. Go with me to the battle of Connell's prairie, on the shores of Puget Sound, where one hundred and sixty volunteers fought two hundred Indians, and defeated them, killing thirty of their number.

This movement of Shaw's was something more than a twelve day's march. Three columns of troops moved simultaneously from the sound, from the Columbia valley, and from the Nez Perces country, meeting at the Walla-Walla, within a single day, and then a vigorous movement with a portion of this force was made across the Blue mountains, a forced march, some sixty miles, in one night and a day, when the enemy was struck and completely routed. The troops from the sound crossed the Cascades, snow still on the mountains, and marched some three hundred miles to the point of rendezvous. Of all these three columns, the arrangements were complete, and the means of transportation ample, the column from the Dalles having in their train forty-five wagons, carrying not only supplies for the troops, but a large quantity of provisions for the friendly Indians.

Sir, I say, all honor to the officers and men who conquered the Indians in New Mexico; but I ask the committee also to do like honor to the volunteers of Washington and Oregon, who fought the Indians, always being outnumbered, and sometimes more than two to one. I ask for the people of those Territories the same measure of justice which has been rendered to the people of New Mexico and the people of Florida. There have been Indian difficulties in Florida, and, within two years, you have had twelve companies of regulars there, and at least six companies of volunteers. And I thank God that Florida was near enough to the Federal capital for its Governor to come here, post-haste, and to procure the recognition of the services of the volunteers of Florida by the General Government. Sir, that force was unquestionably necessary; they fought the Indians, and now, when they have subdued them, it appears that there were about one hundred and sixty-two Indians there, including women and children. You sent that force against less than one hundred warriors, and the expenses incurred by the Florida volunteers have been paid, and paid promptly, by this Federal Government. So with New Mexico: the expenses of the volunteers in New Mexico have been paid by the General Government, and the provision to pay them was put in the Army appropriation bill. So in the case of California: Congress made an appropriation to pay the Fremont riflemen, and organized a board of three Army officers to inquire into the balance of the claims. The Army officers made an examination, they reported to the Secretary of War, and at the very next session of Congress their awards were provided for in the

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Washington and Oregon War Claims—Mr. Stevens.

HO. OF REPS.

Army appropriation bill. The Army appropriation bill of the session of 1853 and 1854 contained an appropriation of nearly one million dollars for paying the volunteers of California for expenses incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities previous to 1854.

We ask the same measure of justice for the people of our Territories that has been already extended to people nearer to you—in Florida, New Mexico, and California.

I desire now to dwell, for a few moments, on another topic. I contend that the expenses were economical; that they were small; that they were much less than any intelligent and disinterested man, after looking into all the facts, would expect them to be. We had in Washington eighteen hundred and ninety-six men enlisted, and their average term of service was one hundred and twelve days. The total expense of each man, exclusive of pay, was but little over five hundred dollars—$507 32. What is the expense, per man, in the regular service? It was about one thousand dollars a year, last year, and throwing out the pay, it was about eight hundred and fifty dollars. That is the expense of troops in the regular service—a large proportion of whom are stationed at the forts and depots on the Atlantic, the Gulf, the lakes, and the Mississippi river and its tributaries, at points accessible to steamboat navigation. But, sir, when you come to compare the expenses of the regulars with the volunteers, I shall insist that you compare them in like conditions. It will not do to compare the expenses of the volunteers in Oregon, on the plains of Walla-Walla, one hundred and fifty miles from our settlements, protecting those settlements by their gallantry and conduct throughout the winter of 1855-56, with the expenses of the regular troops lying in their rear, at this very time in garrison at the Dalles, the Cascades, and Vancouver. You must compare their expenses in the field with the expenses of the regulars in the field. Compare the expenses of the volunteers, in their campaign of the Walla-Walla, with the expenses of the regular service in its campaign of the Yakima, and, my word for it, you will find that our expenses were the smallest, per man. In this estimate I mean to include transportation from the depots, at home, as a charge upon the regular service. That is my deliberate judgment from a careful examination of the matter. And here, in this comparison, I shall have a charge to make against the regular service. I shall insist that the nineteen dead bodies left on the ground at the Cascades, in consequence of Colonel Wright advancing upon the Walla-Walla, and leaving his rear unprotected and insecure, be taken into the account. He did not leave a sufficient garrison at the Cascades. It was attacked by the Indians, and held in their possession (with the exception of one block-house and one house) for twenty-four hours; every house, except these, was burnt; nineteen persons were slain, and it compelled a retrograde movement of Wright, already in march for the Walla-Walla, and finally caused the abandonment of that movement on the Walla-Walla, and the organization of a new campaign into the Yakima country. Let all these things be taken into the account in a comparison between the services; for, I affirm, no such military blunder was committed in the volunteer service.

Sir, I make no point against the regular service. I was bred in that service, and have given to it fourteen years of faithful service. There I have all my early friends; there many of the warmest friends of my manhood now are; and I thank heaven that, through all the controversies we have had there in reference to affairs in those Territories, those men are still my friends. They are ever ready to do their duty; but, during the winter of 1855-56, the frontier east of the Cascade mountains was protected by the volunteers, while the regulars were in garrison. That is a fact which should stand out, and which I have brought out, on this occasion.

Mr. Chairman, objection has been made to the allowance, by the commissioners, of two dollars a day for each enlisted man, and two dollars a day for each horse; and yet I have here an official document from the Quartermaster General showing that no laboring man, no packer, no teamster, was employed in the regular Army in these Territories during that Indian war for less than sixty dollars per month, and that their pay ranged from that up to ninety dollars per month. I find that for pack mules they have invariably paid three dollars a day. If, then, the regular service is obliged to go into expenses like these in that country, paying, on an average, $2 50 a day for common hands, and paying it in cash, why should you object to the volunteers being paid two dollars a day, who have already waited two years for payment? If the regular service has paid for pack mules three dollars a day, why should you object to pay two dollars a day for the horses used by the volunteers? Sir, these are pregnant facts.

But there is another topic which I wish to dwell upon for a moment, and that is the employment of troops for short intervals. I desire to correct an erroneous impression made by reports which have emanated from the Adjutant General's office. In these reports the expenses of volunteers or militia (who served simply for three months or more) are compared with the expenses of the regular establishment, where the expenses of recruiting and discharging are distributed over the entire period of enlistment of five years. And in these same reports, also, the expenses of our volunteer service in those two Territories are compared with the expenses of a regiment of infantry simply in depot, having no expenses whatever in the way of movements of troops.

Now there are certain large contingent expenses incident to raising troops, bringing them into the field, and discharging them. In militia or volunteer service it is distributed over a period of three or six months; in the regular service, over a period of five years. To institute a comparison, therefore, between the expenses of the regular and volunteer service for a period of three or six months, these expenses should be thrown out altogether, or the whole of it in each case be included for the equal period of comparison; otherwise a very heavy charge will be made upon the volunteer service and held up against them to their disparagement, when the expense is not because the troops are volunteers or militia, but because they are troops raised for short intervals of time.

So it is very unjust to compare the expenses of our volunteers with the expenses of infantry in depot. The proper comparison is between the expenses of our foot and horse in the field, in these Territories, with the expenses of the foot and horse of the regular service in the field in those Territories.

But this is not all. If, in an emergency, you do not resort to volunteers, what will you do? You must institute a new military system, increase your Army largely, and have in depot surplus troops for any emergency which may arise. And, therefore, the true and only just comparison of expense is a comparison of the expenses which we incur under our military system, relying upon the militia and volunteers of the country in case of emergency, and of the only system that can take its place, namely, that of a large standing army.

Suppose that in our Indian difficulties you had this large standing army, and that there had been a surplus of troops at the depots at home to send out there: when you take the cost of transportation, the cost of recruiting, the cost of getting them to the field of action, you would find in the case supposed that there would have been an expense of two or three hundred dollars a man, at the very point where the expenses of the volunteers commence. And then when the emergency was over you would have the cost of sending them home again. You, gentlemen, can compute the cost for yourselves. I ask again, if you did not have the volunteer service, what would you do? You must have a standing army large enough for any emergency, doing nothing nine years out of ten. But such statements and comparisons as these, the only just and proper ones, are not made in these reports; and yet, the mere statement of it will convince the mind that they are just and sound statements and comparisons. If you take the view I have presented, it will be found that in our Territories, the expenses of the volunteers per man is much less than the expenses of regulars, if sent from the States there, and sent back, as must necessarily have been the case had you been obliged to rely upon regulars alone. Our means of transportation were more economical. We used ox-trains instead of mule trains, and we carried fifty per cent. more freight per employe than were carried in the trains of the regular service. That is a fact known of all men there. We made at least as rapid trips as the regular service, and we showed that oxen were the proper animals for wagons in that country.

But every effort was made to reduce expenses, and the effort was a successful one. All allowance of extra pay for fatigue service was prohibited in orders, and the accounts for such service were disallowed and thrown out. No such accounts were submitted to the commissioners appointed by the Secretary of War under the authority of Congress. This was deemed, by many, very unjust at the time, as payment for fatigue service was recognized in the Army, and the rates established by act of Congress. Our troops did a very large amount of fatigue service, as shown in the block-houses built by them, and the roads cut out by them; one company was especially raised for fatigue duty, and was called the pioneer company; most of its members were mechanics, or very experienced axmen, and for many months they were constantly employed at fatigue service. It was emphatically a company of pioneers as well as a company of fighting men; the Indians making the first attack upon them, whilst cutting out a road, at the battle of Connel's Prairie.

I refused, Mr. Chairman, to allow any extra compensation for fatigue service, because I expected the pay of our troops would have some relations to the price of labor in the country; and for a temporary, rapid service, organized for an emergency, I did not think the idea of extra pay for fatigue service should be countenanced.

In the disposition of public property in the volunteer service of Washington, every exertion was made to guard the rights of the Government. I refused to allow any volunteer to retain one animal even on an appraisal by the officers of the quartermaster department, the same to be charged upon the muster-rolls against his pay, but directed every animal to be disposed of at public auction. Everything was sold at public auction for the scrip issued in purchasing. The sales amounted to nearly one hundred and forty thousand dollars, and to this amount was the war debt reduced by these sales. The sales were at a considerable advance on the original cost. Horses which cost from two hundred and fifty to four hundred dollars brought from two hundred to six hundred dollars; wagons costing $200 were readily sold at $300; and oxen were disposed of at thirty per cent. above cost. This, too, after the property had been of course deteriorated by six months' active service.

The report of J. Ross Browne, special agent of the Interior Department, gives so graphic a picture of the condition of the Territory in 1857, the year following the war, that I cannot do better than quote from his report, as follows:

"On the road from the Cowlitz landing to Olympia, a distance of fifty miles, the whole country bears distressing evidences of the disastrous effects of the late war. In 1854, when I first passed through this region, it abounded in fine farms, well cultivated, and bearing luxuriant crops of grain. Immigration was rapidly filling up all the vacant lands; and large herds of stock were grazing upon the prairies. From the signs of prosperity then apparent, it was not unreasonable to predict that in the course of three years the products and population would be more than doubled. But, notwithstanding this region was exempt from any actual collision with the Indians, the effects are nearly the same as in other parts of the Territory. All along the road houses are deserted and going to ruin; fences are cast down and in a state of decay; fields, once waving with luxuriant crops of wheat, are desolate; and but little, if any, stock is to be seen on the broad prairies that formerly bore such inspiring evidences of life. The few families that remained, either from necessity or inclination, were forced to erect rude block-houses for their defense, into which they gathered by night during the hostilities, in constant apprehension of attack. These rude defenses still stand at intervals along the road. I mention these facts with a view of showing that, so far, at least, the 'war speculation' charged upon the settlers of Washington Territory presents an unprofitable appearance."

There were erected in the Territory, during the war, thirty-one block-houses by the volunteer troops, twenty-one block-houses by the citizens, without assistance, and some seven block-houses by the troops of the regular service. Some of these block-houses were large establishments, there being space enough inside the pickets for small houses for the families of the neighborhood—the block-houses intended to protect. The name and site of each block-house, as well as the roads and trails cut out by the volunteer service, are given in an official document published by order of the Legislature of Washington.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Right of Visitation—Mr. Davis.

Ho. of Reps.

Of the whole number of eighteen hundred and ninety-six enlisted men in the Washington volunteers, two hundred and thirty-six were friendly Indians, and two hundred and fifteen citizens of Oregon, leaving fourteen hundred and forty-five citizens of Washington in service from October, 1855, to September, 1856. Their average term of service, as I have before observed, was one hundred and twelve days. Thus it will appear that nearly seven eighths of our citizens served nearly four months during that war—an amount of service that has not certainly its parallel in this, or probably in any other country.

In Washington, the volunteers were nearly equally divided between foot and mounted troops. There were one thousand and seventeen men who served as cavalry, and eight hundred and seventy-nine who served as infantry. The operations on the sound—a large portion of the country being very heavily timbered, and there being in the timber dense underbrush and fallen logs—required that the troops should be principally foot troops; the operations in the interior, it being mostly a prairie country, that all the troops should be mounted. The greater vigor and success of the volunteer operations east of the Cascades, over those of the regular service, were due very much to the fact that the volunteers were well mounted, whereas the greater bulk of the regular force was infantry. The volunteers were, however, very superior in all the qualities of service to the regulars. There was scarcely a man in the volunteer service who had not crossed the plains, become inured to all the routine of camp life, and thoroughly accustomed to moving in that country, either on his horse over the prairie, or on foot through the dense forests.

We had no difficulty whatever in raising foot troops, nor in dismounting our horse troops, when, as on the sound, the operations extended from the prairie region, at the head of the sound, to the wooded regions eastward, where horses could not be used.

The remarks, Mr. Chairman, of Mr. J. Ross Browne as to the causes of the war, are so pertinent and so just that I will give them at length:

"Kam-i-a-y-kan, the chief of the Yakimas, was bitter in his animosity. As early as 1853 he projected a war of extermination against the whole race of Americans within the country. It was his settled determination to make the war general, and he spared no inducements to effect a coalition with the Nez Percés, Cayuses, Walla-Wallas, and other tribes. For your information on this point, showing that war actually was premeditated in 1853, I send you inclosed a translation of the letter of Father Pandory, priest at the Atlatum Mission, dated 'April, 1853,' to Father Mesplie, at the Dalles, in which he says: 'A chief of the upper Nez Percés has killed thirty head of cattle at a feast given to the nation; and this number of animals not being sufficient, seven more were killed. The feast was given in order to unite the hearts of the Indians to make declaration of war against the Americans.' Through the whole course of the winter have heard the same thing—that the Cayuses and Nez Percés have united themselves for war. During the course of last spring I was in the Cayuse country after they had given a similar feast. I said nothing, because I thought that they had a sub-agent who would speak."

"I will recount to you what they say. All the Indians upon the left (north) bank of the Columbia, from the Blackfoot to the Cheenook, inclusive, are to assemble at the Cayuse country. All on the right bank, through the same extent of country, are to assemble on the Simcoe, (on the Yakima), including those from Nisqually and the vicinity. The cause of this war is, that the Americans are going to seize their lands."

"This grave and startling information, so fearfully verified since, was promptly communicated to Major Alvord, who reported it to General Hitchcock, the then commanding officer of the military department on this coast. Major Alvord was censured as an alarmist, and Father Pandory was treated in the same manner by his superior."

"It will be observed that the date of the letter is April, 1853. If the war, therefore, was one of speculation, gotten up by the settlers of Oregon, the scheme should have been frustrated then. Information that a war was actually going to take place—that the Indians had avowed it in council—was in possession of the commanding officer of the military department. Why did not he expose the speculations? Why did not the Departments in Washington issue orders to the Governors of the Territories, apprising them of their knowledge of this scheme, and cause it to be then arrested? Simply, as I conceive, because no such scheme was ever contemplated, either then or since. The settlers only asked protection for their lives and property; and after both have been freely sacrificed, the charge is, for the first time, brought against them."

"But to return a moment to the combination. As no change took place in the Hudson Bay Company's posts after the treaty of 1846, and their possessions and appearance of power remained the same as before, the Indians, up to a very recent date, regarded the Territory of Washington as under the influence of 'King George.'

"The Nisqually and other tribes of Puget Sound, whose chief intercourse had always been with 'King George' men, naturally shared their animosity against the Americans. When Governor Stevens treated with them, he found them in a very disaffected condition. It was with difficulty the chiefs could be gotten together. Something had to be done with them, and, under the circumstances, of difficulty attending the making of these treaties, I am satisfied no public officer could have done better. The treaties were not the cause of the war. I have already shown that the war had been determined upon long before. If Governor Stevens is to blame because he did not so frame the treaties as to stop the war, or stop it by not making the treaties at all, then that charge should be specifically brought against him."

"Leschi, the celebrated Nisqually chief, was most determined in his hostility. Bold, adventurous, and eloquent, he possessed an unlimited sway over his people, and by the earnestness of his purpose, and the persuasiveness of his arguments, carried all with him who heard him speak. He traveled by day and night, caring neither for hunger nor fatigue; visited the camps of the Yakimas and Klickitats, addressed the councils in terms of eloquence such as they had seldom heard. He crossed the Columbia, penetrated to southern Oregon, appealed to all the disaffected there. He dwelt upon their wrongs; painted to them, in the exuberance of his imagination, the terrible picture of the 'polakly illeha,' the land of darkness, where no ray from the sun ever penetrated; where there was torture and death for all races of Indians; where the sting of an insect killed like the stroke of a spear, and the streams were foul and muddy, so that no living thing could drink of the waters. This was the place where the white man wanted to carry them to. He called upon them to resist like brave men, so terrible a fate. The white men were but a handful now; they could all be killed at once, and then others would fear to come. But, if there was no war, they would grow strong and many, and soon put all the Indians in their ships and send them off to that terrible land, where torture and death awaited them."

"It may readily be supposed that a rude and ignorant people, naturally prone to superstition, were not slow in giving credence to these fearful stories. Each tribe had its grievances, from the north to the south. Common interest bound them in their compact against a common enemy."

"The Mormons, at this time, had also sent their emissaries among them to spread the disaffection. In the Simcoe, at a council of the tribes, in 1854, a chief from the Mormon country urged them to war. The talk of this chief, as detailed by a friendly Indian who was in the council, was to this effect: 'That far in the desert there lived the greatest people on earth, who controlled the sun. He had been among them and talked with them, and they had sent him here to say what they were. They could strike dead anybody at a distance; they could make the sun stand still; they could make powder and muskets, and they were the friends of the Indians. The Americans were the enemies of the Indians. They wanted the Indians to kill them all. They would send them powder, and muskets, &c.'

"That the Mormons did furnish several of the tribes with ammunition, is proved by the narrative of Captain Shaw, of the Walla Walla volunteers. At the last battle fought up there, he found powder, muskets, balls, &c., among the Indians bearing the Mormon brand."

"George B. Simpson, late interpreter and agent at the Cascades who originally came to Salt Lake as an agent for the Salt Lake mails, stated, from his own knowledge, that the Mormons sent out emissaries among all the tribes of Indians prior to the war, urging them to unite in exterminating the Americans."

"But the plan of operations had not been sufficiently matured. Some of the tribes were too impatient to wait till the proper time had arrived. In the summer of 1855, after the discovery of the Colville mines, a general rush took place there. The first man murdered was Mattice, a miner, who was on his way there with a considerable amount of money and provisions. He was killed soon after descending the Snoqualmie pass by a party of Indians supposed to be Yakimas. Near the same time, Fantjoy, another miner, was killed. These were both respectable men from the State of Maine. They were proprietors of a coal mine on the Danamish. The murders on the White river occurred some two months after. Agent Bolon, hearing of the Yakima murders, crossed over from the Dalles to see the chief Kam-i-a-y-kan. Onah, another prominent chief, was present in camp. Bolon spent the night there, no doubt remonstrating with them for their acts. Next day, as he was riding back, he was overtaken by two or three Indians, who rode along with him in an apparently friendly manner. One lagged behind, and while the others engaged his attention, shot him in the back. He was then dragged from his horse, scalped and partly burnt. One of the murderers is said to be a son of the chief Onah."

"On the 8th or 9th of October the Indians of southern Oregon began the work of extermination. They slaughtered, indiscriminately, men, women, and children. At or about the same date the war had opened in Washington Territory. The movement was simultaneous, and could only have been the result of concert; but the Indians themselves have since freely admitted that their plan embraced all parts of the country, from north to south."

"I will not undertake to follow up the history of the war to a later period. Its peculiar features have been represented officially on both sides, and its progress and termination are matters of public record."

"Upon a careful perusal of all the dispatches, I find nothing to sustain the charge of speculation. No person can visit the Territories of Oregon and Washington, converse with the people, see them on their farms and at their daily labors, and consider their true interests, without coming to the conclusion that such a charge is absurd and monstrous. What could they hope to gain? Few of them had anything to spare upon which to base a speculation. A farmer is well off who has his fields fenced in, a few head of oxen, and three or four cows. If he got treble price for his stock, the sale, upon an unlimited credit, would have been a sacrifice to him. His farm must go to ruin. The interests of the settlers of nearly every pursuit are nearly identical. Their future prospects depend chiefly upon the prosperity of the country, the increase of emigration, enhancement in the value of property, security of life, opening of new facilities for the transportation of their products. All this was diametrically opposed to a war. No compensation that Government could make would atone for the murder of families, the stoppage of labor everywhere, the loss of time, the suspension of emigration, and the numerous evils resulting from this disastrous conflict."

"The commissioners at Vancouver have faithfully and impartially performed their duty. Whatever sum they may have decided upon in estimating this war debt, I hold that amount to be justly due, and trust that Congress will at once provide for its extinguishment."

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I ask for the people of those Territories, prompt and equal justice at the hands of this Congress. I ask, in the name of their patriotism and heroic services and sufferings, for the immediate liquidation of their claims. A commission appointed under its authority—a commission representing this Government, and not the people of these Territories—a commission, who, if they had any bias or prejudice, were biased and prejudiced against us, have investigated the whole question, have made their awards, have submitted their report, and that report, with the approval of the War Department, is now before Congress. We ask firmly and emphatically for the indorsement of this report, and the payment of these awards, the present session of Congress.

RIGHT OF VISITATION.

SPEECH OF HON. REUBEN DAVIS, OF MISSISSIPPI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 7, 1858,

On the following resolution, introduced by himself:

Whereas, visitation of American merchantmen in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and in the ports of Cuba, as now carried on by British war steamers, is in violation of international law: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the President be, and he is hereby, required to instruct our naval officers to arrest all offending vessels, until full indemnity be given for the injury done, and a guarantee against the exercise of the visitation in the future.

Mr. DAVIS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Being limited, as I am, to a single hour in the discussion of this resolution, I must condense what I have to say as rapidly as possible. In introducing this resolution, I was influenced by no desire to involve this country in a war with England. I have no prejudices against her as a nation; but her arrogance I would humble by arms, if necessary. I felt, under the insults offered to our flag in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, and in sight of our very shores, as I know millions of my countrymen must feel, humiliated and degraded, and, therefore, determined to put upon record my indignant denial of the right claimed and exercised by Great Britain to arrest and visit American merchantmen engaged in due course of trade. If war must grow out of it, the act is England's, and she must alone be amenable at the bar of nations.

The resolution first asserts that visitation of our merchantmen in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico by British war steamers is a violation of the law of nations. The correctness of this assertion I shall now proceed to establish. As early as the publication of the Consolato del Mare, the right of visitation and search was recognized as a belligerent right. The marine ordinance of Louis XIV., published in 1681, copied so much of the Consolato del Mare as recognized the right of search as a belligerent right, and thus gave the sanction of France to this doctrine. England recognized the right and practiced it. Very many of the northern States of Europe then controverted it, and contended that it was not a natural right belonging to nations, and refuse to give it their sanction down to this day. It will thus be seen that it never has been the law of nations, never having received the sanction of all or even a majority of nations. I could show that it is not a natural right of nations, if my time would admit; but I must content myself with the simple statement that it is aggressive, and therefore conflicts directly with the natural right of self-defense, and the unmolested enjoyment of property and locomotion.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Right of Visitation—Mr. Davis.

Ho. OF REPS.

I desire now to state that visitation and search is a technical expression, and both words are used to express the one act—the act of searching. And I desire that members upon this floor will mark the distinction, because I shall have occasion, in the subsequent part of my remarks, to refer again to this position.

I have said that even the nations which recognized the right of visitation and search declared it to be a belligerent right only to be used in time of war, and then only for the purpose of determining the proprietary interest in the vessel and cargo. If the vessel and cargo were found to be the property of neutrals, they were universally dismissed; if the property of the enemy, they were confiscated. It may not be amiss to examine why the right of search was only to be exercised in time of war, and not in time of peace. The property of a belligerent has always been regarded as the legitimate subject of seizure and confiscation wherever found, and therefore became the object of search. In times of peace, when confiscation could not be made, there was no object against which it could be directed, and therefore it became a source of annoyance, and not admissible in time of peace.

Now, I have said it was strictly a belligerent right, if a right at all, and is so defined by the nations who exercise it. The Consolato del Mare so asserts it; the marine ordinance of Louis the Fourteenth so affirms; the armed neutrality organized by Catharine, Empress of Russia, so regarded it. Lord Castlereagh, in 1818, in a paper which he laid before a convention composed of the principal maritime Powers of Europe, assembled in London, declared it to be a power only to be exercised in time of war. Lord Stowell, in the case of the Louis, said the right of visitation and search was exclusively a belligerent right. Chief Justice Marshall, in cases of the United States of America against some Spanish and Portuguese vessels, said the same thing. In an official correspondence between Sir Stamford Canning and John Q. Adams, in 1823, it is again asserted; in a word, the entire correspondence between this country and Great Britain has thus treated it. This definition has the sanction of ages, and stands now sustained by a series of adjudications, diplomatic admissions, and legislative recognitions, which leaves it no longer an open question.

But, sir, I do not admit its existence as a belligerent right, because, as I have said, it is aggressive, and therefore has not the merits of being natural. In the early period of the history of nations, when a few maritime States had the power to coerce obedience and submission to it, the law was established; but even in those times it was more a municipal than a national right, and has been at every period of the world contested and denied. In 1780, the Empress Catharine, of Russia, put forth the declaration that "neutral vessels may navigate from port to port and on the coasts of nations at war, and that goods belonging to the Powers at war should be free in neutral ships;" and in support of this position organized what is known in history as the armed neutrality of that day, and which received the sanction of Russia, Norway, Sweden, Spain, Austria, Prussia, Portugal, the Netherlands, the King of the Two Sicilies, and the United States. This organization was made against the doctrine of search as a belligerent right natural to nations, and denied utterly its existence as such, and has steadily been persisted in ever since, only as it has been by treaty stipulation mutually surrendered in reference to specific objects. This country went into a war with Great Britain in 1812, in resistance of a right of search in times of war or peace. But, sir, this resolution directs itself simply against the right of visitation in times of peace. I must be allowed to say that it was never attempted to be separated from the word "search" until 1818, and not a single writer on the law of nations can be produced by the enemies of this resolution who has ever asserted it as a right separate from search. It is a part of the definition of search, and until within the last forty years no one has attempted to separate them. Lord Aberdeen, in his letter of the 13th of October, 1841, to our Minister at the Court of St. James, Mr. Stevenson, for the first time feebly attempted a distinction, to which Mr. Stevenson replied in the following language:

"We confess ourselves unable to collect from the real nature of the distinction alleged to exist between the right claimed by the British Government and the ordinary right of visitation and search. If his lordship has failed in expressing, with sufficient clearness and precision, the conceptions of his own mind, it is certainly not for the want of the requisite talents as a writer, since his letter is written with the greatest terseness and elegance; but ought rather to be attributed to the embarrassment occasioned by the intrinsic difficulties of a bad cause left him as an official legacy by his predecessor, and which the joint ability of both might well prove insufficient to maintain. Be that as it may, Lord Aberdeen expressly asserts that he renounces all pretensions on the part of Great Britain to visit and search American vessels in time of peace; nor is it as American that such vessels are ever visited."

But in the face of this solemn renunciation, I say, "as American" such vessels are now being visited.

It was in 1818 that this right of visitation of vessels at sea was first mooted, and then not asserted as a right belonging to nations, as a national law, or as of general scope; but was asked by Lord Castlereagh to be established by negotiation and treaty in reference to one subject only—the African slave trade. He had assembled the Ministers of the principal maritime Powers of Europe, in London, in the month of February, 1818, and in a written communication he says:

"That as early as July, 1816, a circular intimation had been given to all British cruisers that the right of search, being a belligerent right, had ceased with the war; that it was proven beyond the possibility of doubt that unless the right to visit vessels engaged in the slave trade should be established by mutual concessions on the part of the maritime States, the illicit traffic must not only continue to exist, but must increase."

The British Government, by her Minister, did not then claim visitation as a right belonging to her by virtue of any natural rights, by prescription, by exercise, or otherwise; did not claim it as even a belligerent right. He, in the immediately preceding paragraph, said the right of search had ended with the war; and then he proceeds to ask that the right to visit in times of peace for a specific purpose, should be established by mutual concessions on the part of maritime States. The very words "establish by mutual concessions" is conclusive that the British Government knew well that no such separate right as visitation then existed; and in the request will be seen the suggestion to create a new element in international law. Every one at all familiar with British arrogance must acknowledge that if she had had the slightest foundation, instead of consulting with the maritime nations of the world in relation to its establishment, she would at once have proceeded to exercise it, as she is doing now, under no other pretense of right, only that she has been in negotiation with this country and other maritime States, until, in her insolence, she is claiming it by usage.

Let me examine rapidly the history of the diplomatic correspondence between this country and Great Britain in reference to this subject, for the purpose of ascertaining how far she has reasons, at this time, for supposing this country will acquiesce in it. In the latter part of the year 1818, or the spring of 1819, Mr. Rush, our Minister resident at the Court of St. James, was addressed upon this subject by Lord Castlereagh, which was reserved by him for reference to this Government. Mr. Adams was then Secretary of State; and, in his reply to this communication of Lord Castlereagh, he used the following clear, emphatic language:

"The admission of a right in officers of foreign ships-of-war to enter and search the vessels of the United States, in time of peace, under any circumstances whatever, would meet with universal repugnance in the public opinion of this country."

In December, 1820, Canning, the British Minister at Washington, again called the attention of Mr. Adams to this proposition for the grant of right to visit, which application was again refused in courteous but decisive language.

Again, on the 29th day of January, 1823, Sir Stamford Canning stated to Mr. Adams—

"That the British Government still remained convinced that the only effectual remedy of suppressing the traffic was to be found in the proposed mutual concession of the right of search."

The concession was again refused by our Government, and, although perhaps the boldest statesman Great Britain ever had, was, in the control, he did not dare assert or claim the right to visit without concessions. The very language is concession. The very word used in all this correspondence was "concession"—"concede to Great Britain. If it was hers of right, we had nothing to concede, she nothing to demand. And when in her history has she failed to claim and enjoy all that was hers of right, and more, far more? The very fact that she asked concession is of itself enough to convict her before the bar of the civilized nations of the earth that she had no right, and she knew it. I have already shown that, as late as 1841, Lord Aberdeen, in his communication of the 13th of October, expressly renounced all pretensions in time of peace to visit and search American vessels. I will not detain the House longer by referring to other evidences to be drawn from renunciations of this right in time of peace. But I will, before I quit this branch of the subject, refer the House to a curious item of English history in relation to the same subject. It seems that, in 1839, the Haytian Government enacted a law providing that any vessel, whether Haytian or otherwise, found engaged in the slave trade, should be seized, and brought into port for adjudication. This law aroused the indignation of the British Lion, and Lord Palmerston responded in the following language:

"Hayti has undoubtedly the full right to make such an enactment about her own citizens and ships, but that her Majesty's Government apprehends that Hayti has no right to legislate for the ships or subjects of other States. That in time of peace, no ship belonging to one State has a right to search and detain ships sailing under the flag of, and belonging to, another, without the permission of such State."

He also states that the right of search and detention to be exercised must be first given by treaty. And yet, in the face of all this, she has many vessels in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, daily detaining and searching our merchantmen; and men are to be found—yes, men upon this floor—who speak of it with suppressed tone, as if afraid they would offend Great Britain and cause her to make war upon us. Sir, I must say, that if to this complexion things must come at last, because we shall demand that our honor be not violated, and our commerce destroyed, let it come; and in that hour will come forth millions of firm hearts and strong arms, to strike down and humble the haughty imperialism which exists on the little spot called England.

But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to present this subject to the House in another aspect, so that every earthly difficulty may be removed from around it. In 1817 a French vessel called the Louis was captured and condemned in the inferior courts of admiralty. The case was brought before Lord Stowell, who reversed the sentence of the court below, upon the special ground that, even admitting that the slave trade had been prohibited by the municipal laws of France, (which was doubtful,) the right of visitation and search (being exclusively a belligerent right) could not consistently be exercised in time of peace. He also says:

"No nation can exercise the right of visitation and search upon the common and unappropriated part of the ocean except upon the belligerent claims."

In the case of Madrago vs. Willis, in the King's Bench, in 1820, it was decided that the British Government could not prevent the subjects of other States from carrying on the slave trade out of the limits of the British Government. Now, with all these admissions by her ministers, these decisions of her courts, these declarations made by our courts and our Government a thousand times over—that she should send her cruisers in our very neighborhood, in sight of our shores, and constantly, in a manner most offensive, most lawless and defiant, search our merchantmen, is enough to call forth a murmur of scorn from the graves of our revolutionary ancestors against this generation if we longer submit to it. Timid men here may bow in menial silence, and cry, "Wait the slowness of negotiation!" but, should there be such, they will, when they return to their constituents, meet an indignant rebuke from high-souled freemen, who will not willingly yield to individual or national dishonor.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, I have shown the non-

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Right of Search—Foreign Slave Trade—Mr. Cochrane.

HO. OF REPS.

existence of the right of visitation. I have surrounded it with evidences unanswerable. And if it shall be tolerated by the action of this House, its non-existence shall take an appeal to the people of this country, with evidences that they will see and feel, and perish before they will yield it. I would have been glad to have had time to give this branch of my resolution a more thorough examination, but the importance of the other propositions contained in the resolution admonishes me I must enter at once upon their discussion.

The resolution directs that the President be required to instruct our naval officers to arrest the British cruisers engaged in visiting our merchantmen. And it is this feature which causes it to be denominated a war measure. Not so, sir. I have the sanction of the British Government herself for this procedure. In the case of Madrago vs. Willis, decided in the Court of King's Bench in 1820, the court says:

"If a ship be acting contrary to the general law of nations, she is thereby subject to condemnation."

It may be said this remark applies only to private ships. That would be an inference unsupported by any language used. I see no reason why a vessel of war should be allowed to float at large, disregarding law, insulting nations, violating national law, and injuring private property, and trampling upon private rights, and demand indemnity, because the owner may be a nation. From my knowledge of British character, I doubt not, if an American armed vessel were in its vicinity, and exercising acts in violation of international law, and trampling upon the rights of her citizens, but what she would arrest her instantly; and I would, by my vote, justify her. This view of the subject is predicated upon the supposition that these acts of visitation are unauthorized by the orders of the British Government; but if by her orders, then she is now waging war against the United States; and if so, where is there a man to-day so base as not to meet war with war, blow with blow, violence with violence? I have said, if this act is the result of orders from the British Government, then she is making war on us. For authority, I refer again to her. In the case of Hayti, who had by law (amounting to an order) authorized the arrest of slavers at sea, Lord Palmerston said to the Haytian Government that, in time of peace, no ship belonging to one State had the right to search and detain ships sailing under the flag of and belonging to another. Why? Because it is a belligerent right, not to be exercised in time of peace.

Now, then, if visitation is being made by authority of the British Government, they are doing what they have admitted themselves they have no right to do by the law of nations, and they are in the use of a belligerent right in doing it. So you see, in any aspect you may view the subject, those offending vessels are the subject of capture. If they are acting upon their own authority, according to the decision of the King's Bench, to which I have referred, they are proper objects of arrest; if by the authority of the British Government, then war exists between this country and Great Britain, and that by the act of the British Government, and we must meet it even if against our will.

Thus it will be seen that this portion of the resolution is not a war measure, but one that legitimately grows out of an existing state of things for which we are in nowise responsible. This country has always respected the honor and feeling of other nations, and, if she is true to herself, will respect her own honor; and the only proper mode of doing it, is to submit to no insolence, yield to no unjust demand, and have it plainly understood that we are always ready for war.

The resolution next proposes that the arrest of offending vessels shall be continued until indemnity has been granted by Great Britain, and guarantees given against visitation in the future. This, it is said, cuts off negotiation. Not so; it only gives impetus to it. It only requires the President to compel Great Britain to talk in monosyllables—answering, yes or no. I confess, sir, my object is to avoid the slowness of negotiation; it is the curse of this country; it is the disgrace of the nation. I remember, with mortification, that during the last Administration similar outrages were committed upon our flag by Spain. I remember that the President announced to the country that he intended to have instant and immediate satisfaction. The demand was made, and what has been done? Five years or more have elapsed, and my pride as an American citizen is humbled when I am forced to answer, nothing, nothing—that Spain has complicated it with a thousand other questions; and when my locks shall be gray, the answer will still be, "It is being negotiated."

Sir, I detest the very word negotiation. It is the shame of this country and of this people. I want negotiation hereafter to be had at the mouth of the cannon, and then one negotiation will end all our troubles. Let Congress adjourn, and when Congress meets here next winter, we will be informed that the Premier of England required time to draw up his answer, and that weeks were consumed; that in his communications he complicated the question with the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and Central American affairs generally; and, perhaps, that a commission has been appointed to negotiate upon all subjects of difficulty between this country and Great Britain; and five years will see the negotiation still pending; and, finally, a half-finished treaty will be entered into, which, like the oracles of old, will be so dubious that England will give her construction to it, showing she has gained all—we have lost all. This day we have more unsettled questions with England, growing out of our treaties with her, than originally existed. I will have no more negotiations with her. The treaties which now exist must be cut by the sword, and the sooner it is done the better.

In the better days of France, she always met the propositions of England to negotiate with an indignant denial, saying the peace of the two countries depended upon avoiding complicated alliances. The sword will unravel their recent concert in oppressing nations. This very assault upon us is intended by England to create a necessity for negotiation. I will have none of it. The green sod of Cuba is red with the blood of Crittenden; her soil now drinks in the blood of American citizens, and negotiation still lingers. The blood of American citizens, unlawfully shed by a tyrant hand on Cuban soil, cries to us for vindication; and the American heart, humbled by the deed, inquires in vain, "What has been done?" and it sinks more humbled when the answer is given, "It is being negotiated." The indignation of this great people burns deep in the soul, like the raging lava of the volcano, and, like it, unless something is done to vindicate the honor of the nation, will burst forth, and, like a fiery deluge, roll over this country, and consume forever the timid hearts that rule them. We have endured with patience; we have endured too long. I will submit to no more delays. I will not consent to negotiate. We must demand, and instant satisfaction must be given, or we must punish.

I am told that Congress should confer full power upon the President to settle this whole subject. I believe if we have had a President since the day of President Jackson, who could be fully trusted in this matter, it is President Buchanan. But by my vote I shall confer upon him no power to place under his mere discretion that which belongs to me in part by the Constitution.

The Constitution, I confess, vests in the President the treaty-making power. Let him exercise it. But, sir, in the lawless acts of British cruisers now being committed on our coast, I see no subject of negotiation. What shall be the subject of treaty? England is exercising the right to visit our merchantmen in time of peace. No such right belongs to her, as I have shown in the early part of my argument. Shall we treat with her to keep the peace—to induce her to respect the laws of nature and of nations? There is no dispute between us upon this subject. I have shown that she has admitted the non-existence of the right of visitation in herself. It is, therefore, not the subject of treaty, and I will not consent that it shall so become. These acts reflect on the honor of the nation; and its vindication by the Constitution is vested in Congress, and I will not consent to delegate it to another. We are invested with the war-making power, and war is waged in vindication of right and defense of honor; and I feel that we, coming as we do, from all portions of this widely-extended country, are more competent to reflect the sentiments and feeling of our people, than the President; and will not delegate to him the performance of duties legitimately our own. I doubt not that these very outrages are the result of the timid policy of this Government, in reference to similar acts committed upon us by Spain. If, after the demand was made upon her Catholic Majesty, and hesitation indicated, we had broken her silence by the fear-producing thunders of the cannon, our ships would now ride at sea in calm and storm with swelling canvas and defiant mien, and everywhere on earth, the words "I am an American citizen," would be a passport and an honor. But England sees our halting course towards her, and has presumed to exercise similar acts, under the hope that it would be followed by negotiation, and she might thus obtain that which has been so long denied—the right to visit our vessels in time of peace.

My resolution in nowise interferes with the rights or duties of the President. I would not interfere with them. If he has demanded an explanation from England, let her give it, and the objects of the resolution have been accomplished. I only add an additional element of power with which to enforce this demand, and I make it obligatory on him to use it if necessary. The resolutions do not require him to arrest the vessels which had offended before the demand was made; it only requires the arrest of those which may thereafter offend. And is it not right that they should be arrested?

Nothing can be more harmless; they look to peace; to the prevention of the continuation of acts which have already excited the people almost beyond patient endurance, and which will madden them beyond restraint if continued. If this House is for peace, I call on members to sustain this peace measure; if for war, vote it down; and when the thunder cloud of war shall hang darkly over the land, say to your constituents, "My folly did it."

RIGHT OF SEARCH—FOREIGN SLAVE TRADE.

SPEECH OF HON. C. B. COCHRANE,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 8, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The recent outrages committed by British cruisers upon American vessels in the Gulf of Mexico have excited—and, as I think, justly excited—the indignation of our people in every section of the Confederacy. No intentions, however good, no object, however laudable, can justify these seemingly persistent assaults upon our commerce.

The ocean is the great highway of nations, and upon her bosom the ships of all are equal. The rights of nations to traverse the seas are as free, as absolute, and as equal, as are the rights of American citizens to travel the people's highways. As the citizens of every free country possess a community of privileges within the State, so each independent nation is regarded as a moral person, having its own distinctive identity, and is in all respects precisely equal to every other member in the sisterhood of States. No matter how weak or how inconsiderable may be any given Power in the intercourse and transactions of nations, she stands upon equal footing with the largest and most powerful.

This is a favorite and fundamental doctrine in international law, absolutely essential to the growth and freedom of commerce, the progress of civilization, and to the honor, integrity, and even existence, of independent nationalities.

Another principle, equally well grounded in reason and public law, and one of universal recognition, is, that the jurisdiction and distinctive sovereignty of each nation follow and cover its vessels to the remotest seas, rendering them as exempt from seizure and molestation upon the waters, as the soil of their country from invasion upon the land. It follows as a necessary corollary from these settled doctrines of international

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Right of Search—Foreign Slave Trade—Mr. Cochrane.

Ho. OF REPS.

and maritime law—doctrines forever fixed and forever closed to the discussions of mankind—that an assault upon, or an assumption of control over, the ships of one country, no matter for what cause, or under what pretext, if against its consent, is an act of hostility, an invasion of national jurisdiction, and a breach of public law, to the observance and vindication of which all are bound by considerations of the highest obligations and solemnity, and if avowed, constitute a just cause of war. If, as is incontrovertible, our national sovereignty and jurisdiction follow and surround our ships upon the waters of the world, their detention and search by British cruisers, though for the purpose of detecting and punishing crime, admits of no other or better justification than the invasion of the soil of the Union for similar purposes. The right of the United States to execute its penal laws is as absolute and as exclusive as its right to make them. To rigidly enforce and faithfully execute our criminal code, whenever and wherever violated by our citizens, whether upon the land or upon the sea, is a duty of the highest and sternest obligation—as well laws against external as against internal crime. But to admit the uninvited and unreciprocal aid of a foreign Power in the administration of our laws, is at once a confession of weakness and a surrender of independence. To tolerate such an unasked-for protection, no matter under what pretenses sought to be imposed, would be but the deserved forfeiture of national honor and the common respect of mankind.

It would involve upon our part, as one of the great and enlightened Powers of the world, the basest infidelity to those great principles of national personality and equality which constitute the condition to the civil and commercial freedom of the world.

No nation can arrogate to herself the police and espionage of the ocean, without violating its freedom and trampling upon the honor and rights of others. By the law of nature and nations, American ships upon the high seas are as free as the billows over which they bound, and the stars upon the flag they carry are as high above the reach of foreign invasion as the stars they symbolize.

The plea under which these assaults upon our commercial rights by the Government of Great Britain are sought to be excused, if not justified, is her desire, which I do not doubt is sincere, to suppress the African slave trade—a traffic long since declared piracy by the laws of both countries, and now prosecuted with increased activity and comparative impunity, under the fraudulent assumption of the flag of the United States. If the practice complained of could admit of any apology, none more potent could be devised. The Christian world, for more than half a century, have united in branding the accursed trade as a crime against nature and humanity, as unparalleled in its intrinsic atrocity, and aggravated to the climax of horror by the circumstances of cruelty attendant upon its prosecution.

The fact that a foreign trade in human beings, a commerce which Jefferson more than eighty years ago, while yet in the freshness of his manhood and the dawn of his great fame, denounced as “the opprobrium of infidel Powers,” should, in the last half of the nineteenth century, be revived, and vigorously and notoriously carried on under the protection of a Christian flag, is well calculated to induce the more humane of our people to acquiesce in the claim and practice of the English Government, now again, as often heretofore, made the subject of complaint. This leaning towards acquiescence is rendered the more powerful, from the fact that the prosecution of the traffic is supposed to command the sympathy, if not the indirect coöperation, of an influential and resolute class of our own citizens, who make slavery expansion and the increased supply of slave laborers a cardinal principle of their political creed, while at the same time it must be confessed that no very effectual means or efforts are made, on the part of the Administration or the Federal authorities, to prevent or punish the piratical use to which the flag of the Republic is thus shamelessly prostituted.

But be it remembered that a great good may be purchased at too dear a rate. There is no single object within the compass or contemplation of the social effort, so commanding or desirable as to justify for its accomplishment the sacrifice of any one of those great principles which lie at the foundation of a broader philanthropy; and, elaborated and established by the wisdom and experience of ages, furnish those primary processes by which alone the freedom and civilization of the race are to be carried forward to their ultimate perfect triumph. Progress is a law of our humanity; but the improvement of men and of nations advances by principles as fixed as those which have brought the physical universe from chaos to a state of order and beauty.

Among the principles of international law, none are better settled than those to which I have referred. The Government of Great Britain professes to admit them to their fullest extent, and to be governed by them. She admits that the right of search is strictly a belligerent right, and cannot be exercised in time of peace, unless such right be granted by treaty stipulation, but seeks to draw a distinction between the right of search as defined by public law, and a right of visitation in suspicious cases, for the purpose merely of ascertaining the vessel's nationality. The claim of the British Government is clearly and fairly stated in a note addressed by Lord Aberdeen to Mr. Stevenson, when our Minister at the Court St. James, under date of October 13, 1841. It contains these words:

“The undersigned readily admits that to visit and search American vessels, in time of peace, when that right of search is not granted by treaty, would be an infraction of public law, and a violation of national dignity and independence. But no such right is asserted. We sincerely desire to respect the vessels of the United States; but we may reasonably expect to know what it really is that we respect. Doubtless the flag is prima facie evidence of the nationality of the vessel; and if this evidence were in its nature conclusive and irrefragable, it ought to preclude all further inquiry. But it is sufficiently notorious that the flags of all nations are liable to be assumed by those who have no right or title to bear them. Mr. Stevenson himself fully admits the extent to which the American flag has been employed for the purpose of covering this infamous traffic.”

“The undersigned renounces all pretension on the part of the British Government to visit and search American vessels in time of peace, nor is it as American that such vessels are ever visited; but it has been the invariable practice of the British navy, and, as the undersigned believes, of all navies in the world, to ascertain, by visit, the real nationality of merchant vessels met with on the high seas, if there be good reasons to apprehend their illegal character.”

“The undersigned admits, that if the British cruiser should possess a knowledge of the American character of any vessel, his visitation of such vessel would be entirely unjustifiable. He further admits, that so much respect and honor are due to the American flag, that no vessel bearing it ought to be visited by a British cruiser, except under the most grave suspicions and well-founded doubts of the genuineness of its character. The undersigned, although with pain, must add, that if such visit should lead to the proof of the American origin of the vessel, and that she was avowedly engaged in the slave trade, exhibiting to view the manacles, fetters, and other usual instruments of torture, or had even a number of these unfortunate beings on board, no British officer could interfere further. He might give information to the cruisers of the United States, but it could not be in his power to arrest or impede the prosecution of the voyage and the success of the undertaking.

“It is obvious, therefore, that the utmost caution is necessary in the exercise of this right claimed by Great Britain. While we have recourse to the necessary, and, indeed, the only means for detecting imposture, the practice will be carefully guarded, and limited to cases of strong suspicion.”

This claim of Great Britain, as thus defined and limited, has been uniformly resisted on the part of this Government as unfounded in public law, and an infraction of the freedom of the seas; not so much, indeed, because in a given case the exercise of such a limited claim must necessarily be, considered by itself, objectionable or offensive, as for the reason that no such qualified right is recognized by the law of nations, and is in its nature utterly incapable of practical execution without leading to the gravest abuses, and periling the peace of nations and the freedom of commerce. The distinction sought to be drawn between the “right of search” and the “right of visit” is not admitted by the Government of the United States. On the contrary, this Government has, upon all occasions, as is believed, maintained and insisted that no such distinction could be found in the writings of approved publicists or in the decisions of courts of admiralty, and could not be carried into practice without necessarily drawing after it the right of search, and the right to use whatever force might be necessary to render such search effectual.

During the administration of President Tyler, Mr. Webster, then Secretary of State of the United States, speaking in behalf of the Government, met this claim of Great Britain, and the distinction upon which it was sought to be supported, in the following language:

“But if the vessel thus approached attempts to avoid the vessel approaching, or does not comply with her commander's order to send him her papers for inspection, nor consent to be visited or detained, what is next to be done? Is force to be used? And if force be used, may that force be lawfully repelled? These questions lead at once to the elementary principle, the essence of the British claim. Suppose the merchant vessel be in truth an American vessel, engaged in lawful commerce, and that she does not choose to be detained—suppose she resists the visit: what is the consequence? In all cases in which the belligerent right of visit exists, resistance to the exercise of that right is regarded as just cause of condemnation, both of vessel and cargo. Is that penalty, or what other penalty, to be incurred by resistance to visit in time of peace? Or suppose that force be met by force, gun returned for gun, and the commander of the cruiser, or some of his seamen, be killed: what description of offense will have been committed?”

“The Government of the United States, on the other hand, maintains that there is no such well-known and acknowledged, nor, indeed, any broad and generic difference between what has been usually called ‘visit,’ and what has been usually called ‘search;’ that the right of visit, to be effectual, must come, in the end, to include search; and thus to exercise, in peace, an authority which the law of nations only allows in times of war. If such well-known distinction exists, where are the proofs of it? What writers of authority on public law, what adjudication in courts of admiralty, what public treaties, recognize it? No such recognition has presented itself to the Government of the United States; but, on the contrary, it understands that public writers, courts of law, and solemn treaties, have for two centuries used the words ‘visit’ and ‘search’ in the same sense. What Great Britain and the United States mean by the ‘right of search,’ in its broadest sense, is called by continental writers and jurists by no other name than the ‘right of visit.’ Visit, therefore, as it has been understood, implies not only a right to inquire into the national character, but to detain the vessel, to stop the progress of the voyage, to examine papers, to decide on their regularity and authenticity, and to make inquiry on board for enemies’ property, and into the business in which the vessel is engaged. In other words, it prescribes the entire ‘right of belligerent visitation and search.’”

“On the whole, the Government of the United States, while it has not conceded a mutual right of visit or search as has been done by the parties to the quintuple treaty of December, 1841, does not admit that, by the law and practice of nations, there is any such thing as a right of visit distinguished by well-known rules and definitions from the right of search.”

Again: Mr. Cass, in a letter of recent date, addressed to Lord Napier, who, in his note of December last, had reaffirmed the pretended “right of visitation,” restates the American doctrine in these words:

“Your lordship, while stating that it is the habit of vessels upon the coast of Africa to hoist the American flag as a protection against British cruisers, remarks that ‘this precaution does not protect the slaver from visit, but exonerates her from search.’ The distinction here taken between the right of visitation and the right of search, between an entry for the purpose of examining into the national character of a vessel and an entry for the purpose of examining into the objects of her voyage, cannot be justly maintained upon any recognized principle of the law of nations. To the former, Lord Palmerston, in his correspondence with the American Minister at London, added, that the vessel must be navigated according to law. To permit a foreign officer to board the vessel of another Power, to assume command in her, to call for and examine her papers, to pass judgment upon her character, to decide the broad inquiry whether she is navigated according to law, and to send her in at pleasure for trial, cannot be submitted to by any independent nation without injury and dishonor. The United States deny the right of the cruisers of any other Power whatever, for any purpose whatever, to enter their vessels by force in time of peace. No such right is recognized by the law of nations.”

It must be conceded, I think, that the position, early taken upon this important question by this Government, and steadily maintained on all occasions and by all parties down to the present hour, is impregnable, on the ground both of authority and principle. The doctrine contended for by Great Britain would be not only an interpolation of a new principle into the maritime code of the world, but, as it seems to me, an infraction of sound policy, incompatible with the interest of commerce, the freedom of the seas, the independence of States, and the peace of the world. However this may be, the judgment of the United States will not be reversed. The question, so far as we are concerned, must be considered as closed. A doctrine so uniformly and resolutely maintained for more than half a century, and to which we are so fully committed, cannot now be surrendered without national inconsistency and dishonor. To incur these, the United States cannot afford.

But this very position, so liable to be attributed to indifference on the part of the United States to the slave trade, especially at this unfortunate juncture of time, when this infamous traffic is assuming unusual magnitude and boldness, lays us under stern and peculiar obligations to employ the whole energies of the Government for the suppression of this unnatural crime. We owe it to our own character and faith as a nation. We owe it to the other Christian Powers of the world, before whom we were the first to denounce it as criminal, and to whom we inaugurated and commended the policy of its extirpation; we owe it to the manly records of our past, and the just expectations of our future; to the great cause of humanity and Christian civilization.

If we deny the right of Great Britain to interfere in the execution of our criminal laws, let us see to it that we execute them ourselves. If we deny the right of that Power to detect and expose the piratical use of our flag, let us testify our professed detestation of the piracy by the vigorous application of our own remedies. In the generous movement of the enlightened Powers of the world for the suppression of a general commerce in human bodies—a commerce to which common humanity is sacrificed to the lust of unholy gains—let not the United States manifest its indifference by enacting the part of the dog in the manger.

The fact that we have resisted the pretension of the British Government as well to the right of visitation as of search, and claimed for our flag absolute inviolability upon the highway of nations, coupled with our refusal hitherto to join the principal maritime Powers of the world in their common efforts to suppress the trade by yielding the mutual right of search, through treaty stipulations, has led, as might well have been foreseen, to the general and fraudulent use of our national ensign to cover and protect this great crime. These facts are so well put by Mr. Calhoun, in his able defense of the Ashburton treaty, that I beg leave to read an extract from his remarks, not only because of the clearness and brevity of the statement, but also on account of the peculiar class of opinions which that distinguished statesman was supposed to represent. Mr. Calhoun said:

"Congress, at an early day—as soon, in fact, as it could legislate on the subject under the Constitution—passed laws enacting severe penalties against the African slave trade. That was followed by the treaty of Ghent, which declared it to be irreconcilable with the principles of humanity and justice, and stipulated that both of the parties—the United States and Great Britain—should use their best endeavors to effect its abolition. Shortly after, an act of Congress was passed declaring it to be piracy, and a resolution was adopted by Congress requesting the President to enter into arrangements with other Powers for its suppression. Great Britain, actuated by the same feeling, succeeded in making treaties with the European maritime Powers for its suppression; and, not long before the commencement of this negotiation, had entered into joint stipulations with the five great Powers to back her on the question of search. She had thus acquired a general supervision of the trade along the African coast, so that vessels carrying the flag of every other country, except ours, were subject, on that coast, to the inspection of her cruisers, and to be captured if suspected of being engaged in the slave trade. In consequence ours became almost the only flag used by those engaged in the trade, whether our own people or foreigners; although our laws inhibited the traffic under the severest penalties.

"In this state of things, Great Britain put forward the claim of the right of search as indispensable to suppress a trade prohibited by the laws of the civilized world, and to the execution of the laws and treaties of the nations associated with her by mutual engagements for its suppression. At this stage, a correspondence took place between our late Minister at the Court of St. James, and Lord Palmerston, on the subject, in which the latter openly and boldly claimed the right of search, and which was promptly and decidedly repelled on our side. We had long since taken our stand against it, and had resisted its abuse as a belligerent right at the mouth of the cannon. Neither honor nor policy on our part could tolerate its exercise, in time of peace, in any form, whether in that of search, as claimed by Lord Palmerston, or the less offensive and reasonable one of visitation, as proposed by his successor, Lord Aberdeen. And yet we were placed in such circumstances as to require that something should be done."

The question remains with us, whether anything shall be done. Action, immediate and earnest action, is demanded, if for no other reason, in order to preserve our faith and honor as a nation. We are committed against this trade by an irreversible record. The Christian world is committed against it. The instincts of our common humanity arraign and condemn it as the most atrocious of crimes, and call for its immediate suppression.

From the catalogue of human wrongs, this has been singled out for ignominy and extinction by the judgment of the world. From that tribunal, by which its doom has been pronounced, there is no appeal.

Towards the consummation of a great object, so devoutly to be wished, the Republic is pledged to no undistinguished part. The glory of first branding the traffic and initiating the policy for its suppression is ours. If we are true to ourselves, we shall labor to deserve the chief plaudits of the world in the hour of final success.

It is a law of the chase that the huntsman who starts the game is entitled to be in at the death. Let the Republic, which inaugurated the enterprise, lead the nations in the pursuit, and to the fame of its beginning add the brighter luster of its close.

Instead of vigorously and earnestly employing the means and remedies we already have, or devising new and more effectual measures to suppress the evil, we seem at least to stand in the way of its suppression. That the foreign slave trade has of late largely increased, and is now principally prosecuted under the cover of the American flag, is notorious. This has been lately charged by the Government of Great Britain and not denied by our own.

The note of Lord Napier to General Cass, of the 24th of December last, contains, on this subject, a mortifying statement of facts, and a noble and generous appeal. He says:

"It has been my duty, under the instructions of her Majesty's Government, to draw your attention verbally, on several occasions, to the present activity of the African slave trade, to the fact that it is now chiefly prosecuted by the criminal and fraudulent assumption of the United States flag, and to the incommensurate means which are employed for its suppression.

"I have also, in an official letter of the 16th of September last, conveyed to you the hope of her Majesty's Government that their increasing efforts for the extinction of this traffic may be supported by the hearty coöperation of the naval forces of the United States."

"Since I had the honor of addressing you, additional evidence has transpired of the abuses to which I have alluded. I have been directed by the Earl of Clarendon to make a written communication to you of certain particulars hereafter stated, and I deem the occasion proper for presenting, at the same time, such a general view of the subject as the materials at my command afford, and which, I trust, notwithstanding its incompleteness, will furnish the United States Cabinet with ground for serious deliberation, and for repressive measures of an energetic character.

"The demand for slaves in the Cuban market is supplied by vessels constructed, purchased, and often possessed and fitted out in the ports of the United States. The number of ships so employed cannot be exactly ascertained; but, in the opinion of competent judges, it is considerable and increasing.

"The accompanying extracts from the official correspondence of her Majesty's consular authorities in Cuba, and the reports of the British functionaries on the coast of Africa, which I have also the honor to inclose, are submitted to the attention of the Government of the United States in the belief that similar information has not reached them from any other quarter.

"The vessels engaged in this branch of the slave trade, which alone possess any vigor or extension, whether owned by American citizens, by colonial Spaniards, or by foreign residents in the Union; whether issuing from the harbors of the United States or from those of Cuba, have now embraced the almost universal habit of hoisting the colors of the United States for the purpose of sheltering themselves against the scrutiny of the British cruisers."

The Secretary of State of the United States admits that he has no doubt that "his lordship is correct in the statement that the American flag has been fraudulently assumed by the vessels of other nations engaged in the traffic," but gives in his long and elaborate reply no assurance or promise to the country or the world that any very effectual measures will be prosecuted, at least during this Administration, to arrest the evils complained of, or prevent the piratical prostitution and use of our flag.

There is, in my judgment, nothing wanting to secure the complete destruction and overthrow of the slave trade, at once and forever, except the cordial and earnest coöperation of the United States with the maritime Powers of Europe in such reciprocal measures as the wisdom and experience of the past have shown would be both effective and feasible for the accomplishment of the end proposed.

Some plan provided for by treaty with Great Britain and the other principal European Powers, and conceding on our part the mutual and equal right of visitation and search, is believed to be indispensable for the removal of this gigantic and inveterate wrong.

That such reciprocal right might successfully be administered, under such well-regulated and well-defined limitations as would prevent any serious inconvenience or abuse, cannot be doubted. The evil is not beyond the reach of human remedies; and wherever there is a will there is a way.

The concession would be as compatible with national honor as consonant with the Christian sentiment of the world. Whatever rights are conceded in furtherance of a common end, equivalent rights would be yielded in return, and equality is not dishonor.

To a fair and equal concurrence in a scheme of this character, the United States has been repeatedly invited, and has as often, and in my judgment, without sufficient reasons, declined. The history of our country, however, is not without evidence of earnest effort, on the part of certain departments of the Government, to induce the proposed coöperation.

In 1820, so much of the annual message of Mr. Monroe as related to the suppression of the slave trade was referred to a special committee of the House of Representatives. In their report, subsequently submitted to the House, the committee said:

"On this subject the United States, having led the way, owe it to themselves to give their influence and cordial coöperation to any measure that will accomplish the great and good purpose; but this happy result, experience has demonstrated, cannot be realized by any system, except a concession by the maritime Powers to each other's ships of war of a qualified right of search. If this object was generally attained, it is confidently believed that the active exertions of even a few nations would be sufficient entirely to suppress the slave trade."

Such was the judgment and such the spirit of the people's representatives, at that period, upon this important subject. They felt, in the language of Mr. Calhoun at a later period, that "something should be done." Again, in 1822, a committee of the House, raised upon the same subject, made an able and convincing report, in which, among other things, they said:

"But the conclusion to which your committee has arrived, after consulting all the evidence within their reach, is, that the African slave trade now prevails to a great extent, and that its total suppression can never be effected by the separate and dissimilar efforts of one or more States; and, as the resolution to which this report refers requires the suggestion of some remedy for the defects, if any exist, in the system of laws for the suppression of this traffic, your committee beg leave to call the attention of the House to the report and accompanying documents, submitted to the last Congress by the Committee on the Slave Trade, and to make the same a part of this report. That report proposes, as a remedy for the existing evils of the system, the concurrence of the United States with one or all the maritime Powers of Europe in a modified and reciprocal right of search on the African coast, with a view to the total suppression of the slave trade.

"It is with great delicacy that the committee have approached this subject, because they are aware that the remedy which they have presumed to recommend to the consideration of the House requires the exercise of a power of another department of this Government, and that objections to the exercise of this power, in the mode here proposed, have hitherto existed in that department.

"Your committee are confident, however, that these objections apply rather to a particular proposition for the exchange of the right of search than to that modification of it which presents itself to your committee. They contemplate the trial and condemnation of such American citizens as may be found engaged in this forbidden trade, not by mixed tribunals sitting in a foreign country, but by existing courts of competent jurisdiction in the United States; they propose the same disposition of the captured Africans now authorized by law; and, least of all, their detention in America.

"They contemplate an exchange of this right which shall be in all respects reciprocal; an exchange which, deriving its sole authority from treaty, would exclude the pretension—which no nation, however, has presumed to set up—that this right can be derived from the law of nations; and, further, they have limited it, in their conception of its application, not only to certain latitudes, and to a certain distance from the coast of Africa, but to a small number of vessels to be employed by each Power, and to be previously designated. The visit and search, thus restricted, it is believed, would insure the coöperation of one great maritime Power in the proposed exchange, and guard it from the danger of abuse.

"Your committee cannot doubt that the people of America have the intelligence to distinguish between the right of searching a neutral on the high seas in time of war, claimed by some belligerents, and that mutual, restricted, and peaceful concession, by treaty, suggested by your committee, and which is demanded in the name of suffering humanity."

The proposition was earnestly and ably seconded by Mr. Monroe. Negotiations were entered upon for the purpose of securing the object, and in March, 1824, a convention between the United States and the Government of Great Britain was actually signed, in which, among other things stipulated for, was "the right of visiting,

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Revolutionary Claims—Mr. Fenton.

Ho. OF REPS.

capturing, and delivering over for trial, the merchant vessels of the other, engaged in the traffic of slaves." This right to be administered and executed "by such commissioned officers of their respective navies as shall be furnished with instructions for executing the laws of their respective countries against the slave trade."

The Senate amended the convention so as to exclude from its operation the "coasts of America." By reason of this amendment, it failed to receive the ratification of the English Government, and so the negotiation failed of its object. The whole subject has been a fruitful source of protracted controversy between the two Governments.

The controversy should be terminated, and terminated in a way not only compatible with the honor of both countries, but in the cordial adoption of such mutual and remedial measures as shall sweep from the seas a system of piracy the most guilty and stupendous in the annals of human crime.

The world looks in confident expectation for the accomplishment of a great purpose, and, in this attitude of profound anxiety, awaits the vindication of our sincerity, and the faithful redemption of our pledges.

REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

SPEECH OF HON. R. E. FENTON,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 11, 1858.

After moving to suspend the rules to enable him to take up the bill to provide for the final settlement of the claims of the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army—

Mr. FENTON said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Early in the present session I referred this bill to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; and the committee, after a careful examination of its provisions, with entire unanimity reported it back, and it was placed on the Calendar of the House. I had expected to reach it in the regular order, but as that is now impossible, I have adopted this, the only method, of getting it before the House for consideration this session; and while I make an appeal to the friends of the bill, the friends of the heroes of our revolutionary struggle, the friends of equity and justice, to aid in suspending the rules, I beg the indulgence of the House to briefly assign my reasons in favor of the passage of the bill.

It differs from that of the late distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Judge Evans, which passed both Houses of Congress at different sessions, in this: it allowed the half pay promised by Congress, from the close of the Revolution to 1826, and deducts the commutation certificates for five years' full pay, which the officers received, (although worth at the time one eighth only of their apparent value,) but does not deduct the pensions allowed the survivors by the act of May 15, 1828; nor does it make any provision for the soldiers; whereas my bill allows the half pay from the close of the war to the date of the officer's death, and deducts all the Government ever paid by way of commutation, or as pensions under the act of 1823. It also grants a quarter section of land to the surviving children of the soldiers: in other words, extends to them the benefits of the act of March 3, 1855, from which they are excluded by the word "minor," their being no minor heirs of the revolutionary soldiers.

The committee, in their able report, have sustained the principles of this bill in a masterly and conclusive manner; and I cannot so successfully, by any argument of my own, make plain to the House and the country the great injustice of our refusal to pass this bill, as by including a portion of it in my remarks.

The committee say:

"That, since the Revolution, the claims of the officers of the continental army for the half pay for life, promised them by various resolutions of the Continental Congress, have frequently been before the committees of this House, and received their favorable consideration. At the last Congress a report was made from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, by Mr. Broom, (see House Report No. 31, first session Thirty-Fourth Congress,) in which the subject is so fully considered that the committee deem it unnecessary to enlarge upon the views therein expressed, but adopt it as a part of their report, to be printed therewith.

"From an examination of that report, and various other documents relating to the subject, your committee have arrived at the following conclusions:

"1. That the resolves of October 21, 1780, and other acts of Congress, promising half pay for life to the officers of the Continental army who should serve to the end of the war, or until the time of their reduction, formed a contract between the United States and the officers of the Army, in their individual capacity, at a time when both were free to make it, founded upon a good and valid consideration.

"2. That the officers fully performed and fulfilled the contract on their part, and by their services, sacrifices, and sufferings, gained the liberty and independence of the country.

"3. That on the performance of said contract, each officer, as an individual, acquired a vested right of property therein, of which he could not be divested 'without due process of law,' or by his own free and voluntary relinquishment; and any act of Congress impairing or affecting this right is repugnant to the Constitution and void. Under this contract each officer became entitled from the United States to half pay, according to the rank he held in the Army from the close of the revolutionary war, or from the time of his discharge from the service, until the period of his death, to be paid yearly and every year during that period; and for the performance of such contract on the part of the United States the faith of the nation was solemnly pledged. The committee also find that such officers were also entitled to an interest of six per cent. per annum on the yearly payments, and on the aggregate from the date of the officer's death to the time of settlement, under the resolution of Congress passed June 3, 1784, which provides 'that an interest of six per cent. shall be allowed to all the creditors of the United States for supplies furnished or services done, from the time that payment became due.' In alluding to this resolve, Chief Justice Gilchrist, of the Court of Claims, in a recent decision, says: 'No language could be more express or free from doubt than this. The resolution was passed from a feeling that it was just and right that interest should be paid from the time the half pay became due, and it was a voluntary contract on the part of the United States, constituting a legal claim against them which no subsequent legislation could release without the consent of the other party.' The above contract for half pay, although made under the Confederation, is equally binding upon Congress, for by the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States, section one, 'all debts contracted or engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.'

"4. That on the 22d of March, 1783, an attempt to avoid the above contract and procure satisfaction thereof was made by Congress, under an act called the commutation act, by which it was proposed to commute the above life annuities for five years' full pay.

"5. This act was manifestly unjust in compelling individuals to abide by the decisions of the lines of the Army, and placing the old and the young on an equal footing. An officer sixty years of age might well commute his life annuity for ten years' half pay in advance, while one of thirty would have a right, upon the principles which govern life annuities, to estimate his life at a much longer period. It wholly deprived the officers, as individuals, of the right to determine whether they would accept or refuse, and the committee have not been able to ascertain that the officers, either by lines or as individuals, ever gave their assent to the commutation. But if, under the pressure of their poverty, (for he remembered the Continental money in which their monthly stipends had been paid was nearly valueless,) they had assented, 'it cannot be considered as a voluntary assent, but rather a submission to an uncontrollable and instant necessity, which admitted of no deliberation or delay.' The resolve of Congress, an act of the Government, left them no choice except to abide by the decision of the lines and corps of the Army. They were entirely within the power of the Government, and could do nothing which presented better prospects for themselves.

"6. The money was not paid, nor were the securities bearing an interest of six per cent., such as the act contemplated, or as the officers expected. The Government made no provision for the payment of either principal or interest of the commutation until long after the imperious necessities of the officers compelled them to part with the certificates for less than a year's pay. It is true, however, that paper certificates of service were issued by John Pierce, paymaster, payable to the officers or bearer, for five years' full pay, and many doubtless received them. They were worth, at the time of their issue, one eighth of a dollar only; and not until after a period of about ten years, and most of them were in the hands of speculators, were they funded and paid by the United States. The loss of interest alone on the commutation of a captain, ($2,400,) who lived in 1828, was $2,536, and so in proportion to other officers; and this amount the Government saved by the commutation.—See Annals of Congress, vol. 4, part 1, for 1827-28, page 441.

"The commutation then is clearly liable to the following objections:

"1. That the commutation was not a valid accord and satisfaction for the half pay for life.

"2. That it was so construed as to take away the rights of these officers under the resolve of October, 1780.

"3. Of not being an equivalent for the half pay.

"4. Of having been effected under circumstances, and by the operation of motives, which deprive it of all obligatory force.

"5. That, according to strict legal construction, these officers did not commute their promised half pay for life by accepting the so-called commutation certificates; they, in no respect, having been in conformity to the act.

"6. Of partial execution.

"7. The reports of Mr. Madison in 1783, Mr. Nelson in 1810, Mr. Johnson in 1818, Mr. Sergeant, December 10, 1819, Mr. Hemphill, January 3, 1828, Mr. Burgess, May 8, 1826, and February 11, 1828; the act of May 15, 1828, Senator Walker's report in 1832, Senator Evans's, February 4, 1854, and Mr. Broom, April 4, 1856, show a repeated recognition of the contract on the part of Congress; but no general provision appears to have been made by Congress for the relief of these officers until the act of May 15, 1828, in which the contract of 1780 is fully recognized. They are there acknowledged as creditors of the Government, and not pensioners. That act, however, applies to the few surviving officers only, and made no provision for those who died before its passage.

"In the very able report of Mr. Burgess, made February 11, 1828, the committee say: 'That in their opinion, the delivery of those certificates, as well on general principles as on those which govern courts of law and equity, did not annul the right of half pay, or exonerate the Government from the obligations of the original contract. Such of those officers as had survived the war, and continued in the service until peace, became severally and individually vested with a complete right to the reward of half pay for the residue of their lives. The reward was gallantly won at the point of the sword; it was the price of our independence purchased with blood, and secured by public faith.'

"The committee, therefore, report the bill referred to them without amendment, and recommend its passage. It allows half pay for life to the officers from the close of the Revolution to the date of their death, deducting therefrom all sums which have ever been paid to them by the Government by way of commutation or as pay, under the act of May 15, 1828. For the purpose of extending to the surviving children of the soldiers of the Revolution the benefits of the act of March 3, 1855, a section has been inserted for that purpose. The act referred to was doubtless intended to embrace their claims, but the word 'minor' excludes them, as there are no 'minor children' of the Revolution; and hence the necessity of further legislation in behalf of these meritorious claimants. The committee will add that bills embracing the principle contained in the bill herewith reported, so far as relates to the officers and their descendants, have passed the Senate and House of Representatives by large majorities, at different sessions of Congress."

Strange to say, nearly fifty years ago a bill similar, but much more liberal in its provisions, to the bill now before the House, was reported at a time when all business of the country was depressed, and the Treasury was empty, for this half pay, and all the committees to whom these claims have been referred since that time have all united in the admission that these claims for half pay were justly due. How could they do otherwise? History finds that after the war had continued some fifteen months by enlistments for short terms, Congress resolved to raise eighty-eight battalions to serve for the war; and that on the 16th September, 1776,

"Resolved, That, in addition to a money bounty of twenty dollars to each non-commissioned officer and private soldier, Congress make provision for granting lands, in the following proportions, to the officers and soldiers who shall engage in the service, and continue therein to the close of the war, or until discharged by Congress, and to the representatives of such officers and soldiers as shall be slain by the enemy. Such lands to be provided by the United States; and whatever expense shall be necessary to procure such land, the said expense shall be paid and borne by the States, in the same proportion as the other expenses of the war, namely: to a colonel, five hundred acres; to a lieutenant colonel, four hundred and fifty acres; to a major, four hundred acres; to a captain, three hundred acres; to a lieutenant, two hundred acres; to an ensign, one hundred and fifty acres; each non-commissioned officer and soldier, one hundred acres."

And Congress afterward was obliged to add the resolve of May 15, 1778:

"Resolved, unanimously, That all military officers commissioned by Congress, who are now or hereafter may be in the service of the United States, and shall continue therein during the war, and not hold any office of profit under those States, or any of them, shall, after the conclusion of the war, be entitled to receive annually for the term of seven years, if they live so long, one half of the present pay of such officers: Provided, That no general officer of the cavalry, artillery, or infantry, shall be entitled to receive more than the one half part of the pay of a colonel of such corps, respectively."

And it should not be forgotten that during this time the Government was in good credit, and the war was being carried on with loan office bills and certificates; and there had issued up to November 29, 1779, two hundred million of dollars, and a very large amount of other classes of Government securities; that the Government soon after became utterly insolvent, and all the schemes of the Government to carry on the war by the aid of loan offices utterly failed; and as early as March 18, 1780, Congress was obliged to relinquish the hope of redeeming the Government paper, (much of it then being in the hands of the officers,) and on the 18th of April, 1780, passed a resolution—

"That the principal of all certificates taken out since the 18th of March, 1780, should be discharged at the rate of one Spanish milled dollar, or the current exchange thereof in other money at the time of payment, for every dollar of the said bills of credit secured on loan; and that the principal of all certificates that should thereafter be taken out, until

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Revolutionary Claims—Mr. Fenton.

Ho. OF REPS.

the further order of Congress, be discharged at the same rate and in the same manner as those that had been taken out since the 18th of March, 1780."

Here, then, was the public declaration of the utter insolvency of the Government, as early as the 18th of March, 1780.

Thus, while the State troops were being paid by State authorities, the Provincial Government had neither money nor credit to carry on the war. These important facts should be kept in view; for it will be seen that after the war had continued over five years that, in consequence of the utter insolvency of the Government, two distinct classes of currency were established by law. That the paper of the Government had ceased to be considered as security, and therefore the seven years' half pay contract of October 3, 1780, promised the supernumerary officers, was made payable in specie. That on the 3d of October, 1780, Congress reorganized the Army, to take effect on the 1st of January, 1781, the effect of which was to throw many of the officers out of service. They, therefore, at the same time, adopted the following resolution:

"And whereas, by the foregoing arrangement, many deserving officers must become supernumerary, and it is proper that regard be had to them:

"Resolved, That from the time the reform of the Army takes place, they be entitled to half pay for seven years, in specie, or other current money equivalent, and also grants of land at the close of the war, agreeably to the resolution of the 16th of September, 1776."

It will be observed, by the letter of General Washington, that it became necessary, inasmuch as there was no funds in the Treasury, to offer some strong inducement by pledging the honor of the nation for some prospective reward, and all were embraced in the resolve of October 21, 1780.

It was at this critical time of the eight years struggle for liberty, when the hopes of those who had born its burdens seemed about to terminate in disappointment and despair, that Congress on the 21st day of October, 1780, after the repeated and earnest solicitations of Washington,

"Resolved, That the Commander-in-Chief, and commanding officer in the southern department, direct the officers of each State to meet and agree upon the officers for the regiments to be raised by their respective States, from those who incline to continue in service; and where it cannot be done by agreement, to be determined by seniority, and make return of those who are to remain; which is to be transmitted to Congress, together with the names of the officers reduced, who are to be allowed half pay for life. That the officers who shall continue in the service to the end of the war shall also be entitled to half pay during life, to commence from the time of their reduction."

This resolution having embraced those officers named in that of October 3, 1780, it was simply supplementary, additional to, and blending of that contract, and was therefore payable in specie. It could not have been viewed otherwise, because the act of the 18th of March and April, and 28th June, 1780, fixing the value of all Government paper to two and a half dollars to the hundred, was in full force and so continued during the whole period of the old Confederacy. Here, then, it is admitted that this was a solemn contract, by which these officers were promised half of their annual pay during their lives; that this life estate was, as the committees have always found, a vested right, and could not be impaired by any subsequent legislation; that it was a promise to each officer individually. Was this half-pay contract for life ever paid in specie or otherwise, during the period of the old Confederacy? All agree that no portion of principal or interest was ever paid during that time nor since as half pay.

But it is sometimes contended that the computation act, as it is sometimes called, of March 22, 1783, was passed at the request of some of the officers. Because, as it is alleged in the preamble of the resolution itself "in order to remove all subject of dissatisfaction from the minds of their fellow-citizens, (not the officers let it be remembered:)

"And whereas, Congress are desirous as well of gratifying the reasonable expectations of the officers of the Army as removing all objections which may exist in any part of the United States to the principle of the half pay establishment, for which the faith of the United States hath been pledged; persuaded that those objections can only arise from the nature of the compensation, not from any indisposition to compensate those whose services, sacrifices, and sufferings, have so just a title to the approbation and rewards of their country: Therefore,

"Resolved, That such officers as are now in service, and shall continue therein to the end of the war, shall be entitled to receive the amount of five years' full pay in money or securities on interest at six per cent. per annum, as Congress shall find most convenient, instead of the half pay promised for life by the resolution of the 21st day of October, 1780; the said securities to be such as shall be given to other creditors of the United States: Provided, it be at the option of the lines of the respective States, and not of officers, individually, in those lines, to accept or refuse the same: And provided, also, that their election shall be signified to Congress, through the Commander-in-Chief, from the lines under his immediate command, within two months, and through the commanding officer of the southern army, from those under his command, within six months from the date of this resolution."

This act does not repeal that of the 21st October, 1780, and there are many objections to this resolve which should be conclusive why it ought not to have any influence over the half-pay contract.

1. Because it appears by the preamble that the few officers who petitioned Congress for some act which should give them a sum in gross for a term of years did so for the only reason to remove "dissatisfaction from the minds of their fellow-citizens" to the "half-pay establishment."

2. Because, by the terms of the act itself, the officers were expressly prohibited from expressing their dissent to the same.

3. Because this resolve was not passed until after the peace, after the contract had been fulfilled on the part of the officers.

4. Because it was well known to Congress, at the time of the passage of that act, the Government had no power to comply with any of the conditions of that act, either to pay said officers in specie or give them security. The sending out those commutation certificates, and inducing the officer to believe that they were to be secured and brought within the terms even of this resolve, was utterly at variance and inconsistent with, and in violation of, the pledged faith of the American people; and the officers should not be held to account for only their legal value, two dollars and a half to the hundred; this was its true value by law during all the period of the old Confederacy, for some three years afterwards; and it was merely a certificate of a captain's rank for only sixty dollars instead of twenty-four hundred dollars. And this was the relation of the officers who held a specie-paying contract through all the old and during the new Confederacy up to the 4th of August, 1790. Even at this late day, after these certificates had been passed from hand to hand at their legal value of $2 50 to the hundred, and while out of the hands of the officers, they are funded on the specie basis of one dollar to the hundred.

But in order to remove all doubts in relation to the final disposition of these certificates, even by those who held them, and to show that there was deducted, and never paid to any person whatever, in the ratio of a captain's grade, which amounted on the 1st day of January, 1828, to the sum of $2,536 32, the second section of the funding act of August 4, 1790, authorizes the President to cause $12,000,000 to be borrowed, part to pay arrears and installments of the foreign debt, and to make other contracts relating to the foreign debt. The act then proceeds in relation to the domestic debt thus:

"And whereas it is desirable to adapt the nature of the provision to be made for the domestic debt to the present circumstances of the United States, as far as it shall be found practicable, consistently with good faith and the rights of the creditors, which can only be done by a voluntary loan on their part."

The third section then authorizes a loan to be proposed to the full amount of the "domestic debt," by opening books for receiving subscriptions, by a commissioner of loans, to be appointed in each of the States; and that the sums which shall be subscribed thereto be payable in "certificates," issued for the said debt according to their specie value; which said certificates are designated and described as follows:

"1. The 'certificates' issued by the Register of the Treasury.

"2. Those issued by the commissioners of loans in the several States, including 'certificates' given pursuant to the act of Congress of the 2d January, 1779, for bills of credit of the several emissions of the 20th May, 1777, and of the 11th April, 1778.

"3. Those issued by the commissioners for the adjustment of the accounts of the quartermaster, commissary, hospital, clothing, and marine departments.

"4. Those issued by the commissioners for the adjustment of accounts in the respective States.

"5. Those issued by the late and present Paymaster General, or commissioner of Army accounts.

"6. Those issued for the payment of interest, commonly called indents of interest.

"7. And the 'bills of credit' issued by the authority of the United States, in Congress assembled, at the rate of $100 in the said bills for one dollar in specie."

The fourth section designates and describes the three new certificates which the subscribers to the said loans shall be entitled to receive; upon all certificates bearing interest the same is to be received up to the last day of December, 1790.

"That for the whole or any part of any sum subscribed to the said loan, by any person or persons, or body-politic, which shall be paid in the principal of the said domestic debt, the subscriber or subscribers shall be entitled to a certificate purporting that the United States owe to the holder or holders thereof, his, her, or their assigns, a sum to be expressed therein, equal to two thirds of the sum so paid, bearing an interest of six per centum per annum, payable quarter yearly, and subject to redemption by payments not exceeding in one year in amount of principal and interest the proportion of eight dollars upon a hundred of the sum mentioned in said certificate. A second certificate for one third, payable as aforesaid, bearing interest after 1800. A third certificate, for the amount of the interest, bearing an interest at three per centum per annum, payable quarter yearly; provided it shall not be understood that the United States shall be bound or obliged to redeem in the proportion aforesaid; but it shall be understood only that they have a right to do so."

Thus the facts find that none of the terms or conditions of the resolve of March 22, 1783, were complied with by the old or the new Government, but repudiated. This five years' full pay, by the terms of the resolve, was to have been paid in specie or securities. This first contract for half pay being payable in specie, it would have been exchanging specie for the depreciated paper of the Government, worth by law only two and a half dollars to the hundred. Such an act might conditionally have been considered supplementary to that of October 21, but that having utterly failed in its execution, it is not important to show whether the officers, relying upon the good faith of the Government at that time, accepted said certificates or not. It is certainly true, that if they had been either specie or security, it would not have been necessary for the holders to have funded them at a loss of over thirty per cent. even on a term of time requiring about forty years for their liquidation. And not only so, this Government, it will be seen, by the funding act reserved the right of paying even that amount or not. But after these facts have been found, some may not agree to the construction of the funding act. I therefore submit the remarks of Mr. Tucker, of New Jersey, while the same contract was being discussed, in passing the act of May 15, 1828. Referring to the records of the Register's office:

"Mr. TUCKER of New Jersey. It is ascertained, Mr. Chairman, that each captain, for his five years' full pay, received a certificate for $2,400, bearing interest at six per cent., payable annually, and such a certificate Captain Dehart received in lieu of his half pay for life, which ran eight years without payment of interest, as before stated, namely, from the 1st of January, 1783, to the 1st of January, 1791, the interest amounting on the latter day to $1,152; making in the aggregate $3,552. It will be recollected that in March, 1788, the present Government went into operation, and in the year 1790 made provision for and funded the public debt.

"Well, sir, how did they provide for the payment of Captain Dehart's $2,400 principal, and $1,152 interest, due on the 1st of January, 1791? Why, sir, they gave him three certificates—one for $1,600, being two thirds his principal, with interest at six per cent., and one for $800, the other third of his debt, but deferred ten years without interest; and, instead of paying his $1,152 down, or giving him paper at six per cent., they gave him a certificate for his $1,152 interest, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States, at three per cent. Let us now examine how this funding system operated:

1. Loss of interest on $800, deferred from 1st January, 1791, to 1st January, 1801, (ten years,) at six per cent.	$480 00
2. Interest on the above sum from the 1st January, 1801, to the 1st January, 1828, (twenty-seven years,) at six per cent.	777 60
3. Loss of interest on the $1,152 of the three per cent., from 1st January, 1791, to 1st January, 1828, (thirty-seven years,) at three per cent.	1,378 72
Total loss of Captain Dehart, down to this time, $2,536 32

"And, in the same proportion, every officer's pay or commutation, according to his rank.

"The commutation, then, is clearly liable to the following objections:

"1. That the commutation was not a valid accord and satisfaction for half pay for life.

"2. That it was so construed as to take away the rights of these officers, under the resolve of October, 1780.

"3. Of not being an equivalent for the half pay.

"4. Of having been effected under circumstances, and by the operation of motives, which deprive it of all obligatory force.

"5. That according to strict legal construction, these officers did not commute their promised half pay for life by accepting the so-called commutation certificates; they in no respect having been in conformity to the act.

"6. Of partial and defective execution."

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Revolutionary Claims—Mr. Fenton.

HO. OF REFS.

In that great national act of necessity—that of funding all the paper of the Government—Congress did not omit to make some provision for these half-pay claims. Accordingly, the ninth section of the funding act provides—

"That nothing in this act contained shall be construed in any wise to alter, abridge, or impair, the rights of those creditors of the United States who shall not subscribe to the said loan, or the contracts upon which their respective claims are founded; but the contracts and rights shall remain in full force and virtue."

Not only so: in order to make creditors some compensation for the inevitable delay of payment, which the impoverished Treasury could not fail to predict, on the 3d of June, 1784, Congress passed the following resolution:

"That an interest of six per cent. per annum shall be allowed to all creditors of the United States, for supplies furnished, or services done, from the time the payment became due."

This extended to all their arrears of pay long due, as well as to their half pay. Chief Justice Gilchrist, in a recent decision, in alluding to this resolve, says:

"No language could be more express or free from doubt than this. The resolution was passed from a feeling that it was just and right that interest should be paid from the time the half pay became due; and it was a voluntary contract on the part of the United States, constituting a legal claim against them, which no subsequent legislation could release without the consent of the other party." * "It may be added that, up to the year 1837, there was paid interest on fifteen hundred and two claims of widows and orphans, and claims of officers for personal services, the statute of limitation as to such claims having been suspended."

The omission, therefore, to pay the interest due annually on those certificates was a violation of the resolve of 1783, as well as the condition of the certificates.

The sixth article of the Constitution provides,

"That all debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States, under this constitution, as under the Confederation."

The act of 1783 admits the half-pay claim to be such a debt or engagement.

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

In order, if possible to render the public faith more secure, more sacred, the third section of the Constitution provides that—

"The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

The resolve of 1783, declares,

"That the faith of the United States hath been pledged to those officers whose services and sufferings have so just a title to the appropriation and rewards of their country."

But, notwithstanding these claims had been fully and ably discussed in the passage of the act of May 15, 1828, wherein the half-pay claims are fully recognized, and the act expressly declared, "that each of the surviving officers of the Army of the Revolution, in the continental line, who was entitled to half pay by the resolve of October 21, 1780, be authorized to receive, out of any money in the Treasury," &c., and takes no notice of, or makes any deduction for these commutation certificates. It does not attempt to describe such officers as were entitled to commutation. Yet Congress, since the pendency of these claims, have established a court for their investigation, and ordered one of the heirs of these same joint and several payees, to go before that court, and the United States were there by their attorney, and it was there contended that the commutation paid in specie was a compromise of the half-pay contract. We have the decision of this court, in confirmation of these claims. That is not all; the Thirty-Fourth Congress ratified that decision. That decision is a public law of the United States, made in pursuance of the Constitution under the authority of the United States, which that Constitution declares shall be the supreme law of the land. Congress cannot decline an investigation themselves, and refuse to adopt the legal and judicial exposition of these claims. The case referred to is that of Thomas H. Baird, as a son of Absalom Baird, who was a commissioned surgeon in the army of the Revolution, and in that capacity was entitled by law to half pay for life and other emoluments, says Chief Justice Gilchrist:

"The proceedings in relation to the claim for commutation do not appear to be very material in relation to the case in the present position. On the 23d March, 1783, a resolution was passed, providing that the officers and others entitled to half pay for life 'shall be entitled to receive at the end of the war their five years' full pay, in lieu of half pay for life, in money—that is, specie—or in securities on interest, as Congress shall find most convenient.' On the 28th of January, 1794, Dr. Baird applied for the benefit of this provision, but died in the year 1806—having, as is said in the report of the Committee of Claims of the 5th February, 1855, 'become wearied and disheartened with delay.' In the year 1818, his son, Thomas H. Baird, having become of age, petitioned Congress for relief; and on the 3d of March, 1855, the committee reported that 'Dr. Absalom Baird was entitled to the benefit of the act of the 17th of January, 1781, extending the grant of half pay for life to the officers of the hospital department and medical staff.' No action was had upon the resolution until the 22d of June, 1836, when an act was passed granting five years' full pay as commutation, under the resolution of 1783, but without interest."

"Now, this claim does not depend for its validity upon any admission contained in the act of 1836. But the Congress which passed that act must have considered that Dr. Baird had a legal claim of some kind, otherwise their conduct, in granting him five years' full pay, was wholly indefensible. It is, however, relied upon as a final settlement of the claim. Upon any principle known to the law, this position is wholly untenable. It is easy enough to declare, ex cathedra, that it was a final settlement. But it is extremely difficult to imagine, in the absence of all evidence, what reasons can be urged for holding that the payment of a sum of money is of itself a discharge of a debt for a larger amount. A plea of payment of a small sum in satisfaction of a larger is bad, even after verdict. (2 Parsons on Contracts, 130, and notes.) This principle is familiar to every lawyer. A debt may be paid by a fair and well-understood compromise, carried faithfully into effect. But here there was no compromise. If it were a case between individuals, no one would dream of applying such a term to it. The United States are either bound by principles of law applicable to them, or they are not so bound. If they are not bound, there is an end of the discussion, for then all reasoning is fruitless. If they are bound by the principles of law, it is impossible to regard the payment of five years' full pay, without interest, as a satisfaction of this claim. There is no evidence that either party so regarded it; and, unless we set at defiance every principle of law, we cannot hold that one party to a contract, without the consent of the other, can discharge his debt by the payment of a smaller sum than the amount due." * * * "The amount of Dr. Baird's half pay was $240 per annum, payable at the end of every year. He was entitled to this sum up to the 27th day of October, 1805, the day of his death, and interest on the payments as they became due, according to the express provisions of the resolutions of June 3, 1784."

The Court of Claims therefore reported a bill for the relief of Thomas H. Baird.

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Thomas H. Baird, administrator of the estate of Absalom Baird, a commissioned surgeon in the army of the Revolution, the sum of $10,074 84, with interest thereon from the 27th day of October, 1805, to the 1st day of June, 1855, deducting therefrom the sum of $2,400, paid under the act of June 23, 1836."

This bill, as presented by the Court of Claims, was reported, and passed both Houses by large majorities, without amendment. The act was duly approved, and the amount paid at the Treasury.

If the half pay was due the son of Dr. Baird, Congress was in duty bound at the very same session to have passed a general act in behalf of all the other joint and several payees of the same contract. These heirs waited patiently for this decision, and yet, even to this day, they are still waiting impatiently for some general provision for their relief. The present bill gives less than one third the amount allowed to Dr. Baird. The twenty-second section of the funding act of August 4, 1790, provides:

"That the proceeds of the sales which shall be made of lands in the western territory now belonging, or that may hereafter belong to the United States, shall be, and are hereby, appropriated towards sinking or discharging the debts for the payment whereof the United States now are, or by virtue of this act may be holden, and shall be applied solely to that use until the said debts shall be fully satisfied."

Many of these officers gave not only eight years' service to the war of the Revolution, but in addition to that, they gave over eight years of suffering and deprivation in acquiring and retaining the possession of our public domain.

The proceeds of the sales of less than five million acres will cover all the provisions of the present bill; the Government can take its own time for the disposition of that amount. Over one hundred and thirty-nine millions, up to June, 1857, had been sold for cash; over sixty million acres for military bounty land warrants; sixty-seven million for schools; and over ten million for internal improvements. Over fifty million acres have been granted by Congress for military service of three months and of fourteen days, of the value of more than sixty million dollars. But, strange as it may appear, even after the decision in the case of Baird, ratified by the last Congress, embracing many members of the present Congress, who voted and passed that act; yet the bill of the House, which only extends to the principal, without interest—in fact, giving only about one third as much for the same time as was allowed to the son of Dr. Baird—yet this bill has been reported, and on the files of this House, for more than two months; and when, too, it is not pretended that the commutation certificates which were sent to the officers were worth at the time they were sent over two and a half dollars to the hundred, are, by this bill, all to be deducted at their face; and, also, all which was paid them under the act of May 15, 1828. When we consider that all the money which has ever been paid to the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army, and to their widows and children, does not exceed thirty dollars to each person who served in the army of the Revolution during that long struggle; so long as the United States, contrary to the true spirit of our republican institutions, in violation of the rights of their citizens, shall continue to exclude them from the Federal courts of the Government, and compel them to come before Congress for the collection of their just debts, we shall be summoned here to hear, and are bound to investigate, their claims. The forum cannot change the legality of their claims; the business relations of this vast country with our Government, and the numerous contracts, express and implied, which exist between the parties, demand the patience, nay, more, all of the time which Congress can possibly bestow. They appear before Congress, not in the degrading form of suppliants, but as a portion of the sovereign people, with that Constitution in their hands which was ordained to establish justice, and which had its origin at the birth of those world-wide achievements accomplished by the sufferings, the sacrifices, the patriotism, and the blood of those men of matchless valor, that this bill seeks to relieve and to honor.

The report of Mr. Hemphill, of the committee of the House, of January 3, 1826, in which he says "that, by virtue of those resolves, a solemn contract between the Government and officers was made, that ought to be observed on the part of the Government with the most profound sanctity; that when the power of rescission resides exclusively in the bosom of one of the parties, it should be exceedingly cautious that justice should be done to the other; that the claims are founded on a contract which has not been fairly rescinded, and if it has, there cannot possibly be a doubt that the commutation contract has not been fulfilled;" recommended allowing the officers their half pay, deducting their commutation certificates, without any reference to what may have been recovered under the invalid act of 1818.

So the committee of the Senate, in 1838, reported:

"After an assiduous investigation, the committee conclude that no legislation subsequent to the 21st October, 1780, could, or by a fair construction did, contravene or in any manner impair the claim of the officers of the Army, or any class of such officers, to the half pay promised them by the act of October 21, 1780. The half pay for life contracted by the act of October, 1780, to be paid to the officers of the Army for certain services to be performed by them, instantly became a vested right, of which subsequent legislation nor nothing whatever could divest the officer, save a failure on his part to perform the prescribed service. And it would be a libel on the good sense and justice of the distinguished statesmen and patriots of that period, to imagine, even, that any legislation subsequent to the 21st of October, 1780, had for its object to impair the deliberate engagement made by that act to allow half pay for life to the officers of the Army."

In confirmation of the justice of these claims, it is refreshing to refer to the remarks of the late Secretary Woodbury:

"But they have averred, and it is again repeated, that these officers are seeking a right, and that is a right both on common-law and on chancery principles. But if on only one, whether it be a right on strict common-law principles, or on chancery principles, it is equally a right, and the claim is equally a legal claim. The forum in which it becomes a right does not alter its legality. Hence, if every gentleman would agree with him from Virginia, (Mr. Tyler,) that the statute of limitation should be scorned, and that the pretended payments made to these officers was mere wind, mere trash, I aver, that in any forum, before any court or jury in Christendom, this right, as between individuals, could now be unanswerably established. Let the issue be formed and the cause tried to-morrow, and no three or five judges, no twelve 'good men and true,' as jurors, could say that the wages of toil and blood, the solemn promises for sacrifices and sufferings, to secure the liberties of America, had ever been discharged by only 'wind and trash.'"

"Without dwelling a moment on considerations before urged in the argument, in favor of the legality of this claim, let me ask what has been the reply to the position of the committee that, on strict legal principles, the promise of half pay for life has ever been fulfilled? Has any one shown that the half pay, in the form of half pay, has ever been paid? No pretense for it. Has any one shown that the half pay has ever been technically released? No pretense for it." "How, then, has the promise of October, 1780, been fulfilled? In no way, except by the act of commutation. But it could not be fulfilled by that act, unless all things were transacted in conformity to the provisions of that act." "Every-body feels and knows, likewise, that the payment, to be in conformity to the act, was to have been money, or at least securities equivalent to money, when, in truth, it was neither; and even under the most favorable view, if the certificates were kept till the funding, fell short of what was due, from one fourth to one third. So the certificates, or the payment, should have been made in September, 1783; but were not, in fact, made until some time in 1784-5, when worth much less. But, break through the forms of measures, and every lawyer, every constitutional statesman, must admit that, on strict legal principles, there should not only have been a conformity to the commutation act, but, in the act itself, to make it binding, there should have been a regard to private vested rights."

In the early organization of the Government, the funding law was the only way in which over three hundred millions of indebtedness could at that time have been otherwise disposed of. But not so now; the sacred pledges and words of Washington are as applicable to us as to the old Confederacy:

"The path of our duty is plain before us; honesty will be found, on every experiment, to be the best and only true policy. Let us, then, as a nation, be just; let us fulfill the public contracts which Congress had undoubtedly a right to make, for the purpose of carrying on the war, with the same good faith we suppose ourselves bound to perform private engagements."

"In this state of absolute freedom and perfect security, who will grudge to yield a very little of his property to support the common interest of society, and to insure the protection of Government? Who does not remember the frequent declarations, at the commencement of the war, that we should be completely satisfied if, at the expense of one half, we could defend the remainder of our possessions?"

"Where is the man to be found who wishes to remain indebted for the defense of his own person and property to the exertions, the bravery, and the blood of others, without making the generous effort to pay the debt of honor and gratitude? In what part of the continent shall we find a man, or body of men, who would not blush to stand up and propose measures purposely calculated to rob the soldier of his stipend, and the public creditor of his due? And were it possible that such a flagrant instance of injustice could ever happen, would it not excite the general indignation, and tend to bring down upon the authors of such measures the aggravated vengeance of Heaven?"

"As to the idea which I am informed has in some instances prevailed, that half pay and commutation are to be regarded merely in the odious light of a pension, it ought to be exploded forever."

"That provision should be viewed as it really was, a reasonable compensation offered by Congress, at a time when they had nothing else to give to officers of the Army for services then to be performed."

"It was the only means to prevent a total dereliction of the service; it was a part of their hire."

"I may be allowed to say, it was the price of their blood and your independence."

It was more than a common debt; it is a debt of honor; it can never be considered as a pension or gratuity; nor canceled until it is fairly discharged.

These are not claims for a pension founded on a mere gratuity; but a legal debt, founded on a solemn contract duly recorded on the books of the Government, wherein there cannot by any possibility be any mistake as to the party, or the amount paid, and the sum now due.

The resolve of October 21, 1780, constituted a solemn contract with each officer for grants of land and half pay during life. The promise of land was blended with and made a part of the same entire consideration with the half-pay portion of the contract. The acknowledgment, presentation, or record, of the one, was the presentation, promise, and record, of the other. The suspension of the acts of limitation of one portion would equally affect the other. These were vested rights, and the contract could not be varied, rescinded, or impaired, by any subsequent acts of legislation, without the consent of each officer, individually.

How did the Government meet their obligation for the land portion of the contract? Why, their land was assigned to them in the wilds of the western territory, then claimed by and in possession of hostile Indian natives, to be conquered, and the possession of it maintained by continued hardships, fighting, sufferings and dangers, which, during all of the eight years' war for independence, was never before endured. Here the officers and soldiers, or many of them, sacrificed their lives in advancing the settlement of our great western territory, adding ten years more of service without pay for the benefit of our country.

This Government became the assignee and trustee of the public domain.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior, of 1857, shows that the public surveys have already been extended over more than three fourths of the whole surface of the public domain. That surface, as therein stated, is fourteen hundred and fifty million acres; of this there have been surveyed and prepared for market, public lands &c., four hundred and one million six hundred and four thousand nine hundred and eighty-eight acres, of which quantity fifty-seven million four hundred and forty-two thousand eight hundred and seventy acres have never been offered, and are consequently now liable to public sale; in addition to which there were upwards of eighty million acres subject to entry at private sale on the 30th of September last.

Of the public domain there have been disposed of by private claims, grants, sales, &c., embracing surveyed and unsurveyed land, three hundred and sixty-three million eight hundred and sixty-two thousand four hundred and sixty-four acres; which, deducted from the whole surface, leaves undisposed of an area of one thousand and eighty-six million, one hundred and thirty-seven thousand five hundred and thirty-six acres.

It is said the cash sales of the public lands up to June 30, 1847, were for one hundred and thirty-nine million thirty-two thousand eight hundred and fifty-five acres; grants for schools, &c., sixty-seven million seven hundred and thirty-six thousand five hundred and seventy-two; internal improvements, ten million eight hundred and ninety-seven thousand three hundred and thirteen; none of which has been appropriated for the payment of these debts, long due. Much of it has been appropriated for mere objects of gratuity. There have been issued five hundred and forty-seven thousand two hundred and fifty land warrants, which required sixty million seven hundred and four thousand nine hundred and forty-two acres to satisfy. And since these claims have been presented for the consideration of Congress, strange to say—founded, as they are, upon an express contract, a mortgage on this public domain, embraced in this bill, all the provisions of which cannot call for the proceeds of the sales of over five million acres of this land, which many of them gave a service of eight years to acquire, and ten years' service to maintain—as I before remarked, more than fifty million acres have been applied for services of three months to fourteen days, amounting to over sixty-two million dollars, where there was no contract, express or implied; and this liberal action of our Government towards those who were engaged in the military service I entirely and cordially approve.

How much of the $160,000,000 from the cash sales of these lands have been thus appropriated, it would not be an easy task to point out. There are, however, of this public domain, left undisposed of more than one thousand million acres. It would be a gross libel on the character and justice of the many very distinguished jurists, statesmen, and patriots, who have at different intervals since 1783, down to the present time, pronounced the commutation act of March 22, 1783, to have been founded on the great exigency of the Government, having for its object the delay of payment of just debts which could not have been met. Certificates of the Government could be funded, but the contract for half pay could not; this Government had long been preparing for that scheme of public finance, which was founded in necessity.

Now, this appears to me a plain case; I trust it so appears to others. Certainly, upon a thorough examination of the subject, all must realize that great injustice has been done to those who have achieved our independence as a nation, and that it is the duty of Congress to remove at once the foul blot which now rests upon our national honor.

I am moved to indignation at the ingratitude and the almost criminal neglect of the Government and the Representatives towards those who laid the foundation of all our greatness, our power, and our glory. Think not that the people will be content with delay—with the shuffling off from year to year these long-deferred and just claims. Let them know at once what they have to depend upon, and let it be in consonance with the voice of gratitude and justice. Be true to them, and they will be true to themselves and to you. They see us lavishly appropriating millions for purposes of doubtful expediency—if not, in part, to secure the advancement of party aims, to reward partisan favorites, and perpetuate in the rule of the Government measures of oppression and wrong—while we tardily, if at all, discharge their honest demands. The spirit of inquiry is awake. They are now watching with earnest interest all our acts. It will not do to leave this work undone, and say that other things are proper because they have been done; their voice, which is mighty in making and unmaking Presidents, cabinets, and Representatives, will be heard throughout the land, demanding the reason: wherefore millions for you, and not one cent for us?

ARREST OF WALKER—CENTRAL AMERICA.

SPEECH OF HON. W. WINSLOW,

OF NORTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

May 31, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. WINSLOW said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The interesting events which have recently occurred on the coast of Nicaragua and in the waters of the Caribbean sea, deemed by this House of sufficient importance to warrant a call upon the Executive for information, have justly excited much interest throughout the country, and therefore merit a thorough investigation.

Heretofore and ordinarily, the Executive and the other branch of the Legislature have drawn to themselves a monopoly of the foreign relations of the Government, and this House has rarely been called upon for consideration or in consultation, save when an occasional money grant was necessary to carry out some article of a treaty stipulation. This has resulted from the peculiar structure of our Government and the forms of the Constitution. The present case, however, is one that peculiarly addresses itself to the unbiased consideration of the Representatives of the people. It is our duty to look into it, and to pronounce upon it our judgment.

If it be true that the President has exceeded his powers, in his instructions to the officers charged with the command of your military marine, it is your right, nay, your imperative duty, so to pronounce.

If the commanders of your men of war have, running ahead of your instructions, committed acts not thereby warranted, whatever may have been the impelling motive, it is equally your duty to take order thereon.

If unlawful expeditions and predatory excursions have been begun, set on foot, and carried on, from our jurisdiction, against the dominion of a friendly Power, however small or great, however grand or insignificant, we owe it to that high sense of justice which should ever characterize the American people, to express our thorough disapprobation, and to take measures to arrest them.

Having upon all these matters very clear and distinct views and opinions, I purpose to occupy some part of the time of the committee in submitting and enforcing them.

In the early discussion of this subject, powers were attributed to the President which I do not concur in sustaining. I think the mistake happened in confounding the sovereign powers of the Government with the delegated powers of the Executive. When the thirteen colonies emerged from their dependence upon the British Crown, they assumed a place among the nations of the earth. They became, and were, entitled to all the privileges and authorities, and were subject to all the duties and restraints which obtain among the civilized communities of Christendom. In forming their Constitution and federated form of government, they reserved to the States and to the people all such powers as, by that Constitution and the laws made under it, they had not conferred upon Congress and the Executive. The President has no power, therefore, except such as the Constitution confers upon him, or the laws made in pursuance of it invest him with. He has no inherent powers. If he assume to do an act, he must show that the power to do it is there written. Without authority of law he cannot arrest a citizen for the violation of law; nor can he use the land or naval forces of the country except by special grant of power. Although he takes an oath to see the laws faithfully executed, he is only to enforce, under the requirements of the law, the judicial process of the courts, or to use those means which the laws empower him to use. Unless, then, by force of the acts which are generally termed the "neutrality laws," the President would have no right to stop a military expedition, begun, set on foot, or carried on, within our jurisdiction, by our citizens or foreigners, against the dominions of a neutral Power, unless authorized by treaty, even within our own limits, much less upon the high seas.

Do those acts confer upon him that power, and impose upon him that duty? I think the conclusion that they do is irresistible, upon the face of the acts themselves by fair legal construction and intentment, as illustrated and explained by the historical incidents and causes of their enactment. I should have supposed there could be no doubt of this conclusion, but that I have heard, from the lips of gentlemen for whose opinion I entertain high respect, opposite judgment. The first act on the statute-book is the act of 1794. Certain sections of this act are incorporated, almost in identical language, into the laws of 1818, hereafter to be adverted to. The act of 1794 was passed in a memorable era of our history, amid the early throes of that political earthquake which rended the ancient Governments of the Old World, overthrew dynasties, and deluged Europe in blood. The people of France had risen in the fearful mightiness of popular power and frenzy to crush the hoary tyranny which had so long oppressed them. It was natural that the generous impulses of our country should have been aroused in their behalf; that the tender sympathies of our countrymen should have been touched. We remembered the services of our ancient ally; we knew the generous stranger who left, in early youth, the blandishments of a luxurious court to shed his blood upon the plains of Brandywine for our political salvation; the carnage of besieged Savannah was fresh in our recollection; and the men were living who had hailed the garlands of victory, as they gracefully twined around the white lilies of France and the stars and stripes of the Union, upon the plains of immortal Yorktown. It would have been unnatural that we should not have felt for France, armed in a contest against all Europe; and though, by language, religion, and consanguinity, allied to the most powerful of her opponents, we could not forget that England had been to us an unkind step-mother, and France a confiding friend. Had we followed where sympathy and sentiment would lead, we had sided with France. But cold prudence is often to be invoked to master tender sympathy. The clear, calm, and imperturbable judgment of Washington, with his unerring wisdom, marked out the straight and narrow path of duty. His eagle eye kept watch and ward over the rising fortunes of the infant and feeble Republic. The prudence and sternness and fortitude with which he maintained a strict neutrality preserved the country his valor won.

At this time, the waters of the United States were thronged with the cruisers of both nations, and with the private armed vessels of France. Captures were constantly made within our jurisdiction; and armed expeditions were begun, set on foot, and carried on, from within our jurisdiction, against the dominion of neutral Powers. There was no authority, by any statute, to empower the President to use the Army, Navy, or militia, to arrest these expeditions. If any claim had been made to the possession, inherently, by the Executive, of such power, such claim was so disputed and resisted as to be weakened and diluted by the difference which existed in its moral influence.

But although captures, within our waters, of the ships of one neutral by the armed vessels of another, were illegal, and although it might be conceded that our own cruisers and police force might interfere to recapture, yet the courts of admiralty in the United States refused to take cognizance of such seizures. These circumstances caused the message of President Washington to Congress in 1793, which message led to the passage of the act of the succeeding year, identical in those sections bearing upon this controversy with the act of 1818. I repeat here a part of the message, which, for another purpose, I shall presently allude to:

"In like manner, as several of the courts have doubted, under particular circumstances, their powers to liberate the vessels of a nation at peace, and even of a citizen of the United States, although seized under a false color of being hostile property, and have denied their power to liberate certain captures, within the protection of our territory, it would seem proper to regulate their jurisdiction, in these points; but if the Executive is to be the resort in either of the two last mentioned cases, it is hoped that he will be authorized by law to have facts ascertained by the courts, when, for his own information, he shall request it."—President Washington's message, 3d December, 1793, Annals of Congress, 1793-1795, page 10.

It was, then, upon the recommendation of the President that Congress proceeded to enact the neutrality laws. These acts were much discussed, and, like all the great measures of legislation, passed by close votes. Parties were rapidly rising, and party bias warped the judgment. The section of the act with which we are now more immediately concerned, subsequently, upon sober second thought, received the sanction of all parties. It is as follows:

"SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That in every case in which a vessel shall be fitted out and armed, or attempted to be fitted out and armed, or in which the force of any vessel of war, cruiser, or other armed vessel, shall be increased or augmented, or in which any military expedition or enterprise shall be begun or set on foot, contrary to the provisions and prohibitions of this act; and in every case of the capture of a ship or vessel within the jurisdiction or protection of the United States, as before defined, and in every case in which any process issuing out of any court of the United States shall be disobeyed or resisted by any person or persons having the custody of any vessel of war, cruiser, or other armed vessel, of any foreign prince or State, or of any colony, district, or people, or of any subjects or citizens of any foreign prince or State, or of any colony, district, or people—in every such case it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such other person as he shall have empowered for that purpose, to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia thereof, for the purpose of taking possession of and detaining any such ship or vessel, with her prize or prizes, if any, in order to the execution of the prohibitions and penalties of this act, and to the restoring the prize or prizes in the cases in which restorations shall have been adjudged; and also for the purpose of preventing the carrying on of any such expedition or enterprise from the territories or jurisdiction of the United States against the territories or dominions of any foreign prince or State, or of any colony, district, or people, with whom the United States are at peace."

The act of 1794 was temporary in its duration, but was continued by the act of 1797, and in 1800 made perpetual, meeting with not much opposition at either of those periods of enactment.

Thus stood the law until the rise of the troubles in South America. The same state of things existed as had occurred in 1794. Spain was loud in her complaints of the military expedition begun, set on foot, and carried on from our jurisdiction against her power in her revolted colonies, and against the fitting out, arming, and equipping vessels of war in our ports for their service. No provision of law existed, in the acts of 1794-97, to forbid a citizen from arming and equipping within our limits, vessels designed to act against the Spanish American colonies, and selling them to foreigners for that purpose. So that a citizen, and a foreigner could conjointly do with impunity that which neither of them separately might do: nor was there authority to detain a vessel thus fitted out by compelling from the suspected persons surety against the infraction of the law. There was, in fact, no preventive process.

"It is found, [said President Madison in his message of 26th December, 1816,] that the existing laws have not the efficacy necessary to prevent violations of the obligations of the United States, as a nation at peace toward belligerent parties and other unlawful acts upon the high seas by armed vessels equipped within the waters of the United States."

The passage of the act of 1817 follows this executive recommendation, enlarging the powers conferred by the act of 1794. After the revolt of the slaves of St. Domingo had happened, and under the supposed authority of the act of 1794, the Eagle, a vessel fitting out in our waters, for the use of the insurgents, was seized by the officials of the Government. In a suit brought against the collector, and at this time finally decided, it was found that the acts of 1794 and 1817 did not cover the case, and heavy damages, ranging over one hundred thousand dollars, were awarded. This led to the act of 1818, a reenactment of the former laws, adding the words colony, district, or people, with some like verbal amendments.

These acts were opposed with warmth by the Speaker, Mr. Clay, then, as after, so distinguished. He felt, as our whole country did, the liveliest sympathy with the Spanish-American colonists in their struggle for independence. It is to be observed, however, that in the debates no opposition was made to the seventh and eighth sections, which were substantial copies of the sections of the acts of 1794.

Indeed, Mr. Clay, in effect, expressed himself satisfied with these. Speaking of the act of 1794, and of the causes which led to its passage, to wit: the desire of President Washington to maintain our neutrality, he says:

"If that law did not reach the case, which he understood to be doubtful, from some judicial decisions, he was willing to legislate so far as to make it comprehend it. Further than that he would not go."

It will be thus seen that he approved the act of 1794, and expressed his willingness to enlarge it; and, indeed, there was no serious objection to its reenactment, the opposition having been directed toward the new sections ingrafted upon it. Indeed, the House never divided upon those sections.

In this connection, I am free to say that the inclination of my opinion is, that some modification of the neutrality laws would be proper; not, however, in this eighth section; and that I believe them to be more stringent than those of any other people; and I think the President, for obvious reasons, ought to have the power to suspend them, in proper cases. I am willing, when the measures prepared by my honorable friend from Mississippi [Mr. QUITMAN] come up for discussion, to go into a careful examination of the subject.

Such being the history of these enactments we are lead to inquire if, under them, as connected with the present matter of investigation, the President has the power to use the naval forces of the country to arrest an armed expedition, begun and set on foot within our jurisdiction, and from thence carried on against the dominions of a neutral upon the high seas. That Congress has the power to pass a law for that purpose will, I think, be conceded; for Congress has the power to define, and punish offenses against the law of nations; and it is the duty of a nation at peace, towards belligerent Powers, and a fortiori towards a neutral, to prevent armed expeditions leaving her territory to make war against them, whether for power, or plunder, or in fulfillment of some supposed "high mission" or led by some "manifest destiny."

Has Congress done so? I think such is the true construction of the act. Those who think differently, argue that the seventh section of the act defines our jurisdiction, and limits it to the marine league, or three miles from the shore; and that in the construction of the eighth section, the words "from the territories, or jurisdiction of the United States," in the last paragraph, are to be explained by the words "within the jurisdiction of the United States, as above defined," to wit: defined in the seventh section. But, sir, the seventh section of the act was inserted for the purpose of conferring on the district courts of the United States, sitting as courts of admiralty, the jurisdiction over seizures and captures of vessels violating the provisions of this statute. If a neutral cruiser had, within the waters of the Chesapeake, captured the vessel of a another neutral, and the cruisers of the United States had interfered, the question would not have been one of prize or no prize, as I take it, and it became therefore necessary to enlarge the jurisdiction of the district court to cover such a case as well as to enforce the penalties denounced in the statute, at the suit of any informer; thus increasing and enlarging

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Arrest of Walker—Central America—Mr. Winslow.

Ho. OF REPS.

the jurisdiction, both as to persons and subjects. The jurisdiction as to cognate subjects had been theretofore limited to the marine league, and there was no necessity to alter it. This is obvious from the message of President Washington, to which I have already alluded.

If the eighth section be critically examined, it will be found that it gives the President the power to use the land and naval forces and the militia, in four cases:

1st. In detaining and taking possession of the ships of one neutral capturing the vessel of another neutral within the marine league.

2d. In suppressing any military expedition begun and set on foot contrary to the provisions of the act.

3d. When the process of the courts was disobeyed or resisted.

4th. To prevent the carrying on of any such expedition from the territories of the United States against the territories of any people at peace with us.

If the object of the latter grant was not to empower him to pursue and arrest such expedition on the high seas, but merely to authorize its arrest within our waters, it was supererogatory and unnecessary, for that latter power had just been granted.

Consider, sir, the whole scope and intention of the law. It was to preserve our relations of neutrality with foreign nations at peace with us; it was to prevent armed expeditions from being fitted out to attack the dominions of such foreign nation. That was the evil to be guarded against—the attack upon them, not the fitting out of such expeditions, much less the fitting out within our waters. The preparation of such expedition was harmless, nay, to us and to our commerce, beneficial, so long as no action against others occurred. If the suppression of the attack was the object, it were vain to confine the powers of the President to the marine league. If a storm were to blow off the expedition, begun and set on foot, beyond the marine league, then, according to the argument, his powers would cease; if, again, stress of weather forced them a foot within, the power would revive. Sir, with a coast like ours, of such prodigious extent, with the number of our inlets, estuaries, bays, and rivers, with the aid of steam-power, not Great Britain herself, with her thousand fleets that sweep the ocean, could effectually prevent the escape of an armed expedition without that limited jurisdiction.

The President of the United States was then justified in using the naval forces of the country to prevent the "carrying on" of the expedition of General Walker from the port of Mobile against the territories of Nicaragua. There could be no pretense that it was other than a military expedition, having in view the conquest of that country and the subjugation of its people. Whatever may be said of the antecedents of that gentleman, which, perhaps, might not bear scrutiny nor examination, the expedition left with hostile intent against the de facto Government of the country, with which only we undertake to deal. The interference of the President was legal, as I have shown, because done under warrant and authority of law; and, in my judgment, was eminently wise, demanded by duty, and invoked by patriotism and high, statesmanlike views and considerations.

It remains to be seen whether the flag officer in command of your squadron exceeded his orders, and if he were justified in landing upon the soil of Nicaragua, and forcibly expelling Mr. Walker and his followers. I do not think he was. All the orders forwarded to Commodore Paulding are comprised in the circular of Mr. Secretary Cass, and in the letter of Mr. Toucey, Secretary of the Navy, to Lieutenant Almy, of the Fulton, under date of October 12, 1857, which I shall take the liberty of reading:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, September 18, 1857.

Sir: From information received at this Department, there is reason to believe that lawless persons are now engaged within the limits of the United States in setting on foot and preparing the means for military expeditions to be carried on against the territories of Mexico, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, Republics with whom the United States are at peace, in direct violation of the sixth section of the act of Congress approved 20th April, 1818. And under the eighth section of the said act it is made lawful for the President, or such person as he shall empower, to employ the land and naval forces of the United States, and the militia thereof, "for the purpose of preventing the carrying on of any such expedition or enterprise from the territories or jurisdiction of the United States." I am, therefore, directed by the President to call your attention to the subject, and to urge you to use all due diligence to avail yourself of all legitimate means at your command to enforce these and all other provisions of the said act of 20th April, 1818, against those who may be found to be engaged in setting on foot or preparing military expeditions against the territories of Mexico, Costa Rica, and Nicaragua, so manifestly prejudicial to the national character, and so injurious to the national interest. And you are also hereby instructed promptly to communicate to this Department the earliest information you may receive relative to such expeditions.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

L. CASS.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 12, 1857.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 7th instant, it is true that American citizens have a right to travel and to go where they please, when engaged in lawful pursuit, but not to violate the laws of their own or of any other country. They have a right to expatriate and to become citizens of any country which is willing to receive them, but not to make that right a mere cloak and cover for a warlike expedition against it or its Government. Your instructions do not authorize you to act arbitrarily, or upon mere suspicion. You will not seize an American vessel, or bring her into port, or use the force under your command to prevent her landing her passengers, upon mere suspicion. You will be careful not to interfere with lawful commerce. But where you find that an American vessel is manifestly engaged in carrying on an expedition or enterprise from the territories or jurisdiction of the United States against the territories of Mexico, Nicaragua, or Costa Rica, contrary to the sixth section of the act of Congress of April 30, 1818, already referred to, you will use the force under your command to prevent it, and will not permit the men or arms engaged in it, or destined for it, to be landed in any part of Mexico or Central America.

En route for Chiriqui, you will touch at Mobile and New Orleans, and communicate with the United States district attorney at each of those ports.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

ISAAC TOUCEY.

Lieutenant JOHN J. ALMY,
Commanding U. S. steamer Fulton, Washington, D. C.

Whether the Secretary was justified in giving orders not to "permit the men or arms engaged in the expedition, or destined for it, to be landed in any part of Mexico or Central America," if those orders are to be construed as meaning to authorize the use of force within the marine league, it is unnecessary, for the purpose I have in view, to inquire. It is not probable that such could be the legitimate construction of the order, since the clause quoted is to be taken together with the preceding paragraph. What was the service upon which Lieutenant Almy, of the Fulton, was sent? The Secretary states it was to prevent the "carrying on an expedition or enterprise from the territories or jurisdiction of the United States against the territories of Mexico, Nicaragua, or Costa Rica, contrary to the sixth section of the act of Congress of April 20, 1818." And he directs him to use the force under his command to prevent it.

I believe it is the settled opinion of the writers on international law that the authority and jurisdiction of a nation over the seas which wash its shore, extend to a marine league. The rule of law is, "terre domini finitur ubi finitur vis armorum," and since the introduction of fire arms, that distance has usually been recognized to be about three miles from the shore. (Per Sir William Scott: The Anna 5, Rob. 385.) The armed vessels of one Power have no right to interfere with hostile intent in the ports of a neutral, or within the marine league, without the consent of the neutral; and such interference would be an invasion of the authority of the neutral, and "casus belli."

It is true, some opposite opinions have been expressed against a stringent construction of this rule. Some latitude has been sought to be extended under peculiar circumstances, as in the case of a vessel having the right of capture pursuing vessels subject to capture from mid-seas, and following, "dum fervet opus," while the blood was up, the chase within the sanctuary of the marine league.

The doctrine is thus laid down by Bynkershoek:

"Un vero territorium communis amici valet ad prohibendum via quæ ibi inchoatur: non valet ad inhibendum quæ, extra territorium inchoatur, dum fervet opus, in ipso territorio continuatur."

The distinction taken by this writer being upon force lawfully begun in mid-seas, and continued within the league, dum fervet opus, and of force originally begun within the jurisdiction.

This opinion, however, was contested by Sir William Scott in the case of the Anna, and he adds that it has not been adopted by other writers. He relaxes the rule only in cases where a cruiser having the right of search has summoned a vessel to submit to examination and search; there the escape of the summoned vessel, on the uninhabited coast of a neutral, within the marine league, will not prevent the cruiser's right to take possession.

However all this may be, there can be no question but that the act of Commodore Paulding in landing on the coast of Nicaragua was a clear invasion of the sovereignty of that people, an act not warranted by his orders, and, in the language of the President, "a grave error." Indeed, Commodore Paulding admits thus much, in terms, since, in his letter to the Department, under date of December 11, 1857:

"In the course I have pursued, I have acted from my judgment; and I trust it may meet the approbation of the President."

And in the letter of the 15th of December, he says, speaking of this proceeding:

"In doing so, I am sensible of the responsibility that I have incurred, and confidently look to the Government for my justification."

I do not impeach the motives of Commodore Paulding. That distinguished officer, no doubt, acted from the most patriotic motives, and with patriotic purposes. But we are not dealing with his motives. That he should have erred in judgment, as to the extent of his powers, is, perhaps, not to be wondered at; since here, in this body, composed of experienced statesmen, and of gentlemen of distinguished legal ability, we find diverse opinions upon the whole question. If his error be a grave one, we must beware how we suffer our judgment of, and our strictures upon it, to be warped by tenderness for his motives, or be extenuated by results. No nation has a right to land an expedition, for any purpose, upon the shores of a friendly neutral Power, without its consent. Such landing would be cause of war. To sanction a violation of such right, in any military man, would be to transfer the war-making power from the Halls of Congress to the quarter decks of your armed vessels. The fact that Nicaragua has not complained, but, in truth, has assented, does not vary the question in the slightest degree; for those who urge such assent in defense of Commodore Paulding, admit, by the argument, that whether the act of Paulding was an invasion of the sovereignty of Nicaragua and cause of war, depended upon the subsequent action of Nicaragua. If she acquiesced, then her ratification of the act was equivalent to a precedent permission, and justified what was done.

But how, if such acquiescence and ratification were withheld? The act, by the argument, would be cause of war, as having been done against the will of Nicaragua. The act of Commodore Paulding would then be cause of war, or not, according as Nicaragua would determine. To allow our judgment of the acts of our naval officers to be dependent on the will of a foreign nation, would be a precedent fraught with extreme danger and productive of great evil. It has not been heretofore so considered. Commodore Porter was brought to trial and punished by temporary dismissal from the service for a violation of the sovereignty of Spain, in forcibly landing at Foxardo. He was in charge of the squadron engaged in suppressing piracy in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico. He did there gallant service. In the course of his cruise an officer of one of the vessels under his command was forcibly arrested and maltreated by the authorities of Foxardo. There were strong reasons to suspect a complicity between those authorities and the pirates. The act of the people of Foxardo was an insult to our flag and an invasion of our rights, and a legitimate subject, at our hands, for a demand upon Spain for ample redress. Commodore Porter, however, with the best and purest motives, took into his own hands the mode and measure of redress. The judgment pronounced upon him by his peers was correct and proper, however harsh may have been the sentence. Yet his case presented features far more extenuating than the acts of Commodore Paulding, now under consideration. Military men owe obedience. The only safe rule is to rebuke sternly their assumption of power, while we generously reward them for their acts of duty.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Admission of New States—Mr. Goode.

HO. OF REFS.

Although I condemn these illegal expeditions, as calculated to degrade the American character, and to alienate the affections of the weak Powers of this continent who ought naturally to look to us for countenance and protection; and while I object to adding to the Monroe doctrine, that we will not suffer the interference of the European Powers upon this continent, the additional proposition, that we reserve to ourselves the exclusive right to prey at pleasure upon the fortunes of our neighbors, I cannot sanction, with my voice, the illegal conduct of our officers that good may come, or extenuate their departure from the line of duty because the result is favorable. I much prefer to attain the right end in the right way.

I am not prepared, however, to animadvert with harshness on Commodore Paulding, and am satisfied with the rebuke of the President.

While on this subject, sir, I may be permitted to add, that we owe it to ourselves to suppress these expeditions. If the acquisition of Nicaragua is necessary for our safety and happiness, let us acquire it in a manly and open warfare; do not let us "set the dogs" upon her. I am far from thinking nations ought to be governed by the strict rules which obtain among the people of a municipality. No people have a right to resist the progress of the whole race, nor to impede the course of civilization. We have a mission to perform. In its performance it is, perhaps, it certainly will be, our interest to command one or more transits across the isthmus. I shall be found ready to support such acquisition, when the occasion demands it, in every honorable mode. I protest against buccaneering enterprises. If it become necessary to use force to acquire those transits, let us send thither the force under the standard of the Republic, and not under the flag of the freebooter.

The northern part of the American continent is destined, sooner or later, to come under our jurisdiction. I am not one of those who think this Union is endangered by extension. I think, on the contrary, it is thus strengthened. I feel a just pride in the contemplation of the future power and grandeur of the Republic, in contrasting its small beginnings with its present greatness. What American heart does not beat with pride at its advancement? But a few years, not a century ago, it comprised thirteen feeble colonies, now, thirty-two stars twinkle in the Federal constellation; while afar off, in the nebulous matter, the unaided vision may detect the glitter of incipient others amid the star-dust which, on every side, surrounds them.

I hail the glorious destiny which opens for my country; not that I would invoke for her the mission which the Roman poet pronounced for Rome:

"*Ille tibi erunt artes, * * * *  Parcere subjectis, et debellare superbis;"

not that I would have her to be the mistress of the world, but the good guide and just directress of nations.

ADMISSION OF NEW STATES.

SPEECH OF HON. W. O. GOODE,
OF VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 9, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. GOODE said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Oregon is before us, demanding to be recognized as an independent State, invested with supreme sovereign authority, and to be admitted into the Confederacy of American Republics.

The admission of a new State into the Confederacy, is the exercise of a high attribute of Government, but our authority is undoubted, since it rests on an express provision of the Constitution.

The creation of a Commonwealth, its initiation among the Republics of America, is an event to strike on the imagination, but the frequency of the occurrence has deprived it of interest. It has ceased even to produce a sensation.

It seems to have been adopted as the settled policy of Government to encourage new political organizations, to stimulate their growth, and admit them into the Union, as soon as circumstances will excuse it. It may be questioned whether the wisdom of this policy has been examined by the statesmen of the present day and generation. The expansion of our populated area, and consequent diffusion of our population, is calculated to impair the aggregate energy of society for the purposes of war and all the great objects of Government. The superior efficiency of concentrated effort, as compared with individualized exertion, seems to be admitted by sages, statesmen, and philosophers. It is the principle which rests at the foundation of the socialists' system, and has failed in their hands from the want of that unity of will and persistency of purpose which are essential to energy and success. It is self-evident, that the diffusion of population is unfriendly to concentration of force.

The great defect in American agriculture is the scarcity of labor. This evil is increased by the expansion of Territory, and bringing new western lands into cultivation.

The establishment of territorial communities, and the application of the complicated machinery of Government to distant and numerous localities, occasions an indefinite and alarming increase of expenditures.

The price of lands in the old States is injuriously affected by the hot-bed policy of creating new States. The emigrants from the East, seeking new lands in the West, would create a demand for lands in the East, and thus add to their market value. But this demand is lost by emigration; and, in addition to this evil, many emigrants force their own eastern lands into market, thus adding to the supply, whilst they have already lessened the demand, and thus greatly reduce the market value of eastern lands. When the lands of the emigrant are sold in the East, the purchasers are toiling through years sending money to the West to pay their debts. If this money could be retained in the East, a part of it would be invested in eastern lands, and thus add to the market value. But, being diverted from its natural channel, and sent off to the West, this advantage is entirely lost. Colonizing new Territories and States creates a spirit of speculation; and eastern capitalists, instead of investing their money in eastern lands, embark in western speculation, thus lessening the demand and reducing the price of our lands; whilst the withdrawal of capital from the natural channel occasions hard times and high interest for money.

Such are the effects of the colonizing policy, on the physical condition, the agricultural and commercial prosperity of the old States. Its political results are analogous. To one unfamiliar with the secret springs to political movements at the seat of Government, it would appear mysterious and incomprehensible, that Representatives from the old States on the Atlantic, should manifest such eagerness to establish new States in the West. It is undoubtedly true that political machinations exert an influence on the subject. It is by no means certain that presidential aspirations are wholly inert and inefficient; whilst it is impossible wholly to exclude the idea that the spirit of speculation occasionally obtrudes into the mind of Congress, inclining members to favor a policy affording a wide field for speculative operations. These and other causes have conspired to give a powerful impulse to the policy of stimulating new political organizations to be hurried into the family of American Republics—a policy which invests a comparatively few pioneer settlers in the West with a political power, exerting a controlling influence on the policy of Government, disastrous in its effect on the material condition, the agricultural and commercial prosperity of the old States.

As an illustration of the effect of this policy, let us contemplate the probable results of the legislation of the present Congress. Minnesota is admitted with a population of about one hundred and fifty thousand souls, wielding a power in the Senate equal to the imperial greatness of New York with a population approaching four millions! Oregon, with a population of fifty thousand, will be admitted, to wield a power in the Senate equal to the great State of Pennsylvania, the keystone of the beautiful arch of the Confederacy, with a population, perhaps, of two millions and a half.

Bleeding Kansas, to weigh down the "unterrified Old Dominion!" Let it be remembered that the Senate shares the whole legislative power with the House of Representatives, and a large portion of executive authority with the President of the United States; thus commanding the action of Government!

Sir, nothing less than a powerful motive could reconcile the northern Atlantic States to the policy of stimulating the admission of new States; and that motive is to be found in their hatred of the institutions of the South. The new States are expected to be free States, sympathizing with the Abolitionists in their rancorous detestation of the South; and the fanatical impatience to establish in the Senate a decided preponderance of Free-Soil influence, reconciles the North to the great sacrifice to which they are subjected by the operation of this destructive policy. That preponderance is already established—fearfully, fatally established. At the opening of the present session of Congress the Senators from the free States were thirty-two; those from the South only thirty, giving to the North a majority of two. The members of the House of Representatives from the North, numbered one hundred and forty-four; those from the South only ninety, giving to the North a majority of fifty-four.

At the last presidential election the members of the electoral college of the North, numbered one hundred and seventy-six; those from the South, one hundred and twenty, giving to the North a majority of fifty-six. The whole strength of the Democratic principle, with the vast energy of the Democratic organization, were barely able to save the South from the effects of an election purely and completely sectional.

At the opening of the next Congress, Senators from the North will probably number thirty-eight, those from the South but thirty, giving to the North a majority of eight; whilst in the House of Representatives the members from the North will probably range one hundred and forty-eight, those from the South only ninety, giving to the North a majority of fifty-eight. At the next presidential election, the electoral college from the North will probably number one hundred and eighty-six; those from the South, one hundred and twenty, giving to the North a majority of sixty-six. After the taking of the next census this condition of things will be incalculably aggravated. Thus it is shown that the ascendancy of the North is completely established in all the elective departments of the Government; and the constitutional rights and equality of the South are held at the mercy of the North. The rights of the South are absolutely dependent on the justice and clemency of those who hold our institutions in detestation, who have already indulged in threats, and who have been unable to repress the mutterings of rage and of revenge.

It has been beautifully and poetically said by Byron that "none are all evil." It may be that objectionable principles, when pushed to their extent, produce favorable results. We of the South may derive some advantage from the policy of stimulating and admitting new States. True, they will probably side with the North on the vital question of slavery; but they will find their interest in the principle of free trade, and may be induced to lend assistance to the South, in reducing the duties on imports, in repealing drawbacks and bounties, and modifying the navigation laws so as to deprive the North of the unjust, oppressive, and ruinous monopoly of the carrying trade. Southern energy will be directed to the accomplishment of this important object.

These suggestions are merely offered—not elaborated. They are designed only to give direction to the current of thought, and especially to the Representatives from the South. In a speech elaborately prepared, and delivered some years since, it was said by Mr. CLINGMAN, that, under the operation of the navigation laws, freight from New Orleans to New York was equal to freight from New York to Canton! I do not discuss this topic now. I hope hereafter to be able to bestow on it greater attention. For the present, I pass on the great highway of thought to the examination of topics which have already engaged attention.

Sir, I have a duty to perform, a solemn duty; a duty to the South, to Virginia—to John Randolph of Roanoke. Some days since, my honorable colleague [Mr. GARNETT] made allusion to the deed of cession by which Virginia conveyed the Northwestern Territory to the United States, and especially to the clause which stipulates that not more than five States shall be formed of the Territory, and he charged, as a breach of the pact, that a large extent of territory was left without the boundaries of the five northwestern States. A member from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] repelled the charge, and represented that part of the Virginia grant as a mere strip of country attached to Minnesota, a magnificent State with ninety thousand square miles of territory, one third greater than the State of Virginia! and with this statement the member seemed to feel his vindication complete. Now, sir, this strip of country, of which he speaks with so much levity, is a tract of twenty-two thousand square miles, being nearly equal to one half the superficial extent of the great State of Pennsylvania or New York, and about equal to all that part of Virginia which lies between the Blue Ridge and the Atlantic, full three times as large as the whole State of Massachusetts! larger than the combined area of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut!

It may be proper to remark that, in superficial extent, this strip of country is more than equal to one third part of the State of Georgia. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] treated the suggestion of my colleague as a reason urged for the rejection of the bill. But that view was waived, and it was adduced as a violation of the terms of the deed of cession. Considered as an objection to the bill, the gentleman from Georgia insists that it was taken too late; that it should have been stated on the passage of the enabling act. But if Congress, in the enabling act, by its own act, set forth a boundary involving a breach of trust, is it competent to Congress to excuse the consummation of that breach of trust in the act for admission, by pleading that the breach was initiated in the enabling act? That is a question which I refer to the enquirers. In any event, my colleague was not concluded to make the objection, because he voted against the enabling act, as I did. But waiving this objection to the admission of Minnesota, I voted for the bill, while I hold that as an unjust and oppressive violation of the terms of the cession, the suggestion of my colleague remains without answer. As such it was brought forward, and as such it was considered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow.] Warning with his subject, and assuming a lofty bearing, this gentleman announced that the charge of breach of faith came with an ill-grace from my colleague, because, he says:

"Your fathers and our fathers made a compact in 1820, by which the Louisiana purchase, west of the then limits of Missouri, and of north 36° 30', was dedicated to freedom; but afterwards you took the Platte counties, now the seven western counties of Missouri, the richest and noblest portion of that State, from under the operation of that ordinance, and dedicated it to slavery. Your fathers did that, and you have justified the act."

I do "justify the act;" I have justified much more than that; and stand ready to vindicate the deed. But, sir, my object is to deny, to surcharge, and falsify the allegation that "your fathers and our fathers made a compact in 1820 by which the Louisiana purchase west of Missouri, and north of 36° 30', was dedicated forever" to what you call freedom. I deny that such a compact was ever made between the North and South; and if there were, then I deny that Virginia was any party to such compact. In other words, I deny that there ever was plighted faith on the part of the South, and especially of Virginia, to invest the act of Congress usually described as the Missouri compromise, with any peculiar degree of sanctity. The charge has been often made. Members of Congress from the North have felt themselves called upon to indulge in strains of bitter denunciation of the perfidious breach of faith involved in the action of southern members in repealing the Missouri compromise. The charge is gratuitous, and unsupported by the truth of history.

Sir, I am at a loss to conceive on what evidence the declaration has been hazarded that the Missouri compromise, as it is termed in common parlance, was invested with the dignity of a compact, or varied in any manner from an ordinary act of Congress. This cannot be inferred from the fact that several southern members voted for the measure; because such a rule would invest every law with the dignity and sanctity of an unalterable compact. But, even upon such a rule, it is shown by the record that the Missouri compromise was rejected by Virginia, and repudiated by her Representatives in Congress. It has been conceded, because it could not be denied, that the measure was proposed by a northern Senator. In the session of 1819-20, "A bill for the admission of the State of Maine" had passed the House of Representatives; and, in the Senate, a committee had reported, as an amendment to that bill, a clause for the admission of Missouri on the same terms; that is, without restriction on the subject of slavery. Various propositions were made to amend that amendment, by adding a section to exclude the institution of slavery from the State of Missouri; but all these were successfully resisted by the united South. Defeated in the object of excluding slavery from the State of Missouri, the North, in the person of Mr. Thomas, of Illinois, brought forward the clause to exclude it from the Territories north of 36° 30' north latitude, and not comprehended within the limits of the State. The vote was taken on that proposition on the 17th February, 1820. It was supported by every northern Senator, except the two from Indiana, and carried in the affirmative. The vote was taken by yeas and nays. Both the Senators from Virginia recorded their votes in the negative and against the Missouri compromise, as did also Nathaniel Macon, of North Carolina, and Judge Smith, of South Carolina, both of whom have been claimed as supporters of the compromise. (See Senate Journal, 1819-20, page 166.)

I am aware it has been stated on authority—high indeed with many minds—that the yeas and nays were not taken on the motion "to insert the section constituting the compromise." (See "Benton's Thirty Years View," page 8.) But I exhibit the record. The vote then recurred on the question, "Shall the amendments to the bill be engrossed, and read a third time?" and on this Virginia, and the South generally, did vote in the affirmative. But that was not a clear vote on the single principle of the Missouri compromise. The amendments ordered to be engrossed were the sections providing for the admission of Missouri as an amendment to the Maine bill, and Virginia voted with the South, that if Maine were admitted, Missouri should be admitted also, without the clause excluding slavery, even though Congress usurped the power to exclude it from all territory north of 36° 30' not comprehended within the limits of the State; and the bill passed the Senate in that form, without division. A very different fate awaited it in the House of Representatives, where the amendments were rejected by a very general vote—the North being against them because they admitted slavery in the State of Missouri, whilst the South opposed them because they excluded slavery from the Territory.

The House having thus rejected the amendments, the bill was sent back to the Senate, where a member from Rhode Island (Mr. Burrill) moved to recede from the Senate amendments, and Mr. Macon called for a division of the question, so as to take one vote on admitting Missouri without restriction, and another vote on the section excluding slavery from the Territories. Mr. Smith and Mr. Macon, with both the Virginia Senators, and a majority of the Senate, including all the Senators from the South, voted against receding; namely, they voted to insist on her admission; and so the clause was retained. The question was then taken on receding from the amendment which prohibited slavery north of 36° 30' in the Territories, when Mr. Smith and Mr. Macon, with both the Virginia Senators, voted to recede, which was equivalent to a vote to strike out the section; that is, to reject the Missouri compromise. (See Senate Journal, page 189.) Yet it has been asserted that Nathaniel Macon and Judge Smith and James Barbour and James Pleasants had recorded their plighted faith in favor of this compromise, to be observed as a sacred compact between the North and South! The Senate then insisted on its several amendments; and no other vote was taken in that body at all involving the principle of the compromise, until after the report of the committee of conference. Heaven save the country from all future committees of conference! It recommended that the Senate recede from all their amendments to the bill for the admission of Maine, and that the bill of the House of Representatives to enable the people of Missouri to form a State government, &c., should be so amended as to strike out the clause prohibiting slavery within the State to be formed, and to insert a new section prohibiting slavery in all that territory ceded by France to the United States, under the name of Louisiana, which lies north of 36° 30' north latitude, not included within the limits of the State of Missouri.

The country is familiar with the report of that committee. On the question to strike out the clause prohibiting slavery in Missouri, Virginia, and the whole South, with a large majority of the Senate, voted in the affirmative, thus admitting slavery into Missouri. The question to insert the compromise clause was carried without a division. But that does not justify the inference that the Virginia Senators assented to the principle of the Missouri compromise. They had already voted against its insertion in the first instance. They had voted to strike it out, when an opportunity was presented. They had sufficiently evinced their opposition to the principle, and as a small and helpless minority, it was unnecessary to consume the time of the Senate with an unavailing vote by yeas and nays.

It has been alleged in the "Thirty Year's View," (page 8,) that—

"The unanimity of the slave States in the Senate, where the measure originated, is shown by its Journal, not on the motion to insert the section constituting the compromise (for on that motion the yeas and nays were not taken) but on the motion to strike it out, when they were taken, and showed thirty votes for the compromise and fifteen against it—every one of the latter from non-slaveholding States—the former comprehending every slave State vote present, and a few from the North."

The author then furnishes a list of the Senators who are claimed to have voted for the compromise, and among them are Governor Barbour and Governor Pleasants of Virginia, Judge William Smith of South Carolina, and Nathaniel Macon of North Carolina, and, indeed, all the Senators from the South, with several distinguished names from the northern States, and declares that "this array of names shows the Missouri compromise to have been a southern measure."

I have to say that after diligent search, I have not been able to discover the record of such a vote. I do find that after the adoption of the clause excluding slavery from the Territories, north of 36° 30', Mr. Trimble, of Ohio, did move to strike out that clause and insert another, extending the operation of the principle of the compromise so as to apply it to all territory north of 36° 30' and all south of that line not embraced within the boundaries of the State of Louisiana and the Territory of Arkansas east 94° of longitude—agreeably to Melish's map. On this question, James Barbour, James Pleasants, Nathaniel Macon, William Smith, and every southern Senator, did vote in the negative; but that was a vote refusing to extend the principle of the compromise; a vote refusing to give it application to territory south of 36° 30'; and cannot be tortured into an approval of the compromise. Yet that was the only vote on the subject, in the Senate, of which I can find a record, taken after the carrying into effect the recommendation of the committee of conference. (Senate Journal 1819-20, page 202.)

Sir, I deny that there is evidence on record—I deny that there is evidence in being to establish the proposition that the Senators from Virginia, or Nathaniel Macon, or William Smith, of South Carolina, ever gave the sanction of their names to the principles of the Missouri compromise, to be observed as a compact between the North and South—binding in plighted faith—sacred and immutable.

Passing from the Senate to the House of Representatives, we shall find the South resolutely and persistently resisting the principle of excluding slavery, as well from the State as from the Territory, from the day of its introduction in the bill of February, 1819, down to the final voting on the Maine bill on the 28th of February, 1820, when the amendment of the Senate having for its object the admission of Missouri with slavery, and the amendment having for its object the exclusion of slavery from the Territories, were expressly disagreed to and rejected by the House.

In the House of Representatives, February 28, 1820, the amendment for the admission of Missouri with slavery, was supported by every member from the South except one. It was opposed by every member from the North except five. Seventy-six members voted to admit the State with slavery, seventy-one coming from the South. Ninety-seven members voted against admitting the State with slavery, ninety-six coming from the North.

The amendment to exclude slavery from the territory north of 36° 30' was resisted by every member from the South, except five. Sixty-seven members from the South recorded their votes against that principle, and but five in its favor. (See House Journal 1820, pages 255, 256, 257.) Thus it is shown, that the South was united against the principles of the compromise down to the close of the voting on the 28th February, 1820; and I feel that I should do injustice to my native State—my own beloved Virginia—if I should fail to direct attention to the fact that on that day she cast twenty-two votes to admit Missouri with slavery, and twenty-two votes against excluding slavery from the Territories—one member from Virginia only voting against the body of his colleagues!

It was, then, on the 28th February, 1820, that a northern Senator moved, in the Senate, for a conference. Ominous and boding proposition! Sir, I always experience a sensation of uneasiness at the slightest allusion to that cunning device—that powerful, that dangerous and mischievous agency, known as a committee of conference. The resolution for a conference was adopted; and Mr. Thomas, of Illinois, (author of the compromise,) Mr. Pinckney, of Maryland, who had supported the compromise, and Mr. Barbour, of Virginia, were appointed managers on the part of the Senate. The House of Representatives concurred, and Mr. Holmes, of Massachusetts, Mr. Taylor, of New York, Mr. Lowndes, of South Carolina, Mr. Parker, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Kinsey, of New Jersey, were appointed managers on the part of the House of Representatives. Four members from the North and one from the South.

I have already stated the character of the report of the committee. It recommended that the clause excluding slavery from Missouri should be stricken from the Missouri bill, and a new section inserted excluding slavery from the Territories north of 36° 30'. And as the votes of members on these two propositions are relied upon to decide the character of the transaction, I ask for the subject the particular attention of this body. It was on the 2d of March, 1820, when the House was called to act. It was a moment of intense interest. It was known that the fate of the measure depended on the vote to strike out the clause excluding slavery from Missouri, because it had been ascertained by repeated tests that no bill could pass the Senate which excluded slavery from the State. It was known to be extremely doubtful whether the motion to strike out could prevail. By voting with those from the North who were opposed to the motion, the South could retain the clause in the bill, and secure the ultimate defeat of the measure. But such a vote was inconsistent with their principles; and the result was doubtful to the last. But they did act upon their principles, cast their votes for the motion, and the clause was stricken from the bill—yeas 90, nays 87. I shall have occasion, in a few moments, to recur to this vote.

The clause excluding slavery from Missouri having been stricken from the bill, the question recurred on inserting the section which excluded slavery from the Territories; which prevailed by a large majority—yeas 134, nays 42. (House Journal 1819-20, page 277.) Of the one hundred and thirty-four yeas, ninety-five came from the North, thirty-nine from the South. Of the forty-two nays, five came from the North, and thirty-seven from the South. It will be observed that the North cast one hundred votes, of which ninety-five supported the compromise, and five opposed it. The South cast seventy-six votes, of which thirty-nine were cast in the affirmative, and thirty-seven against the compromise. With the irresistible power of a conference committee exerted in favor of the compromise, the South was divided as thirty-nine to thirty-seven, whilst ninety-five of one hundred from the North voted in a body for the bill. Yet have northern members stood up here to treat the Missouri compromise as a measure of the South forced upon the North, ranting and declaiming and denouncing the South for a perfidious breach of plighted faith pledged between "your fathers and our fathers!" Sir, in the presence of the American Congress, I denounce the Missouri compromise as a measure of the North forced upon the South. Like all other compromises, as a measure of the strong forced upon the weak.

Again, sir, I say, I feel that I should fail in my duty to my own, my native land—my own beloved Virginia, if I did not direct attention to the fact, that, even by the anaconda coil of a conference committee, she could not be constrained to assent to the hateful principle of the Missouri compromise; but on this final test she cast eighteen votes against the compromise, and only four in its favor; and that, too, when her own son, James Monroe, as President of the United States, was known to feel the deepest interest in the success of the measure.

I said I should revert to the vote to strike out the clause excluding slavery from Missouri. The defeat of that proposition would have secured the defeat of the Missouri compromise, because the Senate would have rejected it; but the body of southern members voted to strike it out, because they held it to be a paramount duty to admit Missouri without the restriction. The motion prevailed by a majority of three votes—yeas 90, nays 87. It was observed that, during the voting, several northern members, who were opposed to the motion on principle, because it would admit slavery into Missouri, retired from the House withholding their votes, and thus securing the success of the motion, and, eventually, the success of the compromise. This fact is stated on the authority of Hon. Charles Fenton Mercer, then a member of Congress from Virginia, and one who voted for the Missouri compromise. I give extracts from a letter, dated Berlin, Prussia, September 12, 1854, directed to Hon. William S. Archer, of Virginia, also a member of Congress from Virginia, in 1820. Mr. Mercer says:

"After I arose, a former class-mate of mine at Princeton, Henry Edwards, of Connecticut, left it, (the House,) and did not return till the vote had been taken." * *

"The question was thus delayed till the night was far advanced. As soon as I recovered, and the members regained their seats, the question was taken, by yeas and noes; and the first amendment adopted by a majority of three votes only, in the absence of Edwards and several others of his opponents. Its friends were all present, and numbered among them Randolph and yourself." * *

"The second resolution was then put, and passed by a large majority, of which I was one, you and Randolph voting against it. As soon as he perceived that many members from the South had voted for it, he sprang up from his seat, in great indignation; and exclaiming as he addressed the Speaker, 'the cards are packed; I will not play the game,' moved a reconsideration of the first amendment, which motion you seconded. Dedicating your vote and Randolph's from the majority, it was obvious that the first amendment would be lost, even though the opponents of it, who had gone out, and whom Randolph styled doughfaces, had not returned, as some of them obviously had. It was now late at night. The Senate had adjourned: and a member friendly to the second resolution, as well as the first, perceiving that if the vote were taken the amendment would be lost, requested Mr. Randolph to withdraw his motion till the ensuing day; stating that, as the Senate had adjourned, the resolution could not pass that night, and that the rules of the House allowed a day after the passage of any act for its reconsideration." * *

"I was seated by Mr. Randolph." * * "Accordingly, he waved his motion for the present, announcing his intention to renew it the ensuing morning; and the House immediately adjourned."

"The morning came; the House met, and Randolph was in his place; he rose and renewed his motion, which the Speaker pronounced out of order, as the reports of committees had precedence, after the reading of the Journal, to all other business."

"In the mean time, the Clerk, having read the Journal, was seen walking towards the door leading to the Senate, with the resolution and the amendment in his hand, when Randolph's attention being called to the fact, he audibly ordered him to stop. Instantly Lewis McLane commanded him to 'proceed at his peril,' in a voice still louder than Randolph's. The Clerk did so; and so the Senators, as I personally know, being prepared by Thomas, of Illinois, took up the amendments as soon as the resolution reached their table, and finally passed them, and consequently thereby closed all further proceedings in regard to it."

"The reports of committees having been ended in the House, Mr. Randolph again rose to renew his motion for reconsideration, when he was officially told by the Speaker that the bill had gone to the Senate."

Such is the statement of the honorable Charles Fenton Mercer, sustained in its essential points by the Journal of the House of Representatives. (See Journal March 3, 1820, page 275, et seq.)

It appears from the Journal (page 279) that Mr. Randolph submitted the motion to reconsider the vote, and that it was ruled by the Speaker to be out of order; from which decision Mr. Randolph appealed, and the decision of the Speaker was sustained by the House.

When the committees had been called, the Speaker announced that "petitions are in order from the States;" and when Virginia was called, Mr. Randolph moved the House to retain in their possession the act for the admission of Missouri until it should be in order to move to reconsider the vote of the preceding day. The Speaker ruled that motion out of order, for the reasons stated on the previous motion made by Mr. Randolph "to reconsider the vote of yesterday." (House Journal, page 280.)

When the States had been called for petitions, and reports had been received from the several committees, and a message had been received from the Senate, Mr. Randolph moved the House to reconsider the vote of the preceding day on the first amendment to the bill for the admission of Missouri; and then the Speaker, having ascertained the fact, informed the House that the proceedings of yesterday on that bill had been officially communicated to the Senate by the Clerk; whereupon Mr. Randolph moved a resolution declaring that in carrying the bill to the Senate, after he had given notice of his purpose to move a reconsideration of a vote of yesterday, on which he voted with the majority, "the Clerk is guilty of a breach of the privileges of a member of this House, under the rules thereof." The Speaker put the question: "Will the House now proceed to consider the said resolution?" and it was determined in the negative.

Mr. Randolph then submitted the following proposition:

"That so much of the 37th rule as allows a reconsideration of any question, by motion of a member of the majority on such question, on the day succeeding that on which such question be taken, be expunged."

The said proposition was read, and ordered to be tabled for one day; and then, immediately, it was ordered, on motion of Mr. Gross, of New York, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next. (See Journal House, page 281.) And on Monday, a message was received from the President of the United States that he had signed "An act to authorize the people of the Territory of Missouri to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to prohibit slavery in certain Territories." (See House Journal, March 6, 1820, page 287.)

And now, sir, with this unvarnished narrative of facts, attested by indisputable evidence, I submit to the judgment of the candid, whether my illustrious predecessor was not visited with a degree of rigor in the application of the rules which amounted to practical tyranny? And, sir, it was this rigor of rule, this tyranny of practice, which carried through the forms of legislation this detestable Missouri compromise. A compact between "your fathers and our fathers!" No, sir. It was an iron edict forced upon the South by the North—forced upon the weak by the strong.

Sir, John Randolph of Roanoke moved a reconsideration of a vote on a vital question; and, by the rigid ruling of the Speaker, his repeated efforts to secure a vote on his motion were all defeated; and the vote on his motion and several resolutions was never taken, until the question involving the fate of the compromise had been taken from the House to the Senate, had been acted on by the Senate, and sent to the President, and approved by the President and returned to the House!

And now, sir, I have shown that the compro-

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Admission of New States—Mr. Goode.

HO. OF REPS.

mise originated with the North, and was introduced into the Senate by Mr. Thomas, of Illinois. When originally inserted as an amendment to the Missouri bill, it was supported by every Senator present from the North, except the two from Indiana, (Mr. Noble and Mr. Taylor.) The strength of the opposition to the amendment came from the South: Virginia, South Carolina, and Georgia voted against it; North Carolina was divided—Mr. Macon against, and Mr. Stokes in the affirmative. The body of the slaves at that time was to be found in those States. The South was divided on that amendment as twelve yeas to eight nays; but a majority of the slave interest was represented by the eight Senators. The Senators from Delaware were of the twelve; and that State, on the border of Pennsylvania, is conceded to have but small interest in the subject. The southern Senators who supported the amendment represented new States, asking favors daily from this Government, at a time when it was notorious that the President of the United States was extremely anxious the measure should prevail.

I have shown that in the House of Representatives the compromise was resolutely and persistently resisted, until the report from the committee of conference; and, even with the irresistible force of that agent, seconded by the influence of a southern President, the South was divided into parts of almost exact equality, whilst ninety-five of one hundred northern members voted in a body for the Missouri compromise. Yet has it been paraded as a measure of the South, forced upon the North!

But, sir, I confess that the fact to which I point with peculiar emphasis, and with a feeling of personal pride, is the position of my native State—resisting the fatal principle of the compromise, regardless alike of all considerations of a delusive State policy and the seductive blandishments and allurements of executive influence.

And now, sir, I demand justice at the hands of the northern Representatives. I exact it as an obligation of honor, from every member from the North, whenever he finds himself declaiming before his constituents on the perfidious infamy of the South in violating her plighted faith by the repeal of the Missouri compromise, to exempt Virginia from the force of his denunciation, or to feel, in his own heart, that he is meanly attempting to impose on the ignorance of his own constituents in attempting to produce a false impression by a representation of facts which, as to Virginia, he knows to be false.

Sir, in the order of Providence and the workings of fortune, it devolves on me, all unworthy as I am, to represent the grave, the ashes, the memory, of John Randolph of Roanoke. It is a perilous privilege to stand here to-day as the humble defender, if not the champion, of his brilliant fame; but, sir, I proudly present for the admiration of his country this bright example of his sagacity, this striking proof of his devoted fidelity to his native State. Sir, if he were not the most fervid and impassioned orator of that Augustan age in which he lived, he possessed a power of language amounting to a fascination—a mysterious charm—exerting an influence over the will and conduct of men which I never witnessed in another.

And now, sir, I feel myself fully authorized to commend the poisoned chalice to the lips of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to say to him that the charge of broken faith comes with an ill grace from that side of the House. I might challenge the honorable gentleman to point to a single instance of plighted faith, faithfully executed on the part of the North towards the South. If, for the sake of the argument, but against the truth of the case, we assume that the act for the admission of Missouri was founded in pact, involving honor and plighted faith—it can be readily shown that the compact has been disregarded by the North. If it were a compromise at all, it rested on the principle of a partition of territory between parties contending for political power, settling their dispute by dividing the subject of controversy on a geographical line. This is the construction now sought to be established by the North, and by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as a Representative from the North. The contest for political power was settled on the principle of a division of territory on 36°30' north latitude. In the case of the Louisiana purchase, the South made the sacrifice and abided by the principle. As the law of the province of Louisiana was supposed to extend the institutions of the South throughout its borders, the principle operated in favor of the North. They availed themselves of it, and secured from the South the whole territory north of that line, being nine hundred and sixty-four thousand square miles; leaving to the South only two hundred and twenty-four thousand four hundred and forty-five square miles. Again, when Texas was annexed, the laws of that State established the institutions of the South throughout her borders; but a large part of her territory extended north of 36°30' north latitude, and the application of the alleged principle of the Missouri compromise would operate an advantage to the North. They accordingly claimed it and received it, and secured from the South all that part of Texas lying north of 36°30' north latitude, being forty-three thousand five hundred and thirty-seven square miles. In both these instances the North eagerly appropriated the advantages of the principle of the alleged Missouri compromise, and the South submitted to the operation of a bad principle and hard bargain.

In the running of time it came to pass that acquisitions were made from Florida. Here, too, the lex loci established the institutions of the South; and far the larger portion of the acquisition was north of 36°30', being the Territory of Oregon, with three hundred and forty-one thousand four hundred and sixty-three square miles; whilst in Florida proper, south of 36°30', there were no more than fifty-nine thousand square miles. The North again availed themselves of the operation of the principle of the Missouri compromise, and appropriated to themselves all of Oregon.

Time rolled on, and it came to pass that acquisitions were made from Mexico, where slavery was prohibited. Here was a new phase in the operation of the principle of the pretended compromise. Its action would be injurious to the interest of the North, and offensive to northern prejudices. The South would acquire an extensive area where our institutions had been excluded by the law of Mexico. On three different occasions the principle had operated against the South. The North had insisted on the advantage; the South had acquiesced; and the North had secured the advantage; but on this first occasion when the principle secured an advantage to the South, it was repudiated by the North, and they claimed the whole extent of the Mexican grant. In vain did the South point to Louisiana. In vain did we point to Florida. In vain did we point to Texas. These examples were utterly disregarded; the principle of the Missouri compromise was repudiated; the South was excluded from all participation in the vast territory acquired from Mexico; and the North appropriated all to themselves!

They did even more than this. They took all, and more than all. They raised a claim to territory in Texas, and with $10,000,000, taken from the Treasury, they compromised with Texas and settled the boundary between Texas and New Mexico, so as to take from the South eighty-two thousand square miles of Texan territory south of 36°30', and subject it to the authority of free soil North. Texas claimed the boundary of the Rio Grande. Mexico invaded that territory. It was resented by the United States as an invasion of the sacred soil of America. Mexico was repulsed. The Texan title was supported by the United States, and conquered from Mexico by the power of the sword. As an indemnity for the expenses of the war, a large cession of territory was made by Mexico to this country, and the United States succeeded to whatever title Mexico might have in the lands granted. New Mexico was comprehended in the grant; and, as an American settlement, asserted against Texas the very title which had been asserted by Mexico against Texas, and which had occasioned the war; and which title had been conquered from Mexico by American arms, and conquered from her as the rightful dominion of Texas. Yet the Government of the United States supported the claim of New Mexico to the very land which had been conquered from Mexico as part of Texas, and made that claim the basis of a compromise with Texas, by which $10,000,000 were taken from the Treasury to purchase out the claim of Texas, so as to add to New Mexico eighty-two thousand square miles, from which the institutions of the South are excluded, and which is subjected to the jurisdiction of Free-Soilers and Abolitionists of the North.

I shall be pardoned in reviving a few other reminiscences of Punic faith. In 1833 the country was convulsed with the tariff agitation. Northern oppression had goaded the South into open and frantic hostility to the policy of Government, and there was imminent peril of collision of arms. The South was pacified and appeased by a compromise, which stipulated that at the close of ten years duties should be collected by a horizontal tariff of twenty per cent. ad valorem. The South, in a true and lofty spirit of patriotism, consented to a very gradual reduction, so as to enable the North to prepare for the contemplated change. For seven years the reduction was so slight as to be scarcely felt in the practical operations of the country. In 1841 the reduction was considerable; and though the North had been allowed seven years to accommodate themselves to the proposed change, they filled the country with loud and frantic complaints; they repudiated the principle of the compromise; they denounced the act of 1833, and declared that by its own terms it expired in 1843—the very time when, by the terms of the compromise, the horizontal duty of twenty per cent. was to be established as the permanent policy of Government. And in the stead of a faithful execution of the terms of the compact, they enacted the unjust, unconstitutional, odious, and oppressive tariff of 1842.

And thus has it been throughout our history. In 1784, Virginia executed her deed of cession, for which she has received declamatory laudations and nothing—nothing more. Instantly machinations were set on foot to apply to the vast territory the ordinance of 1787, and thus to exclude the generous donor from all participation in the settlement of that territory, of which she had made a munificent and magnificent contribution to the United States. Northern politicians have been content to refer this movement to Thomas Jefferson, as a justification to them for its enactment. But Jefferson was not infallible, and he was the only friend of the measure, and the solitary representative of that sentiment from Virginia in 1784. His State, with the entire South, voted against the ordinance in the Continental Congress, and it was successfully resisted by the unanimous South until 1787, when it is supposed to have passed, in consequence of a compromise entered into between the North and South, as I shall now proceed to relate.

The Federal convention, which adopted the Constitution of the United States, was in session in Philadelphia. The Continental Congress was also holding its session in New York. In adjusting the principles of the Federal Constitution the convention had adopted a provision requiring a vote of two thirds to pass laws on the subject of commerce and navigation, which was very unacceptable to the North. It was also fiercely contested whether slaves should be regarded as persons or property; whether they should be held as entitled to representation, or treated as mere property subject to taxation. It was also a question discussed whether an obligation rested on the northern States to return fugitive slaves to their owners; and on these several topics the heats and dissensions became so great as to justify the apprehension that the convention would dissolve without framing a Constitution at all. In this state of things it seems to have been understood between the members of the convention that the South would agree to surrender the two-thirds vote on the subject of commerce, and subject it to the action of a mere majority; and that they should recommend to the Continental Congress to adopt the ordinance of 1787, excluding slavery from the Northwestern Territory, on condition that the North would insert in the Constitution a clause for the rendition of fugitive slaves, and allow a representation for three fifths of the slaves, at the same time imposing a tax on three fifths, and exempting two fifths from taxation.

Sir, the South has faithfully executed this contract. They surrendered the two-thirds vote on the subject of commerce, and subjected it to the action of a mere majority, by which they enabled a northern majority to initiate and establish a commercial system destructive to the South, and eminently advantageous to the North; a system which has secured to the North great cities, marble palaces, and gorgeous equipages, resulting from profits on the labor of the oppressed South—that South ground into the dust under the operation of this odious commercial system. And again the South did consent to the ordinance of 1787, and thereby established forever the oppressive ascendancy of the North; bringing into the present House of Representatives the all-controlling force of fifty members. How has the North performed her part of the contract? How has she redeemed her plighted faith?

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Kansas Conference Committee Bill—Mr. Bonham.

Ho. OF REPS.

As to representation, it is true we have about twenty members to represent our interest derived from slaves; but as a counterpoise you have forty-eight from the Virginia grant, exclusive of the members from Minnesota. As to taxation, it was intended to establish, in the Constitution, an equitable rule, apportioning the burdens of Government justly and ratably among the several States. But discarding the policy of direct taxes, you levy taxes by duties on imports—regulated by the vote of the numerical northern majority—and you have infused into the system, as a governing principle, high duties on commodities consumed by slaves and the owners of slaves, and low duties on the commodities consumed by the inhabitants of what you call free States; thus defeating the object of the Constitution, and inflicting on the South a grievous practical oppression.

How have you redeemed your plighted faith on the subject of the fugitive slave? The provision of the Constitution is mandatory; its language explicit: he "shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due." Have you obeyed this mandate? Have you executed this provision of the Constitution? Have you redeemed your plighted faith, thus solemnly pledged in the fundamental, sacred compact of union? It is notorious that you have resisted and defeated it. The provision is worth nothing to the South, nothing to any one citizen of the South. You have resisted it individually and collectively, socially and politically. You have resisted it as men and as citizens; you resisted it in county meetings, in primary popular assemblies, in political clubs, by party organizations, and by solemn legislative enactments. You have resisted it by violence, by organized force, by mobs, even unto battle, death, and murder. The citizen of the South, engaged in the lawful effort to recover his own property, has been publicly and barbarously put to death, and the murderer has found safety and security in the public sentiment of the North, and in lawless combinations of Abolitionists, Free-Soilers, bullies, and blackguards.

All this was true, even before the mockery of compromise to which the South was called upon to submit in 1850, when the North took all, and more than all, acquired from Mexico, with the eighty-two thousand square miles purchased from Texas; when the North wrested from the southern citizen the right to sell his own property in the city of Washington, and slavery itself was virtually abolished in the District of Columbia. For all this, the North condescended to vouchsafe to the South the reenactment of the fugitive slave law, and the recognition of the doctrine of congressional non-intervention; the latter of which has been metamorphosed into the absurd and mischievous doctrine of squatter sovereignty by one political party of the North, and utterly repudiated by the other, or Black Republican party. The reenactment of the fugitive slave law only served to afford to the North an opportunity to reenact the insulting violation of plighted faith, and to outrage the rights of the South by an utter disregard of all social, moral, religious, legal, and constitutional obligation. I salute the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania. Once more I commend the poisoned chalice to his lip. Sir, the charge of breach of plighted faith comes with ill grace from that side of the House.

KANSAS CONFERENCE COMMITTEE BILL.

SPEECH OF HON. M. L. BONHAM, OF SOUTH CAROLINA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 9, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. BONHAM said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I did not, for various reasons, participate in the debate on the Kansas Senate bill; nor did I expect to take part in the discussion of any branch of that question. On the passage of the conference bill I moved the previous question, but forbore to occupy the time of the House to give my reasons for my vote. Perhaps I should not have troubled this House at all with these reasons. But a few days after the passage of the bill, my honorable colleague [Mr. BOYCE] delivered a speech in reply to the honorable member from Mississippi, [Mr. QUITMAN,] in whose view I concurred, and who and myself alone of all the southern Democrats stood with the Opposition on that question. I do not complain of the course my colleague thought proper to pursue; but that, with other subsequent events, makes it due to my constituents as well as to myself, in my own judgment, that I should ask the indulgence of the House whilst I now briefly state those reasons.

The argument for and against the Senate bill had been exhausted in a discussion exhibiting a degree of ability seldom surpassed in these deliberative bodies. And I think an impartial posterity will bear me out when I say that the preponderance of the argument was largely in favor of the advocates of the bill. To my mind it was conclusively proved that the constitution of Kansas had come up to us with all the sanctions requisite to a valid constitution. The entire Democratic party, with the President at its head, (the Douglas Democrats excepted,) indorsed it. It was clearly shown, by precedents and sound argument, that the convention had the right to submit that constitution to the people for ratification or rejection, in part, in the whole, or not at all; and in either event it would be binding on Kansas and acceptable to us. That she had not the requisite Federal population, and was presenting herself without a formal enabling act, might, and ought, under all the circumstances, to be waived, was conceded by all—denied by none. It was not questioned that she would agree to abstain from the exercise of all right of taxation, and that the extraordinary claim of seventeen million acres of land over and above what other States similarly situated had received, would be abandoned, and the four millions gladly accepted. The Senate bill was the embodiment, as was supposed by its advocates, of all that was useful and needful for her admission. The Green-Pugh amendment was distasteful to many of us; but to secure unity of action among the friends of Kansas, it was acquiesced in, after some modifications. This amendment was, however, a concession which brought no strength to the bill; but, on the contrary, weakened it; for it led the opponents of the bill to hope for further concessions on a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. It was, however, considered by many, that although we might, in the language of the late lamented Evans, be "fighting for a shadow, so far as any ultimate good could come to the South;" nevertheless, we were contending for "a principle of vital importance," namely: the admission of a State with a pro-slavery constitution; the importance of which principle was enhanced by the fact that such admission might prove—though I do not myself think such would have been necessarily the case—a barren victory to the South; and that in proportion as she would gain but little by it, so much the greater the wrong to the South of refusing Kansas admission with the Lecompton constitution.

The passage of the bill was opposed by the Republicans, on the ground of the slavery feature of the constitution. The Douglas Democrats opposed it, mainly, as they alleged, on the ground that the whole constitution was not submitted.

But I think they deceive themselves. I say it with respect, as I do not mean to assail the motives of gentlemen, the force and power of abolition feeling at home unconsciously and imperceptibly operated upon their judgments. The precedents of the ratification of the Federal Constitution by the thirteen original States, by their respective conventions alone, without submission by the people, and the adoption of their State constitutions, by more than half of the States of this Union, in the same manner, it would seem, ought to have been sufficient to have determined this question in the mind of any unbiased person. The Democratic party, however, with a portion of southern Americans, were satisfied with the constitution upon both the slavery clause and the question of submission, and should, therefore, have insisted upon the adoption of the Senate bill. They would ultimately have succeeded. But if they had failed, then, on the defeated Senate bill, they would have gone to the country with a better issue than on the victorious conference bill.

But, sir, the Senate bill was defeated, and a conference committee, at the request of the Senate, was appointed. After many meetings and much disagreement, they reported the bill, the merits of which I now propose to consider.

The first objection to the bill is, that it submits the whole Lecompton constitution back to the people of Kansas for adoption or rejection, in despite of the declaration of the people, in convention assembled, that they desired admission, at once, under that constitution. The first section of the bill provides that the admission of Kansas shall be dependent on "the fundamental condition precedent," that the people of Kansas shall accept a specific proposition contained in six clauses of the bill respecting lands, taxes, &c. The bill provides further, that on a majority voting "proposition accepted," at an election to be held, "the President of the United States shall announce the same by proclamation; and thereafter, and without any further proceedings on the part of Congress, the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, shall be complete and absolute." Whilst, on the other hand, if "a majority of the votes cast be for proposition rejected, it shall be deemed and held that the people of Kansas do not desire admission into the Union with said constitution, under the condition set forth in said proposition." And then, regarding the adoption by Kansas of this last alternative as a rejection of the constitution, the bill goes on to authorize the people to form a new constitution. Does this statement alone not make it palpable to the plainest understanding that, though not in so many words, this is virtually a submission of the constitution? It does not matter whether the voting be on the land grant, the taxing power, &c., or on some totally indifferent question; still, if the result be that Kansas, with the Lecompton constitution, would, on the one hand, be admitted, and on the other rejected, by reason of that vote, unquestionably the constitution is virtually submitted back to the people for ratification or rejection.

Besides, if it were intended to submit the propositions growing out of the ordinance alone, why introduce into the bill the words "admission of the State of Kansas into the Union," &c., at all?

Again, the Douglas Democrats, as before stated, based their opposition to the Senate bill mainly upon the ground of the non-submission of the whole constitution to the people. What other feature, then, I ask, is in the conference bill that commended that bill, rather than the Senate bill, to the support of the English branch of the Douglas Democrats? Surely not that feature which proposes to admit Kansas under the Lecompton constitution, upon the people, at the approaching August election, giving a majority for "proposition accepted;" but if, on the contrary, they should give a majority for "proposition rejected," proposes to keep them out indefinitely.

But, sir, as to the construction which the English branch of the Douglas Democrats place on this bill, we are not left to inference alone. "The naked and unqualified admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution," said Mr. ENGLISH, in presenting the conference report to the House, "he could not vote for;" that, "before Kansas is admitted, her people ought to ratify, or, at least, have a fair opportunity to vote upon, the constitution under which it is proposed to admit her;" that "he would make reasonable concessions provided the substance be secured; which is, the making of the constitution, at an early day, conform to the public will, or, at least, that the privilege of so making it be secured to the people beyond all question." It would puzzle human ingenuity to discover any other meaning in these words, than that Mr. ENGLISH considered the conference bill as, in effect, submitting the whole constitution to the people for acceptance or rejection. Would Mr. ENGLISH, or any other advocate of the bill, have voted for an amendment declaring it was not a submission? I apprehend not. Mr. GROESBECK and Mr. Cox, of the same wing of the Douglas party, and Mr. GILMER, of the southern Americans, said they regarded it in effect a submission. All the Opposition say that it is a virtual submission. Other distinguished members of the committee, it is true, say that there is no submission of the constitution to a vote of the people. The members of the committee disagree. We are, therefore, free to place our own construction upon the bill. To my mind, it is a virtual submission of the constitution back to the people for acceptance or rejection, which view I think I have shown to be correct.

The most plausible argument in favor of the conference bill, which I have heard or seen, is, that if Kansas, by rejecting the proposition in the conference bill, should be kept out of the Union, still, if she had been unwilling to accept our proposition in the Senate bill, she would, in that event, also have been out of the Union; and that we could not compel her to come in. That is true. But it was admitted on this side of the House—denied by no Democrat, so far as my knowledge or information goes—that Kansas would have assented to our proposition contained in the Senate bill. It was reasonable—the same that was made to Minnesota—and Kansas could ask no more. Her proposition was unreasonable; and such as no State ever laid claim to before. It was never questioned that, on the passage of the Senate bill, the Legislature of Kansas would be convened; that her Senators would be elected; and that they and the member elect, would, as soon thereafter as practicable, take their seats. Now, the instant that these delegates should have taken their seats, Kansas would, I submit, with confidence in the view, have been in the Union with the Lecompton constitution; there would have been an acceptance of our proposition, and an unconditional assent to the terms of the Senate bill by such sending of delegates; a waiver, to all intents and purposes, of all right to tax the public lands; and an abandonment of any claim to land itself beyond the four million acres. No one, up to the failure of the Senate bill, saw any difficulty as to the ordinance, which was, in fact, no part of the constitution; and there was no reason to suppose that there could be any, for Kansas had herself proposed to come in with the Lecompton constitution, and would have been in, and been received by Congress as a member of the Confederacy by the act of sending her Senators and member here to take their seats; and need never again (and probably would not) have alluded to her ordinance. No vote by her people, in such case, would have been necessary to admission. Or, she might, if she had preferred so to do, through her State Legislature, have assembled a convention, and through that have abandoned her ordinance, and have accepted our proposition. In the other case, by the conference bill, the people of Kansas must vote again before they can get into the Union under the Lecompton constitution. Her remaining out under the Senate bill would have been voluntary on her own part; but her remaining out under the conference bill is compulsory on ours.

But suppose Kansas had said we will come into the Union, and will send our delegates to take their seats, but will negotiate as to the questions of taxation, the land grants, &c. She would unquestionably have thus been in the Union. You could not have refused her admission. If, then, the terms of adjustment could not have been agreed upon between the parties, who would have been the arbiter? The United States courts; who could have done nothing more nor less than have decided that Kansas had acquiesced in our proposition. If Kansas had been content with the decision, that would have been the end of the matter. If she had insisted upon her proposition, she would thereby have placed herself out of the Union, and would have had to forego the benefits thereof.

But suppose she had said, upon the passage of the Senate bill, she preferred staying out of the Union to accepting the terms of that bill? The South would have lost nothing, as it turns out, and Congress could then, with much better grace than by applying such rule to Kansas in the conference bill, have passed a general law to exclude all new States till they should have the Federal ratio to entitle them to admission.

It is supposed that the right to tax the public lands is an attribute of sovereignty of which Kansas could not be deprived, or deprive herself, and yet be "admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original thirteen States in all respects whatever." It must be borne in mind that the difference between the original thirteen States and the Territories is very marked. Those States were independent sovereignties, possessed of the right of eminent domain outside of the Union, and anterior to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. The sovereignty of the Territories, on the contrary, is in the States of this Union—the right of taxing the public lands along with it. Now it seems, as has been done again and again, that Congress may reserve this sovereign right of taxation in the enabling act, or in the act admitting a State, carved out of these Territories. But if we grant the position to be true, that the withdrawal of the sovereignty of the United States confers upon a new State, at once, this sovereign right of taxation, still Kansas, as many of the other States have done, might waive the exercise of it in consideration of the land grants and other advantages arising from incorporation into the Union.

It is further said for the conference bill that its first clause admits Kansas into the Union. That clause is: "That the State of Kansas be, and is hereby, admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever." The Crittenden-Montgomery amendment does the same thing in the same words. But what is such admission in the conference bill worth when the bill goes on to prescribe a condition precedent which must be fulfilled before she is admitted, and failing to fulfill which, she will not be admitted, and will never have been admitted? There is a condition to be performed, precedent to admission. How can the State be said to be now admitted into the Union when she is told in the bill, your people must vote again, and if they do not vote "proposition accepted" you must stay out of the Union till you have the Federal ratio, after which you may form a new constitution, and then "be entitled to admission into the Union as a State under such constitution?" Does any one pretend that Kansas is now actually in the Union? This bill, in truth, subjects the constitution to a vote of rejection. Indeed, its adoption by Congress was the adoption of a measure of exclusion, for the result of the vote of the people of Kansas under the conference bill, in August next, is scarcely now problematical. No, sir; so far from Kansas being admitted, we are no nearer the end of our difficulties now than we were before the passage of the conference bill. Kansas will send up to us next winter, in all probability, a free-State constitution, formed by a convention called by the Territorial Legislature, having the other sanctions of the Lecompton constitution, (except so far as it will be restricted by the conference bill as to the Federal ratio,) with the addition of having been submitted, entire, to the people for their approval. And I now ask gentlemen, will that constitution be rejected by Congress? I think not. This conference bill will thus secure to the Opposition within one short year, and if not so soon, at some day not very distant, the victory for which they have from the first contended, and the South be shorn of the triumph of principle in having a slave State admitted.

It is claimed, moreover, that the conference bill recognizes the right of a slave State to admission. The Crittenden-Montgomery amendment can lay claim to equal merit; for that bill provides for the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution, if upon "that constitutional instrument" being first submitted to a vote of the people, a majority shall assent thereto. But to what end is this recognition in either bill? What Republican would ever have supported the Crittenden-Montgomery amendment but for a certainty that the Lecompton constitution would never again have seen Congress? And what Douglas Democrat would ever have supported the conference bill but for its securing virtually to the people of Kansas the opportunity of voting down the Lecompton constitution?

This bill is further objectionable as not being a manly, straightforward measure. It is to be construed one way in one section of the Union, and a different way in the opposite section. This double construction prevails here, already, as I have shown. It is a mode of legislation I cannot admire—one which can never result favorably to the establishment of sound principles, or in benefit to the weaker section. To preserve the constitutional rights of the South in this Union, the legislation should be plain—unmistakable.

I further object to this bill, because, in accepting that, instead of making our stand upon the defeated Senate bill, we abandoned the question, in this case, of the admission of a slave State north of 36° 30'—a concession which, it strikes me, the South should have avoided even the appearance of making. It is no answer to say that the southern States, which were committed to secession in the event of the rejection of a slave State, would have receded from their position because of the fact that the anti-slavery party in Kansas so greatly outnumbered the pro-slavery party. Those States would have been then in no worse condition than they are now. The people of the whole South would have felt indignant at the rejection of the Senate bill; for it had been made plain to them that, if rejected, it would be owing to the slavery clause contained in the constitution. The conference bill faintly purports to recognize the principle that a slave State may be admitted, and thus furnishes the ground, though such was not the purpose of its advocates, upon which the tone of the South will, I fear, be let down from its former elevation.

But gentlemen say the conference bill is a better bill than the Senate bill. Had it been submitted as an amendment to the Senate bill at the time we expected to pass the Senate bill, by a Republican or even a Democrat, I doubt if it would have received the support of ten southern Democrats. It would have been regarded as involving the abandonment of the position taken in the Senate bill. What makes it a better bill? Is there anything in the bill itself, or in its passage, from which the most sanguine can augur the future admission of a slave State from the Territories north of 36° 30'—or even south? Rather the contrary.

As for myself, Mr. Chairman, I see no reason to doubt the correctness of my convictions, but much to confirm it. I voted against the measure with regret at separating from my colleagues and so many other true southern men; but, with my views, I should do the same thing again, under the same circumstances. The bill commands no more my approbation now than it did at the time of its passage. I voted, it is true, with my honorable friend from Mississippi, for the motion to lay upon the table a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; thus indicating our indisposition to protract a contest in which we differed from so many of our friends. But if any practicable good could have been attained by the amendment of the conference bill, or by the substitution of the Senate bill, or something more desirable, of course we would have voted for the reconsideration. I no not recognize mere party success and party supremacy as paramount to all considerations of principle. I would concede much for the harmony of the party I am acting with—a great deal for the harmony of the party of the South—but what I would concede must fall short of the concession of principle involved, in my conception, in the conference bill.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Admission of Kansas—Mr. Pendleton.

Ho. OF REPS.

I think these measures should be fairly canvassed, in order that the South shall clearly comprehend them, and realize the complexion of her probable future. But she can now make no issue upon them with the North, nor can the making of such issues at the South be productive of any good there. Moreover, much as I dislike the measure, I have no words of complaint against those who felt it their duty to support the conference bill. They are as deeply interested in, and as true to, the interests of the South as I; and probably better judges of her best policy. This whole Kansas controversy but exhibits the difference of opinion which will exist among gentlemen who look with equal solicitude to the welfare of their section.

The conference bill is now the law of the land. The South is in the Union with no issue before the country tending to its immediate dissolution. Her policy should be to keep steadily in view the taking of her destiny into her own hands when the occasion which requires it shall present itself, and, in the mean time, to gird her loins for the race which is set before her by the high priest of Republicanism; and to coöperate with that party which alone, of the two great parties of the country, profess to abide by the Constitution, as our fathers left it to us, so long as that party is true to the constitutional rights of the South. The next two years will decide the fate of this Union. The Democratic party, somewhat crippled by its division on the Senate bill, though perhaps not to be subjected to a Waterloo defeat, is the last hope of those who think the rights of the South can be preserved in the Union. The battle of preponderance in numbers of the free over the slave States, it is true, "has been fought and won." But the battle of preponderance in the two Houses in Congress, between the friends and enemies of the Constitution, is now upon the country. If the Republicans shall win the day, the greatest battle of them all—the battle in defense of the institutions of the South will have to be fought—should the Republicans make good their threats—on another and a different field. The discussion of principles is always healthful; but a division of the South, at this juncture, into bitter parties on these questions, would be deeply to be deplored, and should earnestly be avoided. It is the part of wisdom in her people to profit by the knowledge of the past, and to prepare for the worst in the future. Mr. Calhoun, in his last great speech delivered in the Senate, begun by saying: "I have, Senators, believed from the first that the agitation of the subject of slavery would, if not prevented by some timely and effective measure, end in disunion." And in speaking of Washington's example in deciding to resist British oppression, he says: "We find much in his example to encourage us, should we be forced to the extremity of deciding between submission and disunion." That great statesman and pure patriot was then fast approaching his final dissolution. With the vision of a seer, he predicted the existing state of affairs. And could he have survived, and have heard the announcements which have been made in this, and in the other end of the Capitol, during the present session of Congress, as to the future policy of the Government under Black Republican rule, he would have said to his countrymen, the period is now near at hand when you must decide between "submission and disunion."

ADMISSION OF KANSAS.

SPEECH OF HON. G. H. PENDLETON,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 9, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. PENDLETON said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I desire to reply briefly to the speech of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT.] I would not have felt justified in doing so, at this late day in the session, if the gentleman had not seen proper, in the course of his remarks, to allude to myself and other members by name, and to comment with some severity on our course on the Kansas bill.

Before, however, I notice the speech itself, I desire that the House and the country should know that this speech, if ever delivered at all, was delivered at a night session, when, by common agreement, nobody was expected to be present except those who desired to rehearse their written speeches; that its elaborate statements and rounded periods, its bitter denunciations, its vivid descriptions, were declaimed to empty seats and tired reporters. It bears the appearance of having been delivered in a full House, in the presence of a quorum, and as such will go before the country in the Globe and the pamphlet copies; while, in fact, not ten members were present, and not ten others will ever know of its existence, except by reason of its publication.

The speech is on Kansas affairs, and especially on the conference bill. It follows the usual course. It passes over well-trodden ground. It denounces the bill in no measured terms. It imputes to it falsification of facts, and fraudulent designs, in the following emphatic language:

"All that is important in the pretended facts set forth in the preamble are notoriously false! and every material provision of the act covers a fraud!"

"I. The preamble states in substance that the people of Kansas did, by a convention, form for themselves the Lecompton constitution! The people of Kansas never made or adopted that instrument. It was the work of a faction, accomplished by fraud. The convention that made it was illegally called by an unauthorized Legislature; was illegally chosen and constituted; and did not, in any sense, represent the people of Kansas."

And after stating that the Lecompton constitution had been rejected by the House of Representatives because it had not been made or ratified by the people of Kansas, the gentleman says:

"Amongst those voting, and, as they declared, for that especial reason, were the two members from Indiana, [Mr. ENGLISH and Mr. FOLEY]; the six members from Ohio, [Mr. COX, Mr. COCKERILL, Mr. GROESBECK, Mr. HALL, Mr. LAWRENCE, and Mr. PENDLETON]; and the member from Pennsylvania, [Mr. OWEN JONES]; they first voted for the Crittenden amendment! and afterwards voted for this act! and without their votes it could not have passed! How could these men sanction this falsehood against all their previous declarations, letters, and speeches, and against their recorded votes?"

I will not stop to criticise the elegance of the language used, nor to controvert the accuracy of the views taken, or the truth of the assertions made. I will not defend myself or my colleagues from the gentleman's denunciations. I charge that he has done exactly what he charges upon us; that he has solemnly and by recorded vote affirmed the truth of this very preamble; that he has voted for it word for word, letter for letter. I hold in my hand the Montgomery-Crittenden amendment, which passed this House. The gentleman from New York voted for it. The record shows that he did. The preamble of that amendment is in these words:

"Whereas, The people of the Territory of Kansas did, by a convention of delegates assembled at Lecompton, on the 7th day of November, 1857, for that purpose, form for themselves a constitution and State government, which constitution is republican."

Will the gentleman point out the difference between this preamble for which he voted, and the preamble of the conference bill, for voting for which he condemns us so freely? They are identical: they vary not a word in all that portion of which he complains. Now, let me ask the gentleman from New York what new light has suddenly broken in upon him? How comes it that what he said was so true on the 1st day of April became so false on the 30th day of that month? What change in the question, or in the facts, or in the man himself, has made that which was so orthodox in him so "damnable a heresy" in us? Or, if no change in either or any has taken place, how comes it that he then affirmed so solemnly to be true that which he now says he always knew was so false? that which, he says, he has such overwhelming evidence to prove to be false?

Again, sir, in another part of this speech, I find this paragraph following a calculation of the value of land mentioned in the proposition tendered to Kansas:

"Estimating the population of Kansas at forty thousand, (a fair estimate,) here is a bribe offered out of the public property of more than six hundred dollars each, to every man, woman, and child, in the Territory, to induce the people to change their votes, and make Kansas a slave State! A bribe in case the people surrender their right of adopting such a constitution as they approve, and accept the one dictated to them by the slave power, which they have once rejected, by a vote almost unanimous! To be paid, if they accept the price and change their votes, otherwise to be withheld! If an individual had offered a voter five dollars to change his vote on the same subject, he would justly be subjected to criminal and infamous punishment! Yet this act proposes a wholesale system of bribery, for the purchase and sale of a majority of all voters in the Territory! And that, too, without any regard to the ordinary rules of economy."

This is another effect of a night session for set speeches. The gentleman could hardly have made such a statement in a full House, and in daylight. It needed a thin House, and gas-lights, and sleepy reporters, and impatient speakers to lead him into such a mistake. No land, no money, is offered to any person; no voter will receive a cent; no voter will receive an acre, no matter how he votes, or whether he votes at all. The grant is to the State, not to the voters; to the Government, not to the individuals. No man will be the richer; no man will be the poorer. The gentleman must have known it; he can read; he can understand language; he knew that no private advantage would ensue upon a vote either way. I defy him to point out a single line, or word, or letter, in the bill which countenances such an opinion! It is not there; and yet he says:

"Estimating the population of Kansas at forty thousand, (a fair estimate,) here is a bribe offered out of the public property of more than six hundred dollars to each and every man, woman, and child in the Territory, to induce the people to change their votes, and make Kansas a slave State."

Again, in describing the mode in which the elections are to be conducted. The gentleman waxes warm in his indignation, and says:

"V. Section second is a master-piece of ingenuity, in devising ways and means to render certain the success of the Lecompton constitution and of slavery, at the election provided for; if not by the votes of the people, at least by the returns of the officers, who are to be put in charge, with full power to accomplish that purpose."

"It provides that the Governor, Secretary, and district attorney—all appointed by the President—and the Speaker of the House, and President of the Council, shall be a board of commissioners under the act; any three of whom shall constitute a board; and that this partisan pro-slavery board, appointed by the President, shall have power—

- "1. To establish new precincts for voting.
 - "2. To cause polls to be opened at such places as it may deem proper, in the counties and election precincts.
 - "3. To appoint three judges of election at each place of voting, any two of whom may act.
 - "4. To appoint such persons as they may deem proper, in the place of the sheriffs and their deputies, to preserve peace and good order.
 - "5. To appoint the day of holding said election.
 - "6. To prescribe the time of said election.
 - "7. To prescribe the manner of said election.
 - "8. To prescribe the places of said election.
 - "9. To direct the time within which returns must be made.
 - "10. To declare the result of said election.
- "Unlimited powers, without any appeal or review. By the organic act, the people were to be left perfectly free to form their own constitution in their own way. There was to be no intervention by Congress or by the President. The President has no right to appoint any of the officers of election in any organized State or Territory, or any board to appoint them, and never should be allowed to do so. It is intervention, and most improper intervention. These are local officers, chosen and qualified according to law, and with whom the President has no right to interfere. Why are these officers all removed, and this power to appoint them taken out of the hands of the people and given to the President? Is it that he may fill their places with such men as Calhoun? Can any other reason be rendered? The people have a right to appoint these officers. And no law giving this authority to the President, was ever before devised or enacted."

"Never before devised or enacted," forsooth! I charge that the gentleman within ten days before that bill passed, had voted for the organization of a board to conduct an election in Kansas, clothed with exactly similar powers. The Montgomery amendment is to these gentlemen worse than Banquo's ghost. It haunts their every footstep. I read its third section thus:

"That, for the purpose of insuring, as far as possible, that the elections authorized by this act may be fair and free, the Governor and Secretary of the Territory of Kansas, and the presiding officers of the two branches of its Legislature, namely, the President of the Council and Speaker of the House of Representatives, are hereby constituted a board of commissioners to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and to use all the means necessary and proper to that end. Any three of them shall constitute a board; and the board shall have power and authority, in respect to each and all of the elections hereby authorized or provided for, to designate and establish precincts for voting, or to adopt those already established; to cause polls to be opened at such places as it may deem proper in the respective counties and election precincts of said Territory; to appoint, as judges of election, at each of the several places of voting, three discreet and respectable persons, any two of whom shall be competent to act; to require the sheriffs of the several counties, by themselves or deputies, to attend the judges at each of the places of voting, for the purpose of preserving peace and good order; or the said board may, instead of said sheriffs and their deputies, appoint, at their discretion, and in such instances as they may choose, other fit persons for the same purpose; and when the purpose of the election is to elect delegates to a convention to form a constitution, as hereinbefore provided for, the number of delegates shall be sixty, and they shall be apportioned by said board among the several counties of said Territory, according to the number of voters; and in making this apportionment, the board may join two or more counties together to make an election or representative district, where neither of the said counties has the requisite number of votes to entitle it to a delegate, or to join a smaller to a larger county having a surplus population, where it may serve to equalize the representation. The elections hereby authorized shall continue one day only, and shall not be continued later than sundown on that day. The said board shall appoint the day of election for each of the elections hereby authorized, as the same may become necessary. The said Governor shall announce, by proclamation, the day appointed for any one of said elections, and the day shall be as early a one as is consistent with due notice thereof to the people of said Territory, subject to the provisions of this act. The said board shall have full power to prescribe the time, manner, and places of each of said elections, and to direct the time and manner of the returns thereof, which returns shall be made to the said board, whose duty it shall be to announce the result by proclamation."

Its provisions are the same; its language is almost the same. The same powers are granted to the board by each. The only difference is, that in the one case the board consists of four, and in the other, of five members; that in the one case provision is made for an election of delegates, which is omitted in the other. "Never devised!" Why, sir, it had been devised by both Montgomery and Crittenden, and had been voted for by the gentleman himself before the conference committee copied it into their bill—yes, long before the committee was organized. Again, the gentleman says:

"VI. By the third section, all white male inhabitants who could vote under the law for the election of the Legislature in October last, and no others, are allowed to vote. By this law, no person who had not been for six months previous an actual resident, could vote at that election. This law only added an additional disqualification of six months' residence, and in no other respect altered or repealed the general law."

"1. Under this act of Congress, and the laws of Kansas, a citizen, to be entitled to vote, must have resided six months in the Territory. This will exclude thousands of bona fide citizens; all who have gone there this season, although actual and permanent residents of Kansas, and as much entitled to a voice in framing its organic law, under which they are to live, as any other citizens. Emigration is greatly in favor of the free State party, and therefore this six months' disqualification and this exclusion!"

"2. Must have paid a territorial tax. This, if enforced, will exclude thousands more, in fact a great majority of the free State party."

I might show the gross inaccuracy of this statement—that it is the merest perversion of the law. I will not stop to do it. I take the charge exactly as the gentleman states it, and I affirm that he voted to require the same qualifications for voters. The conference bill provides:

"Sec. 3. And he it further enacted, That, in the election hereby authorized, all white male inhabitants of said Territory, over the age of twenty-one years, who possess the qualifications which were required by the laws of said Territory for a legal voter at the last general election for members of the Territorial Legislature, and none others, shall be allowed to vote; and this shall be the only qualification required to entitle the citizens to the right of suffrage in said election."

The Montgomery amendment, the special pet of the New York gentleman, provides:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in the elections hereby authorized, all white male inhabitants of said Territory over the age of twenty-one years, who are legal voters under the laws of the Territory of Kansas, and none others, shall be allowed to vote; and this shall be the only qualification required to entitle the voter to the right of suffrage in said election."

The qualifications of voters in Kansas on the 1st of April, 1858, the day of the passage of the Montgomery amendment, were exactly the same as at the last election for members of the Legislature in October, 1857. The free-State Legislature met in January, 1858, and was to have repealed every act of the "bogus Legislature," but it did not change the qualifications of voters. They remain exactly as they have been for more than a year past.

Again, and worse than all, the gentleman says:

"When voters are challenged, these party judges of election can swear the voter, if he is of their party; and, if he thinks or claims to be a voter, his evidence is conclusive and cannot be contradicted; but if he is a free State voter, the judges can 'receive other evidence'; and then, if the voter is sworn, his evidence is not conclusive. It is, then, a question of evidence, for the judges to decide. In one case, the vote must be admitted; in the other, it can and will be rejected! Is not this law as fair and as impartial as the party board of commissioners, or as the judges they will appoint to administer it?"

This statement is his interpretation of a section of the Kansas election law, which the gentleman quotes in another portion of his speech. He will not dispute the authority. It runs thus:

"The general law also provides that when a voter is challenged the judges of the election may examine him touching his right to vote, and, if so examined, no evidence to contradict him shall be received; or the judges may, in the first instance, receive other evidence, in which event, the applicant may, if he desire it, demand to be sworn; but his testimony shall not then be conclusive."

I leave without comment the text and the interpretation. I am satisfied that it will require more than an ordinary amount of that charity which "thinketh no evil" to believe that the gentleman was diligently and laboriously seeking its true meaning. But I forbear to trespass longer. When the gentleman shall have established the fairness of his criticisms, and the accuracy of his statements in these particulars, to which I have called attention; when he shall have reconciled the consistency of his vote on the Montgomery amendment with the speech which he has made, I shall be prepared to call his attention to other interesting portions of his remarks.

In the mean time, I would suggest to the gentleman, and all others interested, that when they voted for the Montgomery amendment they took up their residence in a glass house, out of which it is very dangerous to throw stones at those who voted for the conference bill.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

SPEECH OF HON. W. L. UNDERWOOD, OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 10, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the bill making appropriations for the support of the Navy, and particularly having under consideration the amendment of Mr. Bockock, providing for the construction of ten sloops-of-war—

MR. UNDERWOOD said:

MR. CHAIRMAN: It will afford me pleasure to vote for the increase of the Navy provided for in the amendment of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. Bockock.] I think it proper, however, to observe that I shall do so without any special reference to our relations with Great Britain. However unpleasant these relations are, and however unwarrantable has been the conduct of her ships of war in the Gulf of Mexico, I am yet of the opinion that no war will grow out of it. I am gratified to have afforded me, in the reputed action of her Britannic Majesty's Minister in this country, and in that of her admiral in command of her American squadron, unmistakable proofs that the conduct of those of her naval officers in the Gulf of Mexico who have violated the sacred immunities of the American flag upon the high seas, and in the harbor of Sagua le Grande, will be disavowed, and perhaps punished. I trust that this will be the case, for it would seem to me passing strange that Great Britain should desire to involve herself at this or at any time in war with this country. She cannot be ignorant that at no time and under no circumstances will the United States submit to the degradation of having her vessels stopped upon the high seas and subjected to the humiliation of search—no less offensive to her when called by the plain Anglo-Saxon word SEARCH, than the more euphonious word visitation, with which it is attempted to be glossed; but that, by whatever name called and under whatever pretext exercised, the United States will resist it to the utmost of her power, to the latest moment, and the last extremity. Her past history has afforded some evidence of this, and her future action will confirm it.

I will not, however, in this connection, do Great Britain injustice, or pander, in the least degree, to the prejudices of our people, perhaps, from the recollections of the past, too easily excited against her. The people of America, its only sovereigns, have the right to know the facts; and that public servant who dares to deceive or mislead them, deserves the severest condemnation. I do not understand that in the recent interferences with American vessels in the Gulf of Mexico, to which I am referring, the British authorities claim either the right of visitation or search of American vessels on the high seas. Did they do so, I am free to say I should regard their conduct as little less than acts of war, to be resisted and punished by the utmost power of this Government, at every hazard. And such I am sure would be the spontaneous voice of the whole people, outbursting from every part of our entire country. I rejoice, then, that they place those interferences upon no such ground. The ground I understand them to assume is this: that the Government of the United States, claiming, as a fundamental proposition, that her flag covers and protects all that sail under it from visitation and search, has been prostituted, as Great Britain says, by vessels of other nations, who perfidiously hoist and sail under it, to carry on the nefarious slave trade, which the United States was the first to declare to be piracy; that the lofty humanity of her early statesmen, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, Clay, Calhoun, and Adams, appealing to the humanity of Great Britain herself, and to the other leading nations of Europe, induced her and most of them to unite with the United States in the denunciation, as piracy, of this most cruel and indefensible traffic; that, accepting these denunciations in spirit and in truth, believing it to be the inclination and the true intent of the United States to suppress it, and, most of all, believing that the United States would be the first to resist the unauthorized use of her flag by vessels of other nations, fraudulently to carry on said trade, as Great Britain asserts is being done, to a very great extent, at this time, in the Gulf of Mexico, she has stopped such vessels in that Gulf as her cruisers suspected to be engaged in the slave trade, to see merely whether they are in fact American, or whether they have not falsely and perversely assumed the American flag, whilst they in truth were vessels of some other nation, which, under treaties with such other nation, they had the right to visit, disclaiming the right to visit such vessels if, in truth, they are American, or to seize or arrest them if found to be American, though loaded with a cargo of slaves fresh from Africa.

I will not now stop to criticise the sufficiency of this explanation. I must be permitted to say that there are difficulties in it resulting from the nature of the delicate rights involved. That to admit it, as a general principle of action, would be to place the right of visitation or of search of our vessels at the caprice or upon the irresponsible judgment or suspicion of every British cruiser; whilst to demand that the assumption of the American flag by a known pirate marauding the seas should in all cases exempt her from visitation, to ascertain her true character, and from capture, would be to assert the immunity of the worst of criminals in the perpetration of the blackest crimes that disgrace the world. But it is no part of my present purpose to discuss the right of visitation or search. I shall rejoice if the recent untoward circumstances in the Gulf shall result in a wise adjustment of these delicate and intricate questions of international law, and shall indulge the hope that the two greatest and first nations of the earth, approaching their consideration with a dignified forbearance, whilst uniting to suppress the perpetration of crime upon the seas, may consolidate their permanent peace, on which so much depend the best interests of mankind. I shall be content, therefore, to leave these great questions with the President and his constitutional advisers in the treaty-making power, for such negotiations as the occasion may warrant, yet confidently expressing the opinion that he will fall far below the just expectation of his countrymen, if he permits them to lapse in the lazy, laggard stream of listless and interminable negotiation. This is a practical age; we are a practical people; and it is necessary that these questions come to a speedy and practical end.

It is not, therefore, in reference specially to those questions with Great Britain that I shall vote for the small increase of our naval strength contemplated in the amendment before us. There are general considerations of vast interest, growing out of the unparalleled extension of our commerce, now whitening with its sails, and darkening with its smoke, the remotest waters of the world, why our naval force should be enlarged to guard and protect it. But it is not my purpose to enlarge upon these obvious considerations.

My chief object, Mr. Chairman, in addressing the committee, was to bring to its knowledge, and to that of the country, an outrage of unprecedented atrocity committed upon our citizens, by another Power than Great Britain, and which, for want of the slightest naval force in the contiguous seas, remains "unwhipped of justice."

Mr. Chairman, in the early part of the session, in a few brief remarks, I called the attention of the House to the butchery of Colonel Crabb and his men—and of other American citizens, in no wise connected with him, or participants in his enterprise—in the province of Sonora, one of the States of the Mexican Republic. The House aided me on that occasion, in calling on the President for such information as was in the Executive Departments of the Government, in relation to these most tragical and terrible events. In due time that information was furnished, and on my motion it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I regret that that committee has not thought proper to give to the House the benefit of their wisdom and suggestions upon this certainly very important subject. I have, however, no complaints to make against them, and only regret that their estimate of its importance must have fallen very far below my own. Having waited until near the close of our session, I shall be pardoned, in the absence of any report from them, in giving briefly to the country the facts disclosed by the report from the Secretary of State in answer to the call for information introduced by me as just stated, and such other information as I have been able to collect from reliable sources in regard to these most tragic and painful events. These facts are so well embodied and forcibly stated in the note of our Minister, Mr. John Forsyth, to the Mexican Minister of Foreign Relations, Senor Don Juan Antonio de la Fuente, dated May 30, 1857, that I present them in his language:

"It appears that, in the latter part of the year last past and in the beginning of the present year, in the State of California, certain persons formed themselves gradually into a party for the purpose of engraving thence, either into the territory known as the 'Gadsden Purchase' of the United States, or into the State or department of Sonora, Mexico. That both of these points of destination were frequently mentioned by the public press of California, accompanied by intimations, more or less broad, as to the possible unlawful ulterior designs of the party in question. That the general management and leadership of this party was intrusted to Henry A. Crabb, Esq., a well known and influential citizen of California, allied by marriage with wealthy Mexican families, natives of Sonora, and possessing there large interests and influence. That the formation of this party was known and spoken of, and its probable movements and motives freely discussed by the press of California and of this country for a considerable period of time previous to its appearance on Mexican soil. That ample time was had by the Mexican Government, in case of suspicion or doubt as to the real objects in view of this party, to prepare for and meet it whenever and wherever it should enter, if at all, in Mexican territory, and then and there, in the manly spirit of a civilized and honorable nation at peace with the Government of the members of this party, examine promptly, fairly, and legally, into the character and designs of the intruders, and acquit and free, or condemn and punish, according as the accused might have been found innocent or guilty of the charges preferred. That in the month of March last, Mr. Crabb, with some one hundred of his companions, entered the State of Sonora. That he, with his followers, were at Sonora on the 25th of that month. That on that day he addressed a communication to the prefect of Altar, in which he clearly stated that he and his companions had come to Sonora in obedience to the positive invitations of the most influential citizens of that State, and for the purpose of settlement and residence therein, in conformity with the provisions of the colonization laws of the country. That there was no intention, on the part of the immigrant party, of committing any offense whatever, and that it was not connected in any way with intrigues, either public or private. That the party were armed, it is true, but only in the manner necessary for self-protection, when passing through a region of country constantly subject to the depredations of the Apache savages. That subsequently Mr. Crabb and his companions proceeded to the town of Caborca, where, without parley, without inquiry as to their purposes, without opportunity for explanation, they were surrounded and assaulted by several hundred Mexican troops. That, after a severe engagement, Mr. Crabb and his surviving companions surrendered and were taken prisoners. That almost immediately thereafter these prisoners, some of them severely wounded, were, with the exception of a lad of tender age, summarily and mercilessly put to death. That some days after this terrible tragedy, another party of sixteen Americans, traveling with a loaded wagon through the country, were, on the suspicion, as is alleged in excuse, of belonging in some way to the party of Mr. Crabb, and of having military stores, suddenly seized, and were, without contest, offense, open provocation, or subsequent trial, also summarily and mercilessly put to death; and finally, that the Government of Mexico has thus far, and so far as the knowledge of the undersigned extends, neglected to institute an examination into these occurrences so terrible in themselves, and fraught, it may be, with the most serious and untoward consequences.

"The foregoing is an epitome of the history of this horrible affair, as some time foreshadowed by the public press, and as given by the authorities of Sonora to the supreme Government; and it is with this state of the facts that the undersigned has now to deal, although he is prepared to read a more extenuating version of them when the history of the unfortunate expedition comes to be written, not by its own side, for alas! Sonora vengeance has spared not one to tell the tale, but by its friends in the United States."

Not satisfied with this work of blood and murder, which they had perfidiously accomplished on their own soil, on the night of the 18th of April, 1857, these Mexicans invaded the soil of the United States, and then and there, in cold blood, took from their beds four sick American citizens at the house of Mr. Dunbar, and deliberately murdered them, leaving their bodies unburied to be devoured by the beasts of the field. Another party of Americans headed by Mr. Hughes, twenty-six in number, were attacked by three hundred Mexicans, but fought their way to the levee, losing only four men, one of whom was Hughes himself, whose heart, and hands, and ears, were brought into Altar on a spear. A blacksmith, an American, living a few miles from Caborca, who had been only guilty of shoeing some mules for Mr. Crabb, although for many years a peaceful resident of that country, was also by the Mexicans cruelly murdered. The following is given by Mr. Charles B. Smith, United States vice consul at Mazatlan, as a correct resumé of the murders committed: Sixty-nine of Crabb's party surrendered, of whom sixty-eight were shot; the party with the wagons, sixteen; Hughes's party, four; at Sonora, on United States soil, four; blacksmith near Caborca, one; Dr. H. L. Evans, of whom I will speak hereafter, one; total ninety-four.

It is seen above that only one of Crabb's party was spared. He was a boy named Charles Edward Evans, aged fifteen years. I will let him narrate, in his own simple language, the story of the most horrible deed ever perpetrated anywhere or under any circumstances before, upon American citizens:

Personally appeared before me, Charles B. Smith, United States vice consul for the port of Mazatlan, Charles Edward Evans, who, being by me duly sworn, deposed and set forth as follows:

"That he was born in the city of New Orleans, on the 25th day of December, 1842, and that he removed to the State of California in the year 1849, in company with his mother and step-father, where deponent constantly resided until the year 1857.

"And deponent further declares that, on the 19th day of January, 1857, he being then at the town of Sonora, Tuolumne county, State of California, he on that day joined an expedition at that time organizing in the town of Sonora, and known as an expedition bound to Sonora, Mexico, for the purpose of mining, and, in company with about thirty men of said county, this deponent left Sonora on the following day en route for San Francisco, where they arrived on the 21st day of the same month, and on the same day embarked on board the steamer Sea Bird, for San Pedro, accompanied by the Sonora members of the expedition, and thirty or forty more members of the same expedition that had joined at San Francisco.

"Deponent further declares that, on the 24th day of January, they arrived at San Pedro, and after disembarking from the steamer, took up their line of march for El Monte, Los Angeles county, where they arrived on the following day, and after remaining there for one week for the purpose of purchasing horses, mules, wagons, and provisions, took up their route for Fort Yuma, on the Colorado river, where they arrived on the 27th day of February, stopping one week on the way at Warner's ranch, the company then consisting of ninety men and two wagons, containing provisions; part of the men being mounted, and part on foot; Mr. Crabb acting in command of the expedition, assisted by Mr. McCoun, Mr. N. B. Wood, and Mr. David S. McDowell.

"And deponent further declares, that the expedition remained at Fort Yuma one week, during which time one Doctor Evans left the expedition and proceeded on to Sonora alone; and that after recruiting the animals at Fort Yuma, the expedition started for Sonora about the 4th of March, and arrived at the pueblo of Sonoyta on the 25th day of the same month, where it remained for two days, when Mr. Crabb, accompanied by sixty-eight (68) men, among whom was deponent, left Sonoyta for Caborca on the 27th day of March, leaving twenty (20) men and one wagon behind at Cabeza Prieta, under command of Mr. McKinney. And deponent further declares that, on the morning of the 1st of April, they being then distant about half a mile from the town of Caborca, and when quietly pursuing their way on the road, between wheat fields, and being in no kind of military array, and riding in careless order, without scouts in advance, and they not being, or ever having been, under any military discipline or organization, nor anticipating fighting or expecting any resistance to their entrance into the Mexican territory, they were suddenly fired upon, at eight o'clock, a. m., by about one hundred and fifty men, lying in ambush; and deponent declares that the Americans continued their way towards Caborca, being constantly fired upon by the men in ambush, and that the Americans returned the fire whenever an enemy could be seen.

"Deponent says, that about four hundred yards from the houses comprising the town, the lane they had up to that time been marching through, opened into a clear open space, which had to be crossed by the Americans before they could gain the shelter of the houses, and that while the Americans were crossing that space they were fired upon in every direction by Mexican soldiers from behind houses, and fences, and any other shelter that could conceal an enemy; and deponent declares, that the Americans immediately proceeded to a row of adobe houses, fighting on the principal street, and that the Mexican troops proceeded to take possession of the church opposite, and that upon gaining the shelter of the houses they were protected from the fire of their opponents, but found that two more had been killed belonging to their party, and three mortally wounded, who died the same night; deponent says the names of the killed were Clark Small, [for Smole,] and a man nicknamed Shorty; and the names of the mortally wounded were John George, Clark, a lawyer of Livingston, El Monte, and William Cheney.

"Deponent further declares, that fifteen others, Americans, were wounded before reaching the shelter of the houses, and which they did reach at nine o'clock, a. m., on the 1st of April, after about one hour's hard fighting, and where they remained in comparative security, although constantly exposed to shots from the church, until two o'clock, p. m., when an attack was planned and made upon the church, composed of fifteen persons, and commanded by Mr. Crabb, who took with them a keg of powder for the purpose of blowing open the doors of the church; deponent declares that Mr. Crabb and the fifteen men aforesaid sallied out from the house and crossed the street to the church, exposed to a very heavy fire from all quarters, and after five men had been killed of the said fifteen, and seven more wounded, among which was Mr. Crabb, wounded in the arm, above the elbow, they were satisfied that they could not attain their object to blow open the door of the church, and returned to their quarters, where they remained closely besieged until the coming of the 6th day of April, when the roof of their quarters was set on fire; deponent further declares that a keg of gunpowder was then set off in the room over which the fire was burning, to extinguish the flames, but which did not succeed, and overtures were then made to the besiegers by the Americans to surrender, to which the Mexican authorities in command replied that the Americans should be treated as prisoners of war.

"Deponent further declares that, upon this information being received, Mr. Crabb sent a Mr. Hines with a flag of truce to arrange definitely the terms of capitulation. The Mexican commander would not permit the said Hines to return to the American party; but Hines called out to the Americans that the Mexican commander promised to send the Americans to Altar, and give them a fair and impartial trial, on condition that they would march out of the house, one by one, leaving their arms behind them.

"Deponent further declares, that Mr. Crabb requested his brother-in-law, Mr. Cortezon, to inquire again of the Mexican commander how he would treat the Americans upon surrendering themselves; to which the said commander, Gabilondo, replied that they all should have a fair trial, and Mr. Crabb then directed Mr. Cortezon to inquire how the Americans wounded would be provided for; to which the said Gabilondo replied that he had a good physician, and that they would be all well cared for; and deponent declares that he heard Gabilondo say that he kept his word, for he did have a good physician for them.

"Deponent says that Mr. Cortezon, while holding the before mentioned conversation with the said Gabilondo, was standing in the door of the American quarters, and Gabilondo was posted in the belfry of the church; and some of the Americans were still unwilling to surrender; but upon being told by Mr. Crabb that he believed they might rely upon the promises of the Mexicans, they finally consented to lay down their arms, and marched over to the convent one by one, deponent among their number, and had their hands crossed together and tied, and were then marched to the barracks, where they arrived at eleven o'clock, p. m.

"Deponent says that shortly afterwards Mr. Crabb was separated from the rest of the Americans, and had an interview with the Mexican commanding officer, and that when he returned the sentries would not allow him to hold any conversation with the rest of the Americans, and that about one hour after midnight a sergeant came in and read the sentence in Spanish, that all were to be shot at sunrise the next morning, which sentence was interpreted to the Americans by the said Mr. Cortezon, and the names of all the men present were written down by Colonel N. B. Wood, and the list was handed to Gabilondo.

"And deponent further declares that about two o'clock, a. m., he was awake out of his sleep, and his hands were unbound, and he was taken out from his companions, and at daylight he started for Altar in company with the aforesaid Gabilondo, and arrived at Altar at eight o'clock, a. m., the same day, where he remained, by the directions of Gabilondo, and two days afterwards returned to Caborca in company of Gabilondo, and there saw the bodies of the murdered Americans scattered over the burying ground; and deponent says that the bodies were stripped bare of every particle of clothing, and lay exposed without burial; and deponent saw that the remains of the bodies had been very much mutilated by coyotes and hogs; and deponent furthermore declares that he heard some Mexicans say that their hogs would fatten on the carcasses of Yankees; and that the stink arising from the dead bodies was nauseating in town; and that the presence of the hogs was unbearable from their contact with carrion; and that he was shown the gold taken from the teeth of some of the Americans, and that he was also taken to see the head of Mr. Crabb, which was lifted from an earthen jar filled with vinegar, by the hair, and shown to deponent, and deponent declares that he knew it to be the head of Mr. Crabb; and that he heard Gabilondo dispatch an officer and sixty or seventy men to Sonoyta."

There is one more unfortunate, whom I have not named, except to list him in the number of the dead. But for him, perhaps my attention had never been called to this awful tragedy. He is Doctor Henry L. Evans, a native of my State and district. Three of his brothers are amongst the most estimable of my constituents; and their fraternal devotion to him, thank God, has not permitted one of the most direful tragedies, by which our countrymen have been murdered and our country disgraced, to fade, as yet, from the memories of men. They alone have attempted to call the attention of the executive department of the Government to the enormities under which their brother fell; and it is melancholy to have to acknowledge upon what cold ears their murmurs have fallen. Doctor Evans's story is briefly told. Before crossing the line which separated the United States from Sonora, he took Mr. Crabb aside, and, pointing to the flag of his country floating over Fort Yuma, said to him: "General Crabb, before I leave the protection of that flag, I wish to know where I am going, and what I am going to do;" to which the General replied: "If you do not know by this time, I cannot enlighten you any more." "This," replied the Doctor, "is too vague; I must have something more clear and explicit, General, or I must leave you." "If you leave, Doctor," replied General Crabb, "you had better do so now; for if you leave after crossing the Colorado, you will be considered a deserter, and looked after accordingly." The Doctor immediately left, and henceforth was in no way identified or associated with Colonel Crabb or his enterprise, whether it was good or whether it was evil. He proceeded alone to Altar. There he was taken prisoner on suspicion, because he was an American. He was released on parole. So soon as Colonel Crabb and his men were shot, he was rearrested, and, without trial, murdered by the authorities in cold blood. This was the last act in this drama of blood. The recital of these outrages—wholesale murders of our people and invasions of our soil—is enough to make the blood rush freezing to the heart.

But should it not rather mantle the cheek of every American citizen with profound mortification and shame that they have been suffered and endured without the first step being taken by our Government to prevent or redress them? In one of the letters of my friend, Colonel W. J. Evans, a brother of the doctor, to Secretary Cass, dated December 11, 1857, with the modesty of true merit almost abashed when venturing to address the quasi royalty of an American Minister, he observes:

"I had hoped to see some allusion to this subject in the President's annual message; but he has said nothing about it. Will you be kind enough, if not incompatible with the duties of your official position, to tell me whether the matter will be laid before Congress? I know of no course which I could pursue upon the subject except through our Government."

Deluded man! how "could you have hoped to see some allusion" to the murder of ninety-four of your countrymen in cold blood, without trial, and without offense, by a foreign nation, in the President's annual message, when that distinguished functionary was at that time so much engaged in seeing how well he could suppress the will of the people at home, in Kansas? The voice of the dead crying for vengeance was not heard or heeded by him then, in his efforts to stifle the voice of the living crying for freedom, and demanding the right to form their domestic institutions in their own way. True, his attention had been called to these assassinations as early as May or June previous, by the masterly note of our Minister, Mr. John Forsyth, and by Colonel W. F. Evans, on the 28th of August; and true, that the newspaper press, from one end of the Republic to the other, was teeming with expressions of burning indignation and shame on account of these enormities; but no matter, the President was otherwise engaged, and could give it no place in his message, because he gave it, I suppose, but little in his thought. On the 27th November, 1857, Mr. L. W. Evans, of De Soto county, Mississippi, a brother of the unfortunate Dr. H. L. Evans, struggling with his sorrow, and a just sense that it became his Government to do something in regard to his murder, "with reluctance," as he says, addressed a letter to the President himself, in which he said:

"My object in writing to you is, to know if our Government will take notice of this transaction, or shall his brother, and other relatives, as private citizens of the United States, make an effort to obtain satisfaction from the citizens of Mexico who were engaged in the murder of Dr. Evans?"

The President did not deem it necessary to answer this letter, written to him personally, and narrating, with modest dignity, the sad story of his brother's murder. I should have been glad to have seen an American President sufficiently touched with human sympathy, and by a brother's sorrow, and less enveloped in robes of official dignity and power of presidential etiquette, to have answered this letter with his own hand. Not so, however. It was passed over, officially and formally, to the Secretary of State, and answered some time thereafter by him; and for all that the President has done, "his brother, and other relatives, as private citizens of the United States, must make an effort to obtain satisfaction from the citizens of Mexico who were engaged in the murder of Dr. Evans."

Nor are these murders and assassinations all that our imbecile Administration is tamely and sleepily submitting to in Sonora. At this day, and ever since the murder of Crabb and his men, they have had an American citizen, J. M. Ainsa, incarcerated in their jails and dungeons. For a while they had also imprisoned a brother of his, Jesus Ainsa, and Rasey Beven, whose only supposed offense was their knowledge of the invitations under which Colonel Crabb had emigrated to Sonora, and the damning perfidy with which he had been received. The imprisonment of J. M. Ainsa has been so heartless, unjustified, and protracted, and the conduct of our General Government so callous in regard to it, that the State of California has thought it necessary to make it the subject of special resolution, which I here append:

"Whereas, J. M. Ainsa, an American citizen, pursuing a peaceful occupation on American soil, was, on the night of the 10th or 11th of April, 1857, arrested by an armed band of Mexicans, at the store of Messrs. Belknap & Dunbar, in the Gadsden Purchase, and conducted thence, a prisoner in chains, to Hermosillo, and thence to the port of Guaymas, in Sonora, where he has since been detained a captive; and whereas, it is the duty of the American Government, at all times, and under all circumstances, to protect the lives and property of its citizens: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the Governor of California be instructed, and he is hereby authorized, to communicate with the President of the United States, setting forth these facts, and such other testimony as may be furnished him in the premises, and requesting that officer to use the power of the General Government, so far as he is enabled, to effect the release of the said Ainsa, and his restoration to all the rights and immunities of which he was possessed before said arrest and imprisonment.

"Resolved, That the Governor be requested to forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States and each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

In addition to all these, Evans was robbed; Crabb and his men were all stripped and robbed; even the gold used in dental operations in their mouths was taken; and Dunbar's store, on American soil, "was broken open, and everything of value taken therefrom; books, papers, &c., scattered in confusion." It was at this place he four sick men were shot. Dunbar, in a few words, tells their fate. He was from home at the time, but says: "From the traces on the bank, the feeble men appeared to have slid and rolled down the bank, and all scattered to different points, and thus shot. Thus their bodies lay with gun-shot wounds. Some Papago Indians soon came up and burned their bodies near the well." Notwithstanding all these mighty appeals, by cruel murder, robbery and imprisonment; by tender affection, and by State intervention, President Buchanan remains quiet, unconcerned and inactive. He is very industriously engaged, it is said, (and truly, I believe), in punishing his friends who opposed his Kansas policy, commonly called "the Lecompton swindle;" but he has no time to take the first step towards punishing the enemies of his country, who have perpetrated these damning enormities. Why, sir, will you believe me, that notwithstanding our Minister in Mexico, immediately on their occurrence in April, 1857, had fully informed our Government of the facts in these cases, and then asked its instructions, he had again, on the 20th of September, to beg instructions which up to that time had not been given him? And so far as appears from the papers communicated to Congress under my call for official information and correspondence in relation to the execution of Colonel Crabb and his associates, and which purport to be all the correspondence on the subject, no instructions have been given to him since upon the subject.

In his dispatch of the 20th of September, our gallant minister uses this just and strong language:

"I implore the Government, for the honor of the American name, and for the sake of an outraged humanity, which cries for justice in American accents, from so many dungeons on the Pacific coast, not to let pass these two ripe occasions to dissipate the dishonoring and fatal belief which has strong hold in all that region, that the United States lack either the will or the power to protect her children and their flag abroad."

This appeal, one would have hoped, should have aroused the American President from his palsied lethargy. But this was not enough. Anxious friends of the murdered looked in vain "to see some allusion to this subject in the President's annual message;" but he has said nothing about it.

Thus have I briefly given the miserable fate which befell Colonel Crabb and his men, and our Government's as miserable apathy concerning them. One word concerning him and the object of his mission to Sonora. He was a man of no ordinary merit. Bold, chivalrous, talented, and true, he had the genius to conceive and the courage to undertake the most romantic enterprises. He had held high offices in California, and was esteemed and loved as widely as he was known. Efforts have been made to produce the impression that his enterprise to Sonora was an enterprise of filibusterism, with a view to overturn its Government and take possession of its territory. And I will do the people—not her officers or leaders—the justice to say that they no doubt believed this. Yet I take it on myself, from all the evidences before me, to declare, that such a purpose or intent is totally without proof, and, in every objectionable sense, totally without foundation. That Colonel Crabb, being the man I have described, may have entertained ulterior hopes in regard to Sonora, I will neither undertake to affirm or deny, leaving them to the conjectures which so naturally suggest themselves, that he anticipated to advance both his pecuniary and political fortunes in that province. But the fact is that he was invited to Sonora by some of its most influential citizens, with many of whom he was related by marriage. "That he entered its limits," according to his open, published declaration, promulgated and proclaimed at the time, "with one hundred followers, conformably to the colonization laws of Mexico, and with the intention of finding most happy firesides with and among her people. That he came with the intention of offending no one, and without public or private intrigue." And to this Government of ours there is not one solitary word or fact to contradict this manly and open declaration. His conduct after entering Sonora was consistent with his declarations. He had arms, as all Americans have arms when emigrating to new homes, and passing, as they had to do, through Indian tribes. They never used them in any offensive demonstration. They preserved no military discipline or order; and I have the authority of the warden of Sonoyta Rafael Valasio for saying "they arrived very scatteringly," and that their arms were all fired off on the road; and of the boy Evans, who says, when they were attacked at Caborca, "they were quietly pursuing their way on the road between wheat fields, and being in no kind of military array, and riding in careless order, without scouts in advance," &c. As to the four men killed at Dunbar's, the blacksmith and Dr. Evans, this pretext of filibusterism cannot be raised, and is not pretended.

From all these facts, it results that the constituted authorities of Sonora, regardless of the lowest dictates of humanity, prompted by no personal or political necessity resulting from the presence of immediate or imminent danger, violative of every principle of good neighborhood and hospitality, have basely and cowardly murdered ninety-four peaceful American citizens, pursuing in their midst the quiet paths of industry, or coming amongst them "with the intention of finding

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Western Advancement, etc.—Mr. Cox.

Ho. OF REPS.

most happy firesides." That all the resistance given by Crabb and his men was given pursuant to the first great law of nature—the right of self-defense and the instincts of self-preservation—when fired upon from ambuscades whilst "quietly pursuing their way on the road between wheat fields, and in no kind of military array," without notice, or parley, or call to surrender. That, after Crabb and his men had surrendered, whether they had been promised a fair trial or not, and no matter how unconditionally, then to rob them, strip them, tie them, and shoot them, were deeds of such unmitigated barbarism and atrocity as demands the execration of mankind. That this outrage and enormity, perpetrated on our countrymen who had not ceased to be citizens, because within the territory of Sonora, together with the unmitigated and inexcusable murder of four of our countrymen on our own soil, demanded the instant intervention of our Government and punishment of the offenders; and that our Government is recreant to the highest and holiest obligations to its citizens and to its honor, or even decency, if it permits such deeds as these without the sternest reprobation and the severest punishment. Let me quote, in this connection, the indignant and manly language of our Minister, Mr. Forsyth, in his masterly protest to the Mexican Government:

"The undersigned has read the cool official account of this slaughter by fusillade with those feelings of indignation and horror which will thrill through every manly bosom in the civilized world which its recital shall reach. Shooting unarmed prisoners without trial, and in cold blood! and this a deed done in the nineteenth century—a deed done by a Christian people, taught by a Christian priesthood in ten thousand temples of worship devoted to the inculcation of the benignant precepts of the mild Savior of mankind! The world had a right to hope that time and enlightened reason had banished from the war code of Christian nations of the Spanish tongue the principle and the practice of sacrificing in cold blood prisoners who had been spared by the fortune of war from the storm of battle, and that that great crime against humanity was henceforth only to be known to the wild savages of the forests and plains. Apart from its barbarity, it was to have been hoped that the horrid impolicy of the custom, and the retributive vengeance which, by Almighty fiat, is certain to follow, had been illuminated in letters of blood at Alamo and Goliad—blood which germinated a harvest of painful events in the history of Mexico.

"Taking the worst aspect of this case for Crabb and his men, admitting that they were outlaws and pirates, the undersigned charges that they have not had meted to them that even-handed justice which the laws of nations accord to the worst class of criminals against the human family. The pirate who roams the ocean with the black emblem of death at his mast-head; who robs and murders the people of all nations indiscriminately; who respects no flag, no nationality, no sex or tender age; who sets at defiance the laws of God and man; who is outlawed by the common consent of mankind, as hostis humani generis; even this monster of vice, when overcome in battle by the cruiser of a civilized State, is not put to death on the spot. By every law, human and Divine, the commander who should so deal with him would be accounted a murderer. Even this monster is entitled to a trial; and it is the duty of the naval officer who captures him to send him to a constituted tribunal on shore having jurisdiction of his crime.

"It is perfectly clear to the mind of the undersigned that, whether Crabb and his men were prisoners of war, and as such entitled to their lives, or pirates, and as such entitled to a trial—in either event, they have been unlawfully put to death."

One or two words more, Mr. Chairman, and I have done. In whatever view you regard the conduct of Colonel Crabb, whether as a peaceful emigration or a warlike invasion, and however you may regard the conduct of the officers and people of Sonora in the butcheries of which I have complained, this, at least, is certain: that it is the duty of this Government to prevent in future the recurrence of such horrible atrocities. The only peaceful method of doing this is to show ourselves ready and able to protect our citizens along the coast and within the limits of Sonora and the adjacent Mexican States, and, at the same time, to restrain every violation by our people of their rights in those tempting fields of enterprise and adventure. This can alone be done by a display of our naval force in the Gulf of California, which washes, for five hundred miles, its western border, with innumerable inlets and bays jutting into its interior; and the appointment of one or more consular agents to reside at convenient and appropriate localities. Let me read what our Minister to Mexico, Mr. Forsyth, says on this subject:

"I beg to urge again upon the Department the importance to the protection of American interests of the occasional display of the American flag in the ports of Mexico and on both coasts. It is nearly or quite two years since one of our cruisers has been seen in Mexican waters. Their occasional presence is absolutely necessary to protect our citizens, especially our seamen, from the abuse of power by rapacious local officials. Nearly all the cases of complaints made by our people to this legation spring from this source, and such is the state of the country, that the supreme Government, with the best intentions, (for it is the cause of immense trouble to, and endless reclamations against its treasury,) is not able to prevent it. An occasional visit by a naval commander, with instructions to inquire into personal American grievances, would produce a most happy effect, and save a great deal of loss and suffering. Their absence is attributed to weakness; and Mexican local officials, while having unbounded respect for the strong, are sure to prey upon the unprotected. This is a topic of constant communications to this legation from Americans in all parts of the country, and they complain bitterly and justly of their unprotected condition, especially in contrast to that of British and French subjects."

This extract leaves nothing to be added. It is itself a demonstration. The light draught sloops proposed are precisely adapted to visit and enter the various ports along the entire Mexican coast, and to excite the respect and to afford the protection, so essential to the interests of American commerce, the safety of our people, and the honor of our country. Whilst, at the same time, they would no less secure the provinces of Mexico against lawless invasions of our own people; guaranteeing, in this double influence, the best interests of both nations, by the economy which follows peace, and the peace which follows prudence.

WESTERN ADVANCEMENT—FEDERAL REVENUE, LOANS AND EXPENSES.

SPEECH OF HON. S. S. COX,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 12, 1858.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on House bill (No. 550) making appropriations for light-houses, &c.—

Mr. COX said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I made the motion to strike out of the bill the lines from sixty-seven to seventy-four from no special hostility to the appropriation included between those lines. That portion of the bill appropriates $69,900 for the commencement and completion of an iron screw-pile light-house at or near the entrance to the channel of the Mississippi river.

Mr. PENDLETON. What is an iron screw-pile light-house?

Mr. COX. That is what I would like to know. But this bill is for new structures, and it is rushed through with such speed as to defy investigation. The Clerk at the desk has read it with locomotive rapidity. There has scarcely been a crevice in which to slip in an amendment, or to ask an explanation.

I have no special hostility to New Orleans or Louisiana interests. I shall withdraw my amendment after I make my objections, because I see there is no use in stopping the progress of the bill. My objection is not to the bill as a part, but as a whole. It is sectional. It ignores the West. It is got up on salt-water principles. It is intended to help the Atlantic sea-board, with enough thrown in to obtain some western votes. The original bill reported calls for the sum of $290,000. Amendments are moved which will run it up to $330,000. Of this large sum, how much does the West get by the generosity of the reporting committee?

Wisconsin.....	$18,000 00
Michigan.....	11,000 00
Minnesota.....	5,000 00
	<hr/> $34,000 00

The balance of the appropriation of near three hundred thousand dollars is distributed along the Atlantic, from New Hampshire to Texas. The gentleman from Massachusetts, who reports the bill, gives to his own State $81,417 60. Florida and Texas wind up the line of "new lights" with the modest sum of $160,351 10. This, for a slim Treasury, would seem to be sufficiently modest.

I do not object to these sums for these points so much as I do to the discriminating policy of these bills. It is a policy which taxes the great West for improvements, which, while they are needed on the coast, are equally demanded on the western lakes and rivers.

It is the policy of a good government to foster such improvements. I have no prejudice against commerce. I have loved to contemplate, and shall always vote to foster, its benignant interchanges. For this great end, I would reciprocate the conduct of other maritime Powers for our and their benefit, and let the light shine abundantly at all the perilous points on our coast.

But there is a good and a bad mode of legislation on these bills of local improvement. These bills grow sectional under the managing hand of our committees. Our committees regulate these matters. As they report, so the House acts generally. And it is in view of the marked inequality of the distribution of these improvements that I oppose the bill.

Gentlemen cannot complain of our withholding protection to ocean commerce. The West has been generous in this regard. If she were more niggardly, she might have had more consideration. She does not "calculate" so much as our Atlantic States. It is high time she began it. Her own commerce, on river and lake, far exceeds that of the sea-board States. Her commerce is not so much endangered from the hostility of other nations; but it is in equal danger from the elements; from snag and rock, from storm and fire. I voted your ten sloops—not so much because I feared a war as because I wanted the peace kept, and your commerce protected from outrage by search and seizure. I will take the responsibility of that vote; but I will not of voting this bill.

This bill provides for new buildings. It is not a bill to supply old light-houses. When gentlemen wish new erections for their localities, they should be generous to others. Ohio pays one tenth of this expenditure. She is willing to pay it; but the snags remain in her beautiful river; and the lake which washes her northern boundary, and which bears a tonnage equal to that of Massachusetts, Florida, and Texas combined, is neglected. Her representative is compelled to come in by way of amendment to get enough to rebuild a light-house at Vermillion, which the storm has swept away.

A Senator from my State [Mr. PUGH] introduces a bill calling for $500,000 for the rivers and harbors of the West. The highest considerations of a great interest, constantly suffering, and ever urgent for relief, which he urges, are met by the cry, "Thin Treasury! We cannot do it now! Wait till our imports increase, and our revenues return as they were! Wait till trade revives and loans are paid! Wait till the embarrassments of individuals stop those of the Government, and a full Treasury comes again!" And on this almost unanswerable plea his bill for rivers and harbors is voted down; but bring in your Washington water-works and ask millions, and your Capitol extension in this city, and ask $1,000,000; and your city police, and your Washington gas, and your paving Pennsylvania avenue, and your city court and Patent Office extensions; and lo! the lamp of Aladdin, by some magic, makes the Treasury run, like the Pegasus, with gold! There is nothing too extravagant for this city and the sea-board for which the Treasury is not adequate! The country knows how we were compelled to fight a bill which gave $100,000 for a police in this city. I voted against it, as I did against the aqueduct and Capitol extension, and Georgetown bridges, and all that; because this city has no right to ask the people of Ohio to pay one tenth of any municipal tax. The Federal Government have paid out over a hundred millions in erecting buildings of palatial splendor here; and this very lavish extravagance is made the plea for granting more; for the complaint goes up, "Oh! we cannot tax your Government property, and therefore we must beg you for help out of the Federal Treasury to pay for policemen, gas, pavements, and tree planting." After the property of this city is yearly enhanced by millions in building Government structures, this very liberality is made the occasion of new demands for other largesses. After a while, as was said, they will want us to pay for the gold hat bands which are worn by the flunkies who drive their carriages, in their silly aping of the modes of the European aristocracy.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that the splendor of a nation does not lie in the wealth and extravagance of its pampered metropolis. The true glory of this nation is to be found elsewhere. Her new States, made up of men of simple habits, without artificial wants: these are the blossoms and fruits of our "secular majesty and magnificent strength." I am opposed to all these extravagant expenditures for the benefit of one section and of this metropolis. Let our appropriations take a wider scope and a more useful object.

But is it said that the officers of the Government are here; and that they are chosen equally from all parts of the Union? That will not do. Ohio has only fifty-three Federal employes in the Departments here. They receive, in all, $76,300. Ohio is entitled, by her relative strength, to one hundred and five employes, whose salaries would amount to $112,472 01. The District of Columbia is entitled to five in proportion to her population; but has three hundred and eighty-two employes, with salaries amounting to $425,613. Maryland has eighty-three; is entitled only to thirty; receives $118,780 in salaries; and is proportionately entitled to but $42,598 96. Virginia is entitled to sixty-five employes, with salaries amounting to $79,873 05; but there are one hundred and seventeen of her patriotic sons who consent to serve their country here, at salaries of $166,880! These facts are beginning to attract attention. They show the monopoly which is sought to be exercised over the Federal honors, offices, and emoluments, by those States and sections which pay less tax, and add less to the producing strength of the land. There is a power arising in the West which will one day—not far ahead, either—after the next census, in 1860, perhaps—correct these evils, while it looks after its own interests, so shamelessly neglected.

A few admonitory facts in this connection may not be amiss. The present rate of increase of the population of western States, particularly of the northwestern, indicates that by 1863, when the new congressional apportionment will be in operation, there will be on this floor, representing what may be called western interests, one hundred and twenty-five members out of two hundred and forty-one, if such should be the number of the House. Whatever the number, those States which have a common interest in western agriculture and commerce will have a preponderance. The Northwest alone will outnumber New York and New England. Where it now has fifty-three, it will have, under the next census, eighty—nearly one third of the whole number of Representatives. This will command a controlling influence. It will be sufficient to stop the suicidal cry of North and South. It will effectually estop this exclusive Atlantic predominance. Let the West repose in its might. It can afford to wait. The lines of empire are on the face of the cradled Hercules.

Thirty-eight years ago General Cass visited a village of ten or twelve houses, containing sixty people, by means of a bark canoe, by way of the Wisconsin river and Green bay. That village of 1820 is the Chicago of 1858, with one hundred and fifty thousand people. It is the terminus of more railroads than any other city of the Union, and has become the great grain depot of the world! This marvelous increase of one city is but the little forefinger, as it were, pointing out to the greater West; of a greater future than has yet been dreamed, when there shall be opened up to emigration and production the great plains of America, which lie between the meridian line which terminates the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, and Iowa, on the west, and the Rocky Mountains, out of which twenty-four new States will arise,—with the same abundance of resources which marks the States of the Mississippi valley!

These great interests will be cared for in time. But it would be well enough to look the future in the face, when justice is demanded of the Federal Government, and demanded only to be denied!

Again, I protest against gentlemen of the opposite party, who steadily vote these expenses for the sea-board and Washington city, placing all the responsibility for them on the Democratic side of the House. On every division on this light-house bill, most of those voting for it are of the other side. Let them take the responsibility, or, at least, share it. I will not shrink from my proper share. But so long as gentlemen meet our demands for western improvements with the answer of a slim Treasury, I want the same argument retorted on them when they come with their demands. I have voted against nearly all the large appropriations in committee, because I wanted to see the expenditures equalized, by giving equal shares where the interests were equal; and because I wanted to cut down expenses to the condition of the decreased importations and revenue.

I have shown that the demands of the West are imperative and just. I now wish to answer that demagogical clap-trap just now in vogue as to the condition of the Treasury. The opponents of the Democratic party are industriously active in creating the impression that the depression in the Treasury has a political cause. They attribute it, by innuendo, if not by expression, to the head of the Treasury, or of the Government, or to some official mismanagement somewhere, which they do not localize. It has no political cause. It has an economical cause. That cause is found in the financial revulsion of the past year. It is not necessary for my object now to enumerate the various causes which produced that revulsion. It may be found in the inherent badness of our paper-money system. It may be traced to speculation and extravagance; to excessive credits and ruinous railroad investments. It may have its origin in the exaggerated values affixed to property. It may be attributed to the vast increase of our foreign imports. All these causes are interdependent, more or less. They doubtless all had something to do with the revulsion. It is enough for my purpose to know that what so disastrously affected our trade proportionately affected our revenue. From one little fact learn all. The Journal of Commerce informs us that, at the port of New York, the total foreign imports for the month of May, 1858, were $7,250,552 less than for May, 1857, and $6,956,409 less than for May, 1856. Our imports at New York city, for the first five months of this year, are only $51,668,199; while for the first five months of last year they were $105,590,301. New York city is a criterion for the Union. Two thirds of all imports come in there. At that port, in five months, we have a falling off of imports amounting to $54,000,000. We are authorized to calculate, therefore, a decrease in our imports, for the past five months, for the whole country, of between seventy-five and eighty million dollars. It will, if continued, amount to $120,000,000 at the end of the year. This importation is the source of Federal taxation. From it we derive our revenue. Of course, the decrease of the revenue is proportionate. The revenue at New York, in May, 1858, is $1,748,227; while in May, 1856, it was $3,457,153. So that, while our Treasury is falling off in revenue, and our expenditures are kept up to the full standard of 1856-57—inaugurated by Republican prodigality—there is a necessary consequence that we should do one of three things:

1. Either modify the tariff so as to increase the revenue, and thus tax the people on articles of consumption now; or
2. Cut down the expenses to suit the revenue; or
3. Borrow money for the present to meet the deficiency.

The Democrats of the present Congress are averse to taxing the people just now, by modifying the tariff. It is not a time when they can bear such an increase. Mr. Cobb, in his report of the 19th of May, in asking for a loan to carry on the Government, says very truly:

"I do not recommend any measure for increased taxation. It would be unwise at this time to attempt a modification of the tariff act of March 3, 1857, for the reasons given in my annual report to Congress. Sufficient time has not elapsed to test the effects of that act upon the revenue, considering the condition of the country during the period of its operation. In addition to this consideration, neither the receipts nor the expenditures of the Government should be estimated for in the future, upon the basis of its present receipts and expenditures. The former have been, and still are, too seriously affected by the late revulsion to justify a policy of legislation based upon a probable continuance of this state of things for any considerable period of time."

As to the second alternative, a decrease of our expenses. That is always in order. It will be hard to err in that direction. Yet when Democrats are called on to vote to pay the obligations of the last Republican Congress, presided over by Speaker Banks, it is mean and dastardly to cipher them up as chargeable on the present Democratic House or Democratic Administration. Congress is responsible for these appropriations; not the Executive. The deficiency bill for printing alone, ordered by the last Congress, already passed, is $341,188. It is estimated that some three hundred thousand dollars more will be necessary. The present Congress has not ordered one half of the printing ordered by the last House. It is not probable, that, with all our Utah expenses, made necessary by the resistance to our authority there, that our expenses this year will overrun the expenses of last year, which were $65,032,559 76, after bringing over to the account of 1858 the balance in the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year of 1857. The analysis of these expenses is not now my object. That has been done by the able gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] whose argument convicts my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] of blunders, running up as high as forty millions! I wish simply to call attention to the fact, that the record will show that the great burden of the dispensable expenses of the last and this year, is chargeable to the Republican side of the House. Well might the Tribune call my colleague's speech partisan. Well might my colleague, when driven close to the wall, beg the able Virginian economist to press the subject home to the Republican side of the House; displaying, by his reluctant candor, the truth which his speech did not convey, that the Opposition were sadly in need of a better practice and a purer principle in economy.

We have been compelled to meet the expenses incurred by the orders of the last Congress, perhaps the most vicious Congress ever assembled in America. We are not, therefore, chargeable with them. While I will not withhold my vote for any necessary expenses, yet, wherever I can, I will dispense with all except those demanded by actual urgency; hence I shall vote against light-house bills like this, which require large expense and new buildings; hence, I vote against these Washington city gouges; for, if we are to be refused expenditure in the West on the ground of economy, now, why not apply the knife just here, in this very Hall! Let us begin it on ourselves. I think a great reform could be had, to the amount of five millions per year, in the franking privilege alone. I would vote to cut it off, provided it were done now. I dislike the mode proposed, of cutting it off a year hence, for the benefit of new members, and when there may not be such pressing need. Five millions, I say, would thus be saved; first, in the transportation of franked matter; and next, in cutting down the printing of books, which is encouraged by the frank.

It is a common practice, in discussions of this character, to show the expenses of our Government when we were young, and, by contrast with the present, to decry the present lack of economy. One of my colleagues, [Mr. SHERMAN,] in an able speech this session, after giving table after table of figures showing our expenses in the past, and comparing them with the present, did not give sufficient heed, in my humble judgment, to the great increase in all the departments of industry, and in all the resources of our fast-growing commonwealths. Here is a sample of this sort of fallacy, taken from his speech:

"The expenses of this year, the first under Mr. Buchanan's administration, will be $5,000,000 more than the entire expenses of the Government from its foundation to the close of Jefferson's administration. The aggregate expenses for the first twenty years of our Government were $78,363,762; and I have already shown that, this year, the expenses exceed $83,000,000."

Such statements prejudice, without convincing. There is no comparison to be drawn between such a remote era as the first twenty years of our Government and the present time. Since then we have had steam, steamships, steamboats, steam sea vessels of war, steam sea mail service. We have added since then to our area five-fold. We have more than doubled the States, and we have now six Territories. Within a half century what have we done? Moved the Indians west and further west of the Mississippi. We have given them missionaries and whisky, money and schools; and our Interior Department are trying to civilize all the War Department do not murder. We have made our land the principal cotton and the great grain-growing country of the world. Our marine now exceeds that of England in tonnage. Our manufacturers now compete with Europe in South America and in the Orient. We have increased our numbers within the half century nearly six-fold; for in 1808 our population was about six millions; we have increased our Federal expenses about twelve-fold, but our annual private income fifteen-fold!

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Granger.

HO. OF REPS.

There is no fairness in tables like those of my colleague, [Mr. SHERMAN,] which institute comparisons between different years, and which take the increase of population only as the test of a true ratio of increase in expenses. Conclusions from such premises may well be called "monsters of the imagination begotten upon a cloud of statistics." Why, it would be hardly fair to compare the expenses of ten or five years ago with those of the present. Last year our expenses were over sixty-five millions. In 1850 they were only $37,000,000. "What prodigality!" says the sophist. He ought not to say it till he remembers what empires we have opened since 1850, what new and great calls are made on our Treasury for the proper protection of added interests. In 1830 we had an expenditure of over thirteen millions. "Now," says the sophist, "it is nearly six times as much." Think of one fact in this connection, and you will not hastily conclude on such premises. In 1830 a writer in Philadelphia glories over the wonderful fact that whereas, in 1824, only about three thousand dollars in gold from domestic sources was sent to the Mint, then, in 1830, it had increased to $130,000. But, let me add, what a change since 1830! Now, our domestic yield of gold exceeds fifty millions per annum! There is but one criterion for the increase of our expenses. It is not the increase of our population. Such a ratio is an unfair test of true economy; but it is in the increase of all the interests in view of our increased national wealth, area, and importance. Whenever these interests and the honor of the nation do not demand it, our expenses must be kept down with rigid firmness.

As to the third mode of meeting the deficient revenue, by loan: that is a necessity which every patriot must meet. The credit of the Government must be preserved. The expectations of the Government from the last tariff have been foiled by the financial troubles. The expenses of the Government for this year have been somewhat increased by the Utah troubles, as well as by the naturally growing demands of our growing nation. It becomes us to meet these expenses in a patriotic spirit; to furnish means to preserve untarnished our national honor. Compared to the Governments of the Old World, loaded as they are with debts, our condition, at the worst, is happy. A hundred millions is no debt to a nation like ours, with its resources and its energies. We throw off such debts as lightly as a summer garment.

Far be it from me to encourage a system of national debt. If we need just now money in our exchequer, let us borrow it; trusting, as we may do, with reason, on the revival of business already begun, which will insure before long a revenue sufficient for expenses. Far better borrow than fill a Treasury to overflowing by a high tariff. Let the present tariff be first fully tested; and if it fail, in a fair season, to give us sufficient revenue, then let it be modified to suit the exigency. The reverses of 1837 were terrible. The country staggered under them for years. The reverses of 1857 are comparatively easy to be borne. We have now a better banking system, a more healthful curtailment of private expenditure, a better system of public finance—the sub-Treasury. We had not these twenty years ago. Already the disease of last year is wearing out. It is found not to be chronic. Individuals have economized manfully. Our decreased imports—which are the very cause of our loan bills and lank Treasury—show a recovery going on at once healthful and invigorating. So that our seeming disaster of an empty Treasury is the index of a restorative process which will bring prosperity.

In this light, who should complain of the ordeal? Who so unwise as to fret at the adversity we cannot help, but which is our best helper? Who so mean as to coin it into political counterfeits, to "bribe" (that is the word now) the people to sus-tain a false system of economy and a set of political quacks, who cry out against a bankrupt Treasury without inquiring into the true cause? The truth is, we are selling more while we are buying less abroad than formerly—selling much more in proportion to our purchases. Consequently, we are gathering up our energies for another period of prosperity—making another and higher grade of social advancement. At the end of the last Congress, the people bemoaned a heavy tax and a plethoric Treasury. The tax was easily borne, because indirect; the other became intolerable, because of its tendency to corrupt our political system. We have got rid of the full Treasury. We have only to correct the evils of the last Congress, frown down the schemes it encouraged, and inaugurate a more economical system of expenditure. Then we may bless our disaster at least as a political windfall.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the economy which the people are now practicing in their own troubles, may be practiced by our Government in its embarrassments. We need to be reminded by misfortune of the evils of extravagance. This is an age of luxury. Could the people who have sent us here glance at this Hall, ornamented with all the bedizement of gilt and paint; could they but hear one discussion on the monster schemes and inordinate extravagance of the last Congress; and believe half their eye saw and ear heard, there would be more excitement on economical than territorial affairs. Their surprise would but indicate a fact, that our Government and its rulers are far in advance of the people in the vices, and far behind them in the virtues, of republican life. That simplicity which obtains among the masses in New England, in New York, in the West, and South, has but little reflection either in the social life or political legislation of the metropolis.

In saying this much, I am not indifferent to the proud fact that our governments, Federal and State, are yet the models, in an economical view, to which the reformers of England and the continents point for the guidance of their own Governments. No man can read without patriotic emotion the plaudits of De Tocqueville as he discourses of the simplicity and economy of our system. Again and again have Cobden, Hume, and Roebuck, from the English hustings and in Parliament, referred to these United States for lessons in an economy which is liberal, without being parsimonious, and which has striven to be discriminating without being mean. It was only a few weeks ago that Mr. Bright bemoaned, in a letter to Birmingham, the suffering consequent upon the increasing taxes of England. He could find no remedy save in the diminution of their augmenting expenditure. He startled the English people by showing that their Government was now spending £20,000,000 sterling more than they were spending a few years back, and that since 1835, when Wellington and Peel had charge of the Government, their military expenses alone had doubled; and then, pointing to this nation, he said:

"This year we shall raise at least £50,000,000 sterling more than will be required to be raised by an equal population living not in England, but in the United States of America!"

Two hundred and fifty million dollars is the burden which twenty-seven million people pay in Great Britain, over and above what the same number would pay in America, under our Government. Can we wonder, then, that where the burdens are so heavy, and the political privileges so few, so many are now considering the propriety and advantage of emigration; and that at this moment, the unemployed of the manufacturing districts of England are appealing to the Queen for an extensive system of free emigration?

If such be the attractive force of our economy, how carefully should we guard it! We should not be content with the flattering contrasts we can draw with the Old World. If we find in our expenditure a dangerous augmentation, let us apply the canons of our party platforms to practical legislation, and lop off the excrescences where we can. At least let us protest where we cannot lop off, and so guard our future against deficiency bills, and loan bills, as to secure the greatest economy with the least government possible, consistent with security.

FIFTEEN MILLION LOAN.

SPEECH OF HON. A. P. GRANGER, OF NEW YORK,IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 12, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. GRANGER said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The bill now under consideration comes from the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, with a request that it do pass. It is to empower the President to borrow $15,000,000 on the credit of the United States to defray the ordinary expenses of Government. Ordinary as the expenses of Government may be, the call for this loan is surrounded by circumstances very extraordinary. I propose, sir, very briefly, to present before this House and the country some of those extraordinary circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, one year ago we had $18,000,000 surplus money in the Treasury.

Since that time we have collected of revenue $44,000,000, and issued $20,000,000 of Government paper, at the pressing solicitation of the President; in all, $22,000,000.

And now, as Congress is about to take leave of the President for a few months, we are respectfully asked to allow him to run the nation in debt $15,000,000 more, to last till we meet again.

Besides, sir, by what we know of the course of the Administration, it is rational to expect that when the year comes round at least $10,000,000 in addition will be called for under the head of deficiencies, footing up the enormous amount of $107,000,000. One hundred and seven million dollars, and not the least effort is made, nor is a whisper of recommendation heard in favor of providing for the impending emergency by reducing the expenditures or increasing the revenue, so as to meet the payment of principal or interest of the debts we are incurring.

Millions of dollars have been spent since the present Administration came into power, to crowd slavery north of the line of 36° 30', the ancient and extreme limit of slavery on the North—a line made sacred by the universal pledge of the South—a line that to invade and violate has left a stain and a sting that will not soon be forgotten.

Millions of dollars have been wasted in a fruitless attempt to get up a Mormon war, so as to renew the expiring contracts of the late disgraceful fifteen years' quarrel with a few miserable Indians in Florida, a quarrel which cost this nation $40,000,000. Sir, are such needless wars and reckless contracts, to be our everlasting inheritance?

A million dollars is given away this year to the city of Washington to furnish it with water.

There is this year to be paid full ten per cent. of all the money collected through the custom-house, as the cost of collection, when one half that would be ample compensation.

A regiment of troops is voted to protect Texas against a few ragged, straggling Indians—a State that assumes the right and power to oust the Union, and is hardly at home in it at best; a proud, powerful State, asking a regiment of regulars to keep off the Indians. Why, sir, one ration in ten that the regiment would want to subsist on, to give these starving Indians, would make them harmless as kittens.

For this reckless squandering of public money there is no excuse whatever. More than one hundred million dollars will be used up this year by the party in power, while $53,000,000 carried us through any one year of the Mexican war.

Sir, what does all this mean? It means this: it means that the conduct and character of the present Administration, and the party that sustains and controls it, are inconceivably worse than was predicted by any one previous to the last presidential election.

Sir, the Government of this country, as now administered by the President, and the remains of what was once a Democratic party, to say the least, has become a prodigious national evil.

I am aware, sir, and I say it with pleasure, that the ruling party contains many—very many—men of honest worth, and for many of whom I have great personal regard; yet, as a party, I feel bound to say it is degenerate, and past redemption, and has proved itself untrustworthy, incompetent, and unfit to direct the destinies of this great nation.

It disregards its obligations to the country, and seeks only its gratification and perpetuity at the expense of the best interests of the country.

Its reckless extravagance and favoritism will soon run the country under, and saddle the nation with a debt that will require its whole revenue to pay the interest, and leave us to the tender mercy of the lender for means to support the Government, or draw it in specie, by direct taxation, from the pockets of the people.

Sir, this party cannot be reformed.

It is too far gone.

It misrules by habit.

It must be rendered powerless by the people, who are the sufferers, and who have the right and power to do it.

Sir, I believe it is absolutely necessary for the integrity of the Constitution and the prosperity of the country, that the people should take this matter in hand as a business transaction, and deprive this misguided, miscalled Democratic party, of all political power, and render it incompetent of further mischief.

Sir, it must be done, or this Government will sink under the accumulating weight of extravagance, dishonesty, and misrule.

Unless there is a change of men and measures, this republican Government is in danger of being ruined, and our glorious Constitution bereft of its power to fulfill its obligations to secure personal liberty to all the people.

It has promised the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, to guard the freedom of every innocent human being in this broad land, without partiality or distinction, no matter what the age, the sex, the color, or nativity.

This promise is violated and this privilege withheld, at the instance and on the authority of the President, the Federal court, and the party; and the Constitution is yielding to the force of their united efforts.

As affairs are now conducted, the Government is scarce worth having.

It has been said: "That Government is best that is best administered."

If, then, that Government is worst that is worst administered, ours is of all the most miserable.

Sir, the party does not pretend to administer it for the benefit of the governed, but only to raise money out of the people to provide for itself, and is even bankrupt at that. Is it possible that we have an administration of Government that, in time of peace, for its ordinary expenses, uses up $100,000,000 a year, running the country in debt $50,000,000 a year, with no provision for its payment, and which, without a radical change of administration, never will be paid?

The Administration assumed the reins of Government on the 4th of March, 1857, with an overflowing Treasury. It had more than twenty millions of surplus cash on hand.

In the autumn of that year, it was buying up Government paper due some ten years hence, paying a premium of sixteen per cent., and before Christmas was calling on Congress for permission to issue twenty millions of paper circulation to live on through the winter.

And now, sir, the honorable chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who knows whereof he speaks, tells us we must indorse for this Administration to the amount of $15,000,000, or, I suppose, he thinks there will be an utter inability to meet the demands upon the Treasury long before another Christmas. Sir, if that is the condition of things; if the Administration is in the "lost channel," and rapidly drifting to a hopeless fate; and if nothing but a continual increase of the national debt will prevent repudiation, then, perhaps, it may as well come first as last. The sooner the crisis comes the sooner the country will rally and set things to rights again.

Now, sir, what do you think of this state of things? Was the like ever heard of before? Never, never! And there is no reasonable hope of any improvement till after another presidential election. There will be a deficit the present year of fifty or sixty million dollars.

Our revenue from all sources (loans excepted) will not exceed forty or fifty millions; thus increasing a permanent national debt some fifty-five million dollars.

The President will retire, at the close of his present term, leaving us incumbered with a Government debt of one hundred and fifty or two hundred million dollars, all of which, with ordinary foresight, skill, and economy, might have been avoided.

This, sir, might be tolerable, but for the more distressing fact that the false maxims of public policy inculcated and obstinately adhered to by this model party by which encouragement and protection to American labor and home industry have been ridiculed and discarded, and a policy inaugurated that has brought up with a foreign debt on the business community of this country amounting to $500,000,000.

Yes, sir; a debt to Europe from this country of $500,000,000; while, at the same time, the great leading interests of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, are almost prostrate, carrying perplexity and dismay to the homes and firesides of the people in all directions, and in all quarters.

Sir, this is a gloomy but truthful picture.

Now, sir, is it saying too much to say that this abused and misgoverned people must change their rulers, or do worse?

Sir, I must go against this bill.

I cannot vote to empower this Administration to make large and oft-repeated loans at discretion.

The bill, I fear, will pass.

It will be strange if it does not.

It is an Administration measure, and they have the numbers to pass it; and there is a party pressure to do it.

Like the case of the gambler, who has lost his money, they borrow to keep up appearances, and try another chance.

The Administration must have it, or its hungry cormorants, who fatten on the Treasury, must starve; and hunger will break through a stone wall.

Sir, if it must be had, let the supporters of the Administration reach and take it, and with it take the responsibility.

KANSAS—LECOMPTON CONSTITUTION.

SPEECH OF HON. J. J. CRITTENDEN, OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE SENATE, March 17, 1858.

[REVISED BY HIMSELF*.]

The Senate having under consideration the bill to admit Kansas into the Union as a State—

Mr. CRITTENDEN said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: I feel how inadequate I am to add anything to the various arguments that have been employed on this subject during the long discussion through which we have passed; and yet I should not perform my duty according to my views, if I omitted to express my sentiments and feelings on the subject before the Senate. I do not intend to occupy your time with exordiums, sir. The right of the people to govern themselves is the great principle upon which our Government and our institutions all depend. It seems to me that this great principle is involved in the present subject.

The President of the United States communicated to us an instrument called the constitution of the people of the Territory of Kansas, and he has, with unusual earnestness, advised and recommended to us to admit Kansas under that constitution, as a State into this Union. The question, as it has presented itself to my mind, involves an inquiry as to the matters of fact bearing upon this instrument of writing, and whether these authorize us to regard this instrument as the constitution of the people of Kansas? Is it their constitution? Does it embody their will? Does it come here under such sanctions that we are obliged to regard it, or ought to regard it, as the permanent, fundamental law and constitution of this new State? I do not think it comes with such a sanction, or ought to be regarded as the constitution of the people of Kansas. Sir, I shall not occupy your time long on this point.

What are the evidences that it is so? It is made by a convention, to be sure, called under the authority of an act of the Legislature of Kansas. It is made by delegates regularly elected by this people, and prima facie it would appear that it had the sanction of the people of Kansas; but I think there are evidences of a higher character to show that it is not so, that it is but in appearance a constitution, and not in reality.

In the first place, the fact is established beyond all controversy that an overwhelming majority of the people of Kansas are opposed to this instrument as their constitution. The two highest officers of the Federal Government lately there under appointment from the President of the United States, Governor Walker and Secretary Stanton, both assure us of that fact upon their personal knowledge. That is high evidence to establish the fact that it is against the will of an overwhelming majority of the people upon whom it is to be imposed as a constitution.

That constitution in part was submitted to the people. I shall not stop now to inquire how it was submitted, whether fairly or not. A part of it was submitted, however, and, upon a vote taken by the people on the clause thus submitted, it received six thousand votes, and a little more. These are the sanctions with which it comes to us. To this extent, it would seem to have the popular approbation. But, sir, when you come to look a little further into the investigations which have taken place in that Territory, it appears that of those six thousand votes, about three thousand were fictitious and fraudulent. That is reported to us by the minority reports of our Committee on Territories; that is verified to us by the proclamation issued by the President of the Council and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Territorial Legislature of Kansas. These high officials, who were invited by Mr. Calhoun to witness the counting of the votes which were returned to him, certify from their personal knowledge that more than two thousand of the three thousand votes which were given at three precincts in the counties of Johnson and Leavenworth were fictitious votes. I only call your attention to this in order that it may appear truthfully who it was that approved of this constitution.

That vote was taken on the 21st of December. Before that vote was taken, however, a Legislature, which was elected in October last, and which met, on the call of the acting Governor, Mr. Stanton, in December, passed an act postponing that vote from the 21st of December to the 4th of January. On the 4th of January, under the provisions of that act, a question was taken upon the constitution itself broadly. It provided that the question should be taken upon the Lecompton constitution with slavery, upon the Lecompton constitution without slavery, and generally upon the constitution itself. Upon that occasion, over ten thousand voted against the constitution; and the Legislature of the Territory of Kansas have passed resolutions unanimously protesting against the reception by Congress of this instrument as the constitution of the State, declaring that it was obtained by fraud, and that it has not the sanction or concurrence of any, except a small minority of the people. This is the substance of their resolutions.

Now, I ask you, sir, upon this evidence, as a judge, to say whether this is the constitution of the people of Kansas or not? whether the evidence before you is, that it is an instrument signifying their will, and declaring that general and permanent law upon which they wish their government to be founded? Unless you shut your eyes to the vote taken on the 4th of January, here is a direct popular evidence and protest against the constitution; and, even supposing the whole of the six thousand votes which were given for it on the 21st of December to be true and real votes, fairly expressed, it shows that there were ten thousand other people in the Territory of Kansas who are opposed to this instrument, and who have legitimately declared their opposition. Here is the solemn act of the Legislature of the Territory protesting against it. These are recorded evidences, as much so as the constitution itself is a record, having the same legal sanctions and the same legal title to our faith and our confidence.

* For the original report, see page 1153 Cong. Globe.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Kansas—Lecompton Constitution—Mr. Crittenden.

SENATE.

How are you, in law, to make any difference between these testimonials; to say that you will give effect to one, and will reject the other; that you will give effect to that which testifies for the minority of the people, and will reject that which testifies for the majority of the people; that you will accept that which was first given, and reject the last expressions of the popular will?

It is these last expressions of the popular will that ought to govern on every principle, just as much as that a former law must yield to a subsequent law in any point of conflict between them. The last evidence, then, is the vote of the people on the 4th of January, of ten thousand against it; and the evidence nearly cotemporaneous with that are the resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas, protesting and imploring you not to accept this instrument, that it is a fraud and an imposition upon them. I want to know why it is that this evidence is not entitled to our consideration and to have effect? The President, it seems to me, has given us a most unsatisfactory reason. The President says that in recommending the adoption of this constitution to us, as implied in the admission of the State, he has not overlooked the vote of ten thousand against the constitution given upon the 4th of January; he has considered it; but he holds it, and he holds the law of the Territorial Legislature under which that vote was taken, to be mere nullities? Why? The law was passed by the regularly-elected Legislature of the Territory, providing that a vote should be taken on that day; and why not? Is there anything in an organic law, is there anything anywhere that forbids it? No, nothing.

The President had anticipated that the constitution itself, in whole, and not in part, was to be submitted to the people. The Governor had so contemplated, and had so assured and promised the people. The President regrets that it was only submitted in part. He regrets that the entire constitution was not submitted. Though he accepts at an equivalent the partial submission, he regrets that it was not submitted as a whole.

The Territorial Legislature, after this constitution was published, immediately passed a law to have a vote taken upon the entire constitution—the very course the President had preferred, and to which Mr. Walker pledged himself. What do they do but carry out, and act in perfect accordance with, the wishes and opinions of the President and Governor? And yet the President, who was for a general submission, and would have preferred it, says the act of the Legislature, in accordance with his opinion, is a mere nullity. Why? Because, he says, by the previous acts of the people, and of the territorial government, the Territory was so far prepared for admission into the Union as a State. That is the reason. He gives no application of it, but announces, as a reason, that it was so far prepared, because the constitution had been made, ready to be offered to Congress, though that constitution had not yet been submitted to the people when this law was passed. That was her condition; that was the preparation she had made. The only preparation was, that under the authority of a previous Territorial Legislature, a convention had been held, and a constitution made and published.

That was the condition of her preparation; and because of that preparation, the President says that the Territorial Legislature had no power whatever to pass a law to take a popular vote upon the adoption of that constitution, to see what the people thought of it; to collect the evidence of the public will! What could the Territorial Legislature do to satisfy themselves, to satisfy the country, to satisfy the just rights of the people, but to say a vote shall be taken on the 4th of January next, in which all the people shall declare their assent to, or disapprobation of, this constitution as an entire instrument? What is there in the preparation above referred to to prevent it? What force had the constitution? Could the constitution, unaccepted by you, unauthorized by you, paralyze and annihilate the legislative power which your act of Congress had conferred upon the territorial government? Does not that power, and all that power, remain as perfect as when you granted it? And could that power which your act gave be diminished or lessened by any act of mere territorial authority? It is palpable that it could not. No matter what act might be done by the people of Kansas, call it by what name you please—law of the Territorial Legislature, constitution made by the people; no matter by what name you call it—the supremacy of the Government of the United States remains untouched and unimpaired, and all the power of territorial legislation which it gave may be exercised by the Legislature.

Of what avail is this constitution until accepted by Congress, and the State admitted upon it? Whom does it bind? Is it anything more than a proposition by the people of Kansas that “we shall be admitted with this instrument, which we offer as our constitution?” What more is it? Does it bind anybody? Where does it derive its authority? The organic law authorized no legislation by a convention. The convention could exercise no legislative power which Congress had given, because Congress gave its power to a Territorial Legislature, to be elected in a certain manner, and to be exercised in a certain manner. The convention could exercise no legislative power. It bound no one. It did not bind the future State; for, until you accepted it, what prevented the people from calling a convention the next day, and altering or modifying it according to their own views? Is there anything of reason, of argument, or of law, to support such a proposition as that the people are restrained from making another constitution because they have proposed one not yet accepted and acted upon by Congress? I think not.

In my judgment, we have a precedent which shows I am right in this view of the subject. The case is this: Wisconsin, then under a territorial government, presented herself here with a State constitution, and asked for admission into the Union as a State. Congress admitted her, but on the condition that her constitution should be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of the Territory; and, if assented to by the people, that the President should announce that fact by proclamation, and that thereupon, and without any further proceedings on the part of Congress, her admission should be complete and absolute. This was the case of Wisconsin; this her state of preparation. What, under these circumstances, did the people of Wisconsin do? Did they proceed according to this act of Congress, and submit their constitution again to the people, as required by said act? No, sir; they passed that act by, called another convention, applied to Congress at a subsequent session, and were admitted into the Union as a State.

Was not their state of preparation greater than the preparation of the Territory of Kansas? Here Wisconsin was not only in a state of preparation, by having made a constitution, but that constitution had received the approbation of Congress, and she had been conditionally admitted into the Union as a State. Yet she considered that even under these circumstances, she was at full liberty to avail herself, or not to avail herself, of that conditional admission—and concluding not to decline it, she made another constitution, and was thereupon admitted by Congress.

If they could do that, if, prepared as they were, that preparation did not preclude them from making another constitution, how is this less state of preparation, on the part of Kansas, to preclude the Territorial Legislature, not from performing the high act of calling a convention, but simply of taking another vote on a constitution which was yet to be proposed to Congress? Can any reason be shown? No, sir, none. That constitution was, in my judgment, inoperative; and of gentlemen who think differently I would ask, how long would it have operated as binding on the people of Kansas? Suppose circumstances had occurred which had prevented any application to Congress for years, how long would this instrument have retained its vitality, and retained its vigor and authority? One year? Two years? Three years? Four years? How long? Suppose the president, Calhoun, had put this instrument in his pocket, and kept it there all the days of his life, would it all the days of his life have restrained the people of Kansas from taking other steps, and calling other conventions, and making other constitutions?

If its authority would not have continued a lifetime, how long could it continue? No man can set a limit; and the conclusion, therefore, is, that it never had any binding influence; at any rate, never such binding influence (and this is all I am required to show) as to have prevented the people, if they had changed their minds after making the first constitution, from calling another convention, and resorting to all means necessary for the establishment of another constitution, and then to offer it to you. It is theirs to offer, and ours to dispose of; and they are free up to the last moment to make known to Congress what is their will and what is their determination in relation to the fundamental law of the State which they are about to establish.

Is not this all perfectly clear to our reason? Are there any fictions of law; are there any technicalities springing out of these instruments, governing their force and effect, to prevent this conclusion? Is this constitution to be made up into a little plea of estoppel against the people? Are the little rules which we are to gather from Westminster Hall, the little saws in action at law that do well enough to decide little questions of meum and tuum among A, B, and C, to be applied as the measure to those great and sovereign principles on which States and peoples rest for their rights and their liberties? No, sir. This is a great political question, open, free to be judged of according to God's truth and the rights of the people, unrestrained, unincumbered, unimpaired by any fiction or by any technicality which could prevent the full scope of your justice and your reason over the whole subject.

Therefore, sir, this state of preparation of the Territory of Kansas for admission into the Union has no effect. The argument is not applied; the fact is merely stated that there is a state of preparation, and there it would be necessary to stop on any doctrine; for, in my own judgment, no argument can be made even of any ordinary plausibility to show that the state of preparation restrains the people of their natural and inalienable right and their legal right as proclaimed by you, to form with perfect freedom their own institutions before they come into the Union. There is no technicality about it.

Here, it seems to me, applies that great principle to which I adverted at first, that the people have a right to govern themselves. I mean, of course, in subordination to constitution and law. This people had no constitution, could have no constitution, while they remained in territorial dependence; and when the act of the Territorial Legislature was passed, requiring a vote to be taken on this proposed constitution, they had full authority to pass that law. Their hands were not bound. Here was a great act about to be done; an act to bind the State, to give it a new character, to give it new institutions, to put upon it a constitution—that panoply of the rights of all. This was the great act to be done; it is an act which none but the people can do through themselves or their proper representatives. It is in all cases directly or by reference the act of the people. The laws which they establish are not of that transient character which can be made to-day and repealed to-morrow. They are made for permanency. They are the great immutable and eternal truths and principles on which all government must rest. They are expected to be permanent. The people delegate to others the power of passing temporary and repealable laws. They reserve to themselves the great right of passing those which are permanent and can only be repealed by themselves.

Was it not of consequence, was it not of importance to know the will of the people, whether they really did approve of this constitution which was about to be offered to Congress—a law which, when Congress puts its imprimatur on it by admitting the State, is to be permanent? Would it be any harm to take the vote over and over again, so long as doubt remains? Congress has the power. What objection could there be to it? You may say “It is an unnecessary care of the people's rights; you have had their decision once; therefore, it is not necessary to have it again;” but out of abundant care and abundant zeal, you may choose to take it again and again, and ascertain whether there may be change or variation in the public opinion. Who can say aught against it? Do you object to it because it is taking too great care of public liberty, paying too great respect to popular rights? Nobody will take that ground.

But it may be said you might delay the application to Congress by these repeated elections. You must avoid that as far as you can. In this case it has not delayed it. In this case this vote was taken before this constitution came before you; while yet it slumbered in the hands of President Calhoun. No objection can be made, then, that this was made the cause of, or intended merely for the purpose of, delay. The result shows that it was necessary and proper. The result shows that, notwithstanding the vote of six thousand in favor of it, there were ten thousand who were opposed to it. I say, therefore, this is not the constitution of the people of Kansas. It may, in a certain sense, be a constitution offered by the convention to the people of Kansas, but which the people of Kansas by ten thousand majority have rejected—have as lawfully rejected in the last vote, as it was lawfully approved by the six thousand first voting in the preceding December.

I say, then, Mr. President, upon the record evidence, upon all the evidence, this is not the constitution of the people of Kansas. It is not the constitution under which they desire that you shall admit them into the Union. Now, will you, against their will, force them in the Union under a constitution which they disapprove? That is the question. You know the fact that ten thousand against six thousand are opposed to the constitution. You know that by the act of their Territorial Legislature they entreat you not to admit them with this constitution. They tell you, moreover, as one of their reasons, not only that they disapprove of the whole constitution, but that it is particularly hateful to them because the votes given for it, or apparently given for it, were, to a great extent, fraudulent and fictitious. The Legislature tells you that nine tenths of the people there are opposed to it.

Now, would it not be strange, that under these circumstances, we should, without any motive for it that I know of, as the common arbiters of all Territories and States to the extent of our constitutional power, force her into the Union? What motive can we have, what right motive, with the knowledge of these facts, to force her into the Union, and to enforce upon her this constitution? I cannot feel myself authorized to do such a thing. Of course I do not impugn the motives and the views of others, who, taking a different view, act from impressions different from mine. They act upon one view, and I upon another; but, viewing the subject as I do, it seems to me that to do this is a plain, unmistakable violation of the right of the people to govern themselves.

I have endeavored to show you, sir, that this is not the constitution of the people of Kansas, according to the recorded evidence of their will. It seems to me, furthermore, that this constitution is a fraud. It is not only not their constitution, according to their will, but it is got up and made in fraud, to deprive them of their rights. I believe that, and I think it can be shown.

The President of the United States has furnished us an argument on this subject, and it has been oftentimes repeated here in the debate—of course a plausible and ingenious argument, as all must admit, even those who deny the solidity of the reasoning. What is the argument? The President says that the sense of the people was taken, and proved to be in favor of calling a convention. The convention was called; delegates were elected; those delegates made a constitution; that constitution was submitted to the people in part, and approved by a vote of six thousand, taken according to law. Well, all these, you will observe, constitute a tissue, a long series of little legalities, regularities, and technicalities; and the reasoning of the President is founded on technical points on each of these facts. You must admit all the facts. Yes, sir, the facts are all true; and if they alone constituted the case, the conclusion would be fair and right that this constitution has been regularly made; that this constitution has been sanctioned by the people as well as by the convention. But is there no more in the case than this? There is a great deal more in the case than this.

When frauds have been alleged and charged against this government of Kansas, gentlemen say, "Ah, but these frauds were in other elections; these frauds do not particularly and specifically touch this constitution, or the proceedings which led to this constitution." But suppose there were frauds in relation to it: is it not something if I show you that, in regard to that part of the constitution which was submitted to the people to be ratified by them, and which was nothing until the people had ratified it, even according to the constitution itself, there was fraud in that election, and abundance of fraud? So glaring, so impudent, and so fearless, had frauds in elections become there, that upon that very poll-list, in one of the precincts, (I forget whether it was in Oxford, or Shawnee, or that other precinct which emulates these in its character for fraud, Kickapoo,) you find that the President of the United States, Colonel Benton, and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] were there, it seems, or fictitious votes were put in for them by somebody, and a long list of persons of that sort figure on the poll-books at these miserable precincts as actual voters. That was the vote on the constitution on December 21; that was on the part submitted to the people. They were the constitution-making power there; and there I show you the fraud.

What further frauds there were I know not; but this much is apparent—and later developments show greater frauds still—that in one single precinct, where there were only thirty or forty votes to be taken legitimately, there were over twelve hundred; and under the investigation lately made by commissioners in Kansas, that, upon sworn testimony, is stated to be the fact. In one precinct there were twelve hundred fraudulent and fictitious votes out of twelve hundred and sixty; seven hundred in another, and over six hundred in another; making in the aggregate twenty-six hundred votes in three precincts, entirely fraudulent and fictitious, written out by hundreds on the poll-book after the election was over, put on without scruple upon the poll-book, upon the election return, put down without scruple during the election, of those who were qualified, and those who were not qualified; and that is the way this constitution in part has received its sanction.

But, sir, I think that we should take a very partial view of this subject, one very unsatisfactory to our judgment, if we were to isolate these facts which have direct relation only to the formation of this constitution, and leave out all the surrounding circumstances. It seems to me that the proper and the just mode of regarding this constitution is to consider it as one of a series of acts, and see if we can find that the whole action and operation of all those acts were to lead to one general purpose—that of maintaining by fraud and by falsehood the power and the government of the minority, and their offices to them against the will of the great majority of the voters. I say it is an act connected with all the other acts. The whole case is to be taken, and every part of it judged of in this connection.

Now, what was the first act? That is historical. We may all speak of it now, though we disputed it at the time. The first Legislature that was elected in Kansas under the organic act, was not elected by the people of Kansas. It was elected by persons who were intruders from abroad—who intruded themselves with arms in their hands, seized upon the ballot-boxes, put in their own ballots, driving away the legitimate voters, and elected the members to the Legislature. That is the way the government of Kansas was inaugurated. Those who had been driven from the polls, those who were opposed to the party that was installed in power by these means, conceived such indignation and such disgust that they proclaimed aloud, whether wisely or unwisely, that they renounced all obedience to this spurious government, as they called it. It is not material to me whether their complaints are well founded and true, or not. I am endeavoring to depict the course of things, to show their motives, and the motives of the persons who were thus installed into the territorial government. They came to their power by violence; they came to their power by fraud. That was the complaint of the opposing party in Kansas. They renounced their rule; they renounced their laws; they refused to commit themselves in any way to their support—refused to go to any election afterwards. They said: "What is the use? This corrupt minority who have got into power, who have in their hands the means of controlling the election, who are not too good to do it, and who will do it, who have done it, will practice the same means; we shall be again driven from the polls; or, if not, they, having the control of the elections, and of all the officers who conduct and manage them, will have what returns made they please. We will subject ourselves no more to the humiliation of attempting to execute a right which we know will be frustrated and defeated by fraud or by force." Under these impressions, and with these feelings, which it is not my part here either to justify or rebuke, but simply to state the fact, they withdrew from the elections, lest, by voting according to the laws passed by this corrupt Legislature, as they considered it, they should seem to acknowledge its authority and their allegiance to it.

Now, what would be the condition of the men who had been installed into power in this way? They would be pleased that their opponents had thus withdrawn themselves from the polls. In all the elections to be held afterwards, this power of the minority, however small, would be continued; as their enemies would not come up to vote, they would be reelected and would retain and perpetuate their power. So they went on—the field abandoned by the majority—and the minority ruling everything in this way. Look at the evidences that are before you from those high officers lately returned from Kansas—Stanton and Walker. They tell you of frauds regularly perpetrated there; and, although they had thought before that the people were acting factiously, that they were acting seditiously, that they were acting rebelliously in attempting to withdraw themselves from this government altogether and to act for themselves, and that their complaints of fraud and imposition upon them in elections were rather affected for the purpose of giving color to their conduct than otherwise, yet when they went among the people and heard them, and learned all about the dealings that had been practiced, they could not doubt their truth and their sincerity in the resentment which they felt and in the conduct which they pursued. However unwise, it was sincere on their part. They had been defrauded; they had wrongs enough to sing and humiliate them. This is what these officers say. I know nothing about it; we know nothing about it, except on the testimony. That the ruling minority party were capable of committing fraud, we know. They began in fraud. Has any gentleman here denied, is there any gentleman who discredits the history which we all have of the frauds practiced in the first election that was held in Kansas? However we might doubt this, however we might have disagreed, however we might have believed or disbelieved heretofore, have not every mist and doubt been cleared away from around this fact, and is there one here now to say that the right of election was not trodden down in the first election for a Territorial Legislature in Kansas, and that a minority government was not elected? That they have continued that government by fraud since, is shown at every step of their progress.

It was in the midst of this self-suspension of the right of suffrage on the part of their opponents, that they called the convention by which this constitution was made. Look at the constitution itself. On its own face, does it not contain the amplest preparation for fraud, visible and apparent? Look at the internal evidence marked on its face. They pass by all the sworn officials of the territorial government who had before conducted elections; they authorized, by the schedule to the constitution, President Calhoun to take this whole matter into his hands, to appoint the officers to conduct the elections, giving him control over that official body, and the appointment of them all; and the returns were not to be made to any permanent officer of the Government, not to the Governor, but to this same Mr. Calhoun. He was to appoint the officers to conduct the election, receive the returns, count the ballots, and declare the result. Well, Mr. Calhoun has performed all this business!

Another thing: every human being, in respect to that part of the constitution which was submitted to the people, before he could vote for or against it, was required to swear that he would support that constitution when it was adopted. In that constitution, those who framed it well knew were provisions intolerable to all the free-State men in the Territory, and they would not swear to support it. They so believed and hoped and expected. This was under the show of a fair election. Not only have they secured all the advantages resulting from the appointment of the officers to conduct it, but, to leave their consciences more easy, these officers were not even sworn. There was no provision for that. But every man voting for the constitution, or that part of it submitted to him to vote upon, was required to be sworn beforehand that he would support that constitution. This, it was supposed, if nothing else, would keep off the free-State men.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Kansas—Lecompton Constitution—Mr. Crittenden.

SENATE.

It is said, in this testimony, that Governor Walker, from the time he went there, had been diligently persuading all the people of the Territory to throw aside this inaction of theirs, come into the elections, and participate in the government. For this, Mr. Stanton says, Governor Walker became the object of utter hostility to Mr. Calhoun's party. They did not want conciliation. They demanded, as the same witness says, repression. They wanted penalty, not persuasion. They did not know what the result of this persuasion might be in the elections afterwards to take place on the constitution. It was necessary, therefore, to make provision against the possible effects of these persuasions and arguments of Governor Walker; it was, therefore, necessary to put in, though nobody opposed them, six thousand votes for the constitution, they believing that that was a majority of the greatest number of votes ever given on any occasion in the Territory, and so it is stated here. They just went beyond the line; and for fear of rendering it more monstrous, and the fraud more visible, they went just so far as the necessity demanded the fraud. They did not choose to use it superfluously. They rather husbanded it, to be used as the occasion might require, and no more than was required. I cannot shut my eyes to this fact. These preparations, then, in the schedule of the constitution, were made in anticipation of the vague dangers that were apprehended. It was greatly important to carry through this constitution; greatly important to preserve their authority under the constitution. There were two Senators of the United States to be elected. All the officers of the State government were to be constituted. These were to be the reward of those who had labored.

These seem to me to be preparations made for fraud; and when I come to compare them with the action which took place afterwards, the design and the act, the purpose and fulfillment of it, make the proof perfect. The means of doing it, the means of facilitating it, are given in the constitution. The actual perpetration of it afterwards at the polls is seen. It is seen in the election upon the constitution. It is seen in the election of the 4th of January, for officers under the new constitution. There is where these frauds, lately developed, were practiced to such an enormous extent. There is where these little precincts distinguished themselves.

Another fact may be noticed, that this convention to make a constitution were to meet, by law, in September, and go to their work. They met then. Did they go to work? No. Why did they not? There was an election of the Territorial Legislature to take place in the October following. They wanted to know the result of that election; to know how the land lay; whether all was safe or not; whether any point was necessary to be guarded in the constitution; whether there were any unexpected majorities rising up; whether there were any obstructions in the way of ordinary frauds. They wanted to see what was the character of the new Legislature, that they might meet the emergency and meet the exigency with any constitutional provision that might be necessary to perpetuate their power. They therefore adjourned to a day after the election. The Legislature was elected; and that Legislature turned out, notwithstanding all the frauds that were practiced, to be against them. What then? The Legislature being against them, now what is the provision they made in the constitution? The officers of election, and other officers of the government, were, many of them, appointed by the Territorial Legislature. They thought, "Now, here has come in, in October, a Legislature opposed to us." What so likely but that they who have complained of frauds from Government officials, will now change the officers and change the mode of election? What then? They declare in the schedule that all who are in office now, shall hold their offices; that all the laws in existence now, shall continue in existence until repealed by a Legislature which shall meet under the State organization under the constitution. That silences completely the Territorial Legislature, and paralyzes its power. That was a security against them, and left the convention and its party to take the chances at the future election to be held, by their officials, on the 4th day of January last, as provided by them, and then they were to make another final death-struggle for supremacy; and then, indeed, they did. I have seen the report of the commissioners lately appointed by the Territorial Legislature of Kansas to investigate the frauds. There this Government party did make efforts more than worthy of all their former practices in fraud, in order to secure the Legislature, which, under the constitution, would make Senators of the United States. It was here that Oxford, that Shawnee, that Kickapoo, distinguished themselves in the multiplicity of votes, feigned and fraudulent.

When you see such things as these in the constitution; when you see such things as these all around the constitution; when you see the same men who made the constitution rulers in the land during the whole time, do you not see that the frauds have been everywhere, that the imposition upon the people has been everywhere? And how can you exempt from the contagion (if there was nothing more than this general association from which to infer it) this constitution and those who made it? Judging from the positive internal evidence that exists in it, and the facts that surround it, I cannot. I believe that to impose it upon them, violates the right of the people to govern themselves. I believe this constitution is the work of fraud—fraud upon the rights of the people.

I do not undertake to defend the Free-Soilers for their conduct. It is not my part nor my province. I should agree, perhaps, with the President, that much of their conduct has been of a disreputable, disorderly, and seditious character. It may be that it deserves the epithet of "rebellion," which the President applies to it. I have nothing to do with that. I am not their advocate. I have disapproved of their conduct in many instances. There were many bad men among them, as I believe, but for them the law assigns its proper punishment. The majority of the people have their political rights, that remain, notwithstanding their legal offenses. It is in that point of view, it is in their political character as the people of a Territory, that we are now to regard them. Whether they be more or less guilty on one side or the other, is not the question. I fear that neither party could take the chair of impartiality and justice, and be shameless enough to attempt to administer rebuke to the other.

One great objection to their admission at all, is that they have not shown, by their conduct on any side, that they are altogether fit for association with the States of this Union. A little more apprenticeship, a little more practice of honest and fair dealing, a little more spirit of submission and subordination to law and authority, would be well learned by them, and fit and qualify them much better for citizens of the United States. That is my opinion. I have, however, spoken of their political rights as men, and it is not for me to sit in judgment to condemn and deprive them of the right of suffrage on one side or the other, because of frauds committed by one, or violence practiced by another. This is a political question.

It is said, however, that the series of legalities and technicalities, to which I have alluded, of a regular election, of a regular convention, of a submission to the people, and of votes of the people upon all these questions, have been regular; and what then? It is further said, on the other side, that all the people had a right to vote, and those who did not vote forfeited their right to complain; and we are not to inquire whether there were any people who did not vote, or whether those who did vote voted fairly, and were entitled to vote or not. It is said we are precluded by the forms in which this transaction is enveloped; that the formal election, the formal certificate of election, the formal constitution certified—these formalities are enough for us, and that we are not permitted to look further; that we ought not to look further. Sir, I do not think so. We are applied to now to admit a new State into the Union. The instrument which she presents as her constitution is opposed by the people from the same Territory. They say, "this is not our constitution; it is against our will; it is not only against our will, but it has been imposed upon us by devices and fraud. It is void for fraud. If it is not void for fraud—for that is rather a legal than a political term—we present these frauds and this opposition as a reason why you should not admit our Territory into the Union under this constitution."

That is the state of the question before you. The complainants admit all the regularities just as the President states them. Perhaps they admit the effect these forms would ordinarily have, but they urge other facts in opposition to the apparent evidence of the constitution itself, as I have before adverted to. A majority of the people have protested against it. The present Legislature, by its inquiries, have developed the vast frauds which were practiced in connection with, and in relation to this constitution. They say, "do not accept it; do not admit us under it; send it back; let it be submitted to a fair vote of the people." Sir, upon such a complaint as this, are we not bound, in justice to that people, to examine the whole case? Can any Senator turn away and refuse to look at the testimony that is offered? Can he be justified in so doing by naked legal presumptions against positive truth?

Do not suppose that I would discard all formalities, or the fair presumptions resulting from them. In many cases, and to many of the transactions of society, especially to your courts of justice, they are necessary, and they subserve the purposes of justice. They were not made to sacrifice justice, but to uphold it and maintain it and protect it as an armor. That is the proper business of forms—not to crush down justice, but to promote it. We are not now sitting here governed by any technicalities. This is a grand national political tribunal, to judge according to our sense of policy and our sense of justice. That is our high province—not to be controlled by presumptions of law when we can have the naked truth. It is the truth that ought to guide; and for that we ought to look wherever we can find it; and where you find the truth on one side, and the fiction on the other: which is to be followed, the truth or the fiction? I take the fact; I take the truth; let the fiction return to those tribunals which are by law made subject to it. This is a question above that sort of argument. It is inquirable into. Else how can we judge that it is their constitution? It is the first time, I believe, that such a question has ever come up in the Senate of the United States. In all former applications for admission, there has been one thing about which there has been no question; and that was, the willingness to be admitted, and the constitution under which they desired to be admitted. There has been no question about the authenticity of a constitution, or about its expressing the true will of the people heretofore, that I know of. I am satisfied there has been none; but now that there is, we must inquire into the authenticity of the instrument offered to us; we must inquire whether it is better, on full consideration, to admit this instrument, and the State with it, or not; and, in the exercise of that judgment, we are bound to look abroad for the truth wherever we can find it. I think, therefore, these matters are all fairly subject to our consideration.

Mr. President, convinced as I am from these imperfect views of the evidence in the case, that this instrument is not really the constitution of the people of Kansas, or desired by them to be accepted by you in their admission into the Union; believing that it is not their constitution; and believing moreover, as I verily do, that it is made in fraud and for a fraud; believing that these matters are inquirable into by us, and that the inquiry has led us to abundant light on this subject, I cannot, I will not vote for it. Viewing it as I do, with the opinions I entertain, I could not consent to her admission without violating my sense of right and justice; and I would submit to any consequence before I would do that.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Kansas—Lecompton Constitution—Mr. Crittenden.

SENATE.

Now, sir, what considerations are there, apart from these which I have stated, which could lead me to give, or could compensate me for giving, a vote against my sense of what was right and just? What advantage to our whole country, or to any portion of it, is to result from taking Kansas into the Union now with this constitution? Is anything to be gained? Is the South or the North to gain anything by it? I see nothing to be gained by it. I think there is not a gentleman here who believes that Kansas will be a slave State. Before this territorial government was made, many of the leading men of the South here argued that Kansas and Nebraska never could be slave States. By the law of climate and geography, it was said, they could not. So said my friend from Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS,] and so said Mr. STEPHENS.

Mr. TOOMBS. Never.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Badger said so.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Mr. Keitt and Mr. Brooks, of South Carolina, said so. The opinion was expressed by numerous southern gentlemen that Kansas could never be a slave State. It was for the principle that they contended; and the principle, the abstract principle, was a just one; namely, the right of the people of the Territories, when forming a State government, for admission into the Union, to frame for themselves such a republican constitution as they pleased, either excluding or admitting slavery.

Mr. HAMMOND. With the permission of the Senator, I will ask him, Did I understand him to say that Mr. Keitt had declared Kansas never would be a slave State?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Yes, sir; so it is reported. Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, said: "Does any man believe that you will have a slaveholding State in Kansas or Nebraska?"

Governor Brown, of Mississippi, said:

"That slavery would never find a resting place in those Territories."

Mr. Douglas said:

"I do not believe there is a man in Congress who thinks it could be permanently a slaveholding country."

Mr. Badger, of North Carolina, said:

"I have no more idea of seeing a slave population in either of them than I have of seeing it in Massachusetts."

Mr. Millson, of Virginia, said:

"No one expects it; no one dreams that slavery will be established there."

Mr. Frederick P. Stanton, of Tennessee, said:

"The fears of northern gentlemen are wholly unfounded. Slavery will not be established in Kansas and Nebraska."

The late Mr. Brooks, of South Carolina, said, in his speech of the 15th of March, 1854:

"If the natural laws of climate and of soil exclude us from a Territory of which we are the joint owners, we shall not, and we will not, complain."

Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, said, on the 2d of March, 1854:

"If two States should ever come into the Union from them, [the Territories,] it is very certain that not more than one of them could, in any possible event, be a slaveholding State; and I have not the least idea that even one would be."

Mr. Keitt, of South Carolina, in his speech of the 30th March, 1854, quoted Mr. Pinckney, of his own State, that,

"Practically, he thought slavery would not go above the line of 36° 30' by the laws of physical geography; and therefore the South lost no territory fit for slavery."

This is all the authority I have.

Mr. GREEN. I wish to inquire what book the Senator reads from? What is the title of it?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It seems to be a book written with the most downright Democratic propensities and purposes. [Laughter.] It is "An Appeal to the Democracy of the South, by a southern State-Rights Democrat." [Laughter.]

Mr. MASON. I suppose the pamphlet is anonymous. No name is given.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MASON. The name of the writer of the pamphlet is not given.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Will the gentleman take it? It contains a great deal of good Democratic reading. [Laughter.] The writer of it thought he was doing great service to the Democratic party.

Mr. HAMMOND. I wish to say that Mr. Keitt quoted that passage from Mr. Pinckney's speech on the Missouri question, which had been quoted on the opposite side of the case previously. His object in quoting it was to show that Mr. Pinckney did not support the Missouri compromise upon principle; but he did not indorse the sentiments expressed by Mr. Pinckney in that extract.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I accept the explanation. Certainly I had no intention to misrepresent any gentleman by reading the statements expressed in this pamphlet. I say it was not anticipated from the first that Kansas would be a slaveholding State. What is the South to gain now by having it admitted? It may gain a triumph in the admission of this constitution—admitted against the will of the majority of the people. It is a triumph; but is it not a barren one? Is it a triumph worthy of the South? It will produce nothing but increased bitterness and exasperation, perhaps, on the part of those against whose will it is forced, not only in the Territory, but elsewhere. It may give new exasperation to the slavery question; new agitation, which God forbid! It would be a victory without results, without profit, barren, sterile: as to all the ordinary and beneficial fruits, there is none. I do not know how anything is to be gained to the South, supposing, as I verily believe, and as every gentleman here believes, that it cannot be a slave State; that there is a majority there opposed to it, and who will put it down. Pass this, and we may have a few years longer of exasperated struggle and exasperated agitation in the country. That is all the consequence of the barren victory which would be obtained by admitting Kansas with this constitution. That is not a fruit, I think, which any one would wish to gather. Now, if you attempt to enforce it, we are told by Mr. Walker—I know nothing about it, but from all that he and Mr. Stanton tell us, and they are Democratic witnesses—there is danger of resistance, and danger of rebellion.

Where is the necessity, then, for our doing it now? Can we not resort to some other means by which we may avoid all these consequences of exasperation, of danger, of resistance, of tumult, or of agitation, upon this subject; and end this contest in a short time by authorizing the people of Kansas, under the high mandate of this Government, to form for themselves a constitution, if they want to come into this Union—a constitution fairly to be made, and fairly to express the will of the people. It defers the subject but a little while. Is it not better to do that? Is it not better to suffer the evils we have than to fly to others we know not of? I think every prudent consideration is in favor of our forbearing to enforce this constitution on the people of Kansas, and of our affording them an opportunity of making their views fully and perfectly understood. This will be in accordance with the generous principles and policy that the South has pursued heretofore.

The Kansas-Nebraska bill was recommended to the South chiefly by the repeal of the Missouri compromise, and the recognition of the right of the people of a Territory, when framing a constitution of State government for themselves, to be "perfectly free" to frame it as they pleased, admitting or excluding slavery, and regulating their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States.

Every citizen has an equal interest and right in territories belonging to the people of the United States; and the result of this equal right seems to me to be, that, where there is no positive law to the contrary, any citizen may lawfully carry his slaves into those Territories, and may lawfully hold them. They were his slaves in the State from which he emigrated, and must remain his, till divested of his right, by law; just as an apprentice, under the same circumstances, remains bound to his master.

My opinion is, that the repeal of the Missouri compromise was a blunder; but I concur in the principle that the people of our Territories, when they come to form a constitution for themselves, have a right to form it as they please. I am now acting upon that great principle of popular rights. I feel myself bound to give the benefit of it to the people of Kansas. Let the majority make such a constitution as they please. That is the great American principle, that rises above all others. Let them govern themselves, and as the majority decide, so let the constitution and so let the laws be. I think we are infracting that great principle—the principle of the South itself, on this very identical subject—by forcing this constitution, at least of doubtful authenticity, upon the people. If there is a majority in favor of it, it is not much trouble for them to ratify it. If there is a majority opposed to it, they are entitled to have their will and their way. They are entitled to that upon principle; they are entitled to it by the express pledges of the Kansas-Nebraska law.

Sir, I feel that I have already occupied a great deal of your time—more than I was entitled or expected to do; and yet there are some general topics upon which I wish to say something, though not so immediately connected with the direct question before us.

Mr. President, I am, according to the denominations now usually employed by parties in this country, a southern man. I have lived all my life in a southern State. I have been accustomed from my childhood to that frame of society of which slavery forms a part. I am, so far as regards the necessary defense of the rights of the South, as prompt and as ready to defend them as any man the wide South contains; but, in the same resolute and determined spirit in which I would defend any invasion of its rights, and for which I would put my foot as far as he who went furthest, I will concede to others their rights, and I will maintain and assert them. He who knows how to value his own rights will respect the rights of others.

When the Missouri compromise was abolished, great fears were excited in the North, and some vague hopes entertained in the South, that slavery might be established in Kansas, and extended in that direction. I did not believe it. I believed that the Missouri compromise line fixed in 1820, was about that territorial line, north of which slavery, if it could exist would not be profitably employed; and our experience since has shown that the wise men who made that compromise judged rightly. I believed that the idea of making Kansas a slave State was a delusion to the South; that her hopes would never be realized, if she entertained such a hope as that. I thought, therefore, it would have been better, without examining scrupulously into its constitutionality, to let the Missouri compromise stand. I regretted its repeal. I did not believe the South would gain anything by it, or that the North would gain by it.

That compromise was a bond and assurance of peace. I would not have disturbed it. It was hallowed in my estimation by the memory of the men who had made it. It was hallowed by the beneficial consequences that resulted from it. It was hailed, at the time it was made, by the South. It produced good, and nothing but good, from that time. Often have you, sir, [addressing Mr. Toombs,] and I, and all of the old Whig party, triumphed in that act as one of the great achievements of our leader, Henry Clay. It was from that, among other things, that he derived the proudest of all his titles—that of the pacificator and peace-maker of his country. We ascribed to him a great instrumentality in the passage of that law; and over and over again have I claimed credit and honor for him for this act. This, for thirty years, has been my steadfast opinion. I have been growing, perhaps, during that time, a little older, and am a little less susceptible of new impressions and novel opinions. I cannot lay aside the idea that the law which made that line of division was a constitutional one. I believed so then. The people since have generally believed it. I must be permitted to retain that opinion still; to go on, at any rate, to my end with the hope that I have not been praising, and have not been claiming credit for others for violating the Constitution of their country.

Sir, the men who passed that measure were great men; they were far-seeing men. Without argument now, I am content to rest my faith upon the authority of those great men—Clay, Pinckney, Lowndes, President Monroe, the last of the patriarchs of the Revolution, with his learned and able Cabinet—and then, what is more than all, thirty-five years of acquiescence in it, and peace under it, in these States. Whatever quarrels you may have had about it in Congress, there was always enough to uphold and sustain that law; and never, until 1854, was it repealed, or its constitutionality questioned, that I know of. I regretted its repeal, because I feared that it would lead to new agitations and new dangers. Has it not? What has been our experience?

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Kansas—Lecompton Constitution—Mr. Crittenden.

SENATE.

The authors of the measure which repealed that compromise—honorable and patriotic I know them to be, many of them my personal friends—promised themselves from it greater peace and greater repose, by localizing the slavery question, as it was said. This act was to localize the question of slavery, and all agitation was to be at an end. It was to give peace to the country. The President, in his message at the commencement of this session, or in his special message—I do not know which—imagines the country to have been in great agitation on the subject of slavery, when the Kansas-Nebraska act came and put a stop to it until, some time afterwards, it was revived. Why, sir, exactly the contrary seems to me to be the true history of the transaction. We were becoming tranquilized under the compromises of 1850, in addition to the Missouri compromise; all was subsiding into submission and acquiescence, when to obtain a greater degree of peace, and secure us for the future against all agitation, this bill of 1854, repealing the Missouri compromise, was passed. What has it produced? Has it localized the question of slavery? Has it given us peace? All can answer that question. It has given us anything but a cessation of agitation. It has given us trouble, nothing but trouble. That has been the consequence of it so far.

I am as anxious now as any man here to close up this scene. I would vote for the admission of Kansas upon almost any terms that would give peace and quiet. If I thought this bill would do so, I should vote for it. I would suppress all scruples for the sake of that peace. If I was sure such would be its result, I would vote for it, thinking myself justified by the price that was to be paid—the peace of my country and the restoration of good-will among my fellow-citizens. I do not hope for it. I fear further trouble. We are again told that this will have the effect of localizing the question of slavery, and that we shall be no more troubled with it; that the mischief and clamor and agitation will all be confined to the limits of Kansas. This is the same hope that was disappointed when the Kansas-Nebraska bill was passed. The same hope was indulged in then, and since then there has been nothing here but agitation on the subject, increasing with every day.

Again, we have the idea of localizing it presented. Now, sir, if it is to be debated anywhere, it will be debated here; and, perhaps, if it is to be debated anywhere, it is best that it should be debated here; because we might hope, Mr. President, that in this body it would be debated with a spirit of moderation and conciliation that would deprive it of many mischievous consequences if it were agitated and debated among men without our years, without our responsibilities, and without the restraints which our condition and our knowledge impose upon us. Even here we do not debate it in the right way. We allow ourselves to become too much excited about it. To this great country what is Kansas and this Kansas question, and the two or three hundred slaves who are there, that you and I and all the American Senate should be here day and night, and using such language of vituperation and invective on this subject as we often do? Look at our great country, and the great subjects which claim our attention as her legislators; look at them all in their majesty and their magnitude, and then say how little, pitiful, in comparison, is this question about which we are making so much strife and contention.

On this subject, and on many others, it seems to me that it becomes us, of all the citizens of this great Republic, to set to our fellow-citizens examples of moderation and conciliation. What good does the mutual charge of aggression, often fiercely repeated? What good do these invectives? Especially let me say to my friends of the North, why indulge in invectives of the most reproachful character, upon those who, in fourteen or fifteen

States of this great country, are slaveholders? Does that give you any cause to traduce them? Can you not live content with the institutions which please you better, and leave these fellow-citizens, who have just the same right to adopt slavery that you have your institutions, to enjoy their liberty in peace also? Is there anything in the difference of our institutions which ought to make us inimical to one another? How was it with our fathers? Did not they live together in peace and harmony? Did not they fight together? Did not they legislate together? Did they ever abuse and reproach each other about the question of slavery? Never that I have read of. Why is it that we cannot do as they did? Have we degenerated from those fathers, or have we grown so much better and purer than they were? I doubt whether we are any better; and I do not believe, notwithstanding all that is said about progress, that we are at all more sensible than those fathers who made the Constitution of the United States, and laid the foundation of this great Government. They gave us an example of brotherhood; and, when we look at all that connects us, all that unites and makes us one people, how much more powerful would its influence seem to be to connect us together, than the question of slavery and anti-slavery to divide us? We are united by circumstances of which we cannot divest ourselves. We are united in language, in blood, in country, in all the memories of the past, in all the hopes of the future. This is our connection; leading and pointing to the brightest destiny that ever awaited any people. All the unnumbered blessings of the future are in full prospect; but there is this little, this comparatively small matter of contention, that we seem disposed to nurse up into continual occasion for philippics and for reproaches. This is not the right temper with which to regard the subject. Crimination and recrimination is not the way to strengthen our Union—that Union of brotherhood, of good will, of coöperation for all great national purposes, which our fathers formed.

I was gratified to hear comparisons made of the mighty resources of the different sections of this country. It was a proud exhibition. The honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMMOND] gave us, in a very interesting and eloquent manner, the mighty resources of the South. They are beyond estimate—beyond calculation. This is replied to by a gentleman from the North, who gives us the mighty resources and the mighty power of the New England and the non-slaveholding States. Well, sir, if the conclusion which might be drawn from it was true, that each of those sections would, by itself, make a mighty country, and a country that any one of us might be proud of, what a magnificent country is made when we put it all together! What a magnificent abode for man, such as the Almighty never gave to any other people, and never placed on the surface of this earth!

It seems to me the most natural union in the world—the South, with her great and her rich productions, while the North abounds with ingenuity, labor, mechanical skill, navigation, and commerce. The very diversity of our resources is the natural cause of union between us. It would not do for us all to make cotton, nor would it do for us all to work in your manufactories. Nature seems to have organized here this country, adapted to a union of people North and South. Nature has given her sanction to the union. Nature has traced that union, and you alone disturb it. Gentlemen, you alone disturb it by making this subject of slavery the cause of dissension. The dissension has been kept up, though we but seldom come to any practical question that calls upon us to act on the subject. Now, if we were through with this petty Kansas affair, what a summer sea of boundless expanse lies before us, where there is nothing but repose! There is no other Territory that you can dispute about in my lifetime, or the lifetime of any man here. This is the last point on which a controversy can probably be made. We have gone through many difficulties on this subject. Now we have reached the last of it, the least of it. Let us settle this matter in peace; let us settle it in good temper; and I see nothing before us but a long period of repose, and, I hope, of mutual conciliation. Of one thing I am certain, that crimination and recrimination between the North and the South, the getting up and maintaining of sectional feeling, sectional passion, sectional prejudice, can do no good to any section; and there is not one Senator here who does not recognize and feel all this as much as I do. I am certain of it.

My vote on this subject, sir, has nothing sectional in it. The only difficulty I have in voting is, that this is regarded by some as a sectional question; and I am on one side of that section, and I am voting for the other side of it, if we divide on it as a sectional question. Now, I do not regard it as a sectional question. My allegiance is not to any particular section. I do not want to know any such thing as a section in my conduct here. I want to be governed by a constitutional spirit, and a constitutional and a just principle in all I do, no matter whether it relates to the North or to the South. I do not want to increase the sectionality which exists in the country by placing myself or my vote upon it, so far as regards this question. I want to wipe out that sectionalism. I wish that no one here would vote upon it as a sectional question. I do not. I vote upon it as a Senator of the United States of America. That is my country, and my great country. The Constitution of the United States intended to wipe out all these lines of division and sectionalism. It is we, we, that disturb our own Union. It is we that make sections; it is we that make sectional lines to divide and distract the country, whose Constitution—whose present interest—whose future hopes—all tend to unite us.

There are some doctrines which have been advanced here with which I disagree, and upon which I will briefly express my views. Some gentlemen have argued, and they have the authority of the President to sustain them, that the Kansas-Nebraska act gave all the authority that is usually conferred by what is called an enabling act on the people of a Territory. I never considered it so. I do not believe it is to be considered so. Some gentlemen, on the other hand, maintain that, under the Kansas-Nebraska act, the convention were bound to submit the constitution to the people for the popular suffrage; indeed, that it is the right of the people to have every convention submit every constitution to them. I do not agree to that doctrine. The people are too sovereign to be required to do that. They can confer upon a convention the power to make a constitution that shall be good without reference to any other power. The sovereignty over the Territory is in this Government. It belongs to the people of the United States, one and all. The people of the States own it; and they are the real sovereigns of the Territory, and we, as their representatives. They have no more power in the Territory than we give. They have no government but what we give. It is not in the nature of things that they should have. All squatter sovereignties, and sovereignties of all sorts, vanish before the sovereignty of the people of the United States.

But the President says, in reference to this Kansas constitution, that although it contains a provision that after 1864 a convention may be called to change it, the people can, nevertheless, change it before that time. That is to say, the people, by their "irresistible" power, can at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of their constitution to the contrary, change it as they please. Sir, the President of the United States is very high authority, but it is, in my humble judgment, a very dangerous doctrine and a very untrue one. The people cannot bind themselves by a constitution! I thought that was one of the great virtues and purposes of a constitution. We admit them to be sovereign. Why cannot they make what sort of a constitution they please? The constitution which sovereignty makes, in all its parts and in all its purposes, must be the rule of conduct for all. It cannot be abolished, except in the manner prescribed and pointed out in the constitution itself, if any manner is prescribed.

If the President's doctrine on this subject be true, what becomes of the Constitution of the United States? Instead of following the mode of amendment prescribed in the Constitution, the people, by their "irresistible" power, may, in any other manner, at any time, change the whole frame of our Government. There is not a State constitution in the Union that does not impose some restraint as to the manner of change. What would a constitution be if it were just as liable to change as any ordinary act of the Legislature? It would lose its character. Those who talk to the people about the unlimited and illimitable power they possess are teaching a dangerous doctrine. That is a sort of sovereignty which the people cannot exercise. It may be made very flattering to their ears, but it is impracticable in the nature of things. It cannot be exercised at all. The people must exercise their sovereignty through agencies. They must exercise it through representatives and governments; they only exercise it safely through constitutions. If they could not make constitutions bind themselves their sovereignty never would be safe. If it were not invested in a constitution, it would be constantly escaping into the hands of some of those gentlemen who could talk most eloquently to the people about their irresistible sovereignty. That would be the end of that sort of sovereignty in the people.

The people must understand that their sovereignty, their practical sovereignty, is to be exercised through representatives and delegates, over whom they are to hold the proper control; and to hold that control, and to fix and make permanent and operative their sovereignty, they must put it in the form of a constitution. That is the only security for popular sovereignty. Therein it exists, and therein alone can it exist practically. It is not true that the people cannot bind themselves, and are not bound, by the restrictions of their constitution. They may rebel against their own constitution; they may violate their own law and constitution, just as they could violate the law or constitution of any other people; but it does not follow that, because they could do that, they have not created a political obligation on themselves by a constitution only to amend that instrument in the guarded, temperate, gradual method which the constitution may have provided for and prescribed.

Sir, I am sorry to have occupied the time of the Senate so long. I can say, with the President of the United States, that on this important occasion I have endeavored to do my duty, with a full sense of my responsibility to my God and to my country. Under the conviction that the best results to be obtained under the present circumstances, unless some material amendment can be made to the bill, will be attained by rejecting this constitution, I shall give my vote against it; but so anxious am I to conclude this subject, that I intend, before it is finally acted upon by the Senate, to propose an amendment. This would be the proper time to offer it; I am not prepared now to offer it; but the effect of it will be to admit Kansas in the Union upon condition that this constitution of hers be submitted to a fair vote of the qualified electors of Kansas, to be ratified by them; and if so ratified, the President, on information of the fact, shall proclaim it a State of the Union without further proceedings; and, if it be not ratified, to have a new constitutional convention convened. My amendment will be an enabling act in effect, but admitting Kansas for the present.

MR. CRITTENDEN'S REJOINDER TO MR. TOOMBS.

MR. CRITTENDEN. I purpose to occupy a few moments to correct a mistake which I believe is rendered necessary by the remarks of my friend from Georgia. I have listened to him with great pleasure, and have cause to thank him for much that he has said.

I knew, sir, that Mr. Clay was not the author of the Missouri compromise; I knew that he did not draw the bill; but I knew from his own declarations in conversation, and in his speeches, that he did approve and concur in its passage. He gave it his sanction. He thought there was nothing unconstitutional in it. I have been brought up in the opinion that it was not only constitutional, but one of the most beneficial acts that had ever been passed by Congress. It produced you, sir, a revenue of peace and good-will among the people of the United States, and that is above all price. Whatever sanction it may have failed to derive from the names of the great men who passed it, it has received abundantly from the people of the United States, who, for the thirty-odd years that it remained on our statute-book, gave it their approval and support. During all that period it gave peace to the country. It was for that I valued it.

I hailed that compromise when it was first made. I have cherished it ever since. It had become fixed in my mind, as part and parcel of our political system. I regarded Mr. Clay, as did the whole country, as entitled to the credit of that great measure. And it was for this that his countrymen conferred upon him the proudest and noblest of his titles—the pacificator of his country.

Sir, I have not been able to cast away these impressions. I admit the Supreme Court to be the great arbiter, as the gentleman asserts, and while I differ from it, I do not the less admit its constitutional and supreme power in all the matters that come within its jurisdiction, and I am not wanting in confidence and respect for it. But yet we cannot always yield up our long-settled convictions, even to the authority of that high tribunal. I find myself now in that condition, and I must be permitted to retain the opinion long established in my mind, that the Missouri compromise was a constitutional act.

My friend [Mr. Toombs] has said that some gentlemen seemed disposed to give no confidence whatever to the action of any of the Territorial Legislatures of Kansas until they fell into the hands of the Black Republicans. Certainly he cannot intend such an imputation for me. [Mr. Toombs signified by a shake of the head that he did not.] I regard it merely as the Legislature of the Territory—the actual Legislature. How its members may be divided in politics I do not know nor do I care; nor was it at all material for my purpose. It is enough for me that it is the Legislature of the Territory, and that it appointed a vote to be taken upon this constitution on the 4th of January. The vote was taken, and the result was as reported to us. I have heard nothing to impeach that vote, nor any single fact alleged against it. The result of it was a majority of ten thousand against the constitution. Certainly those ten thousand have at least as good a right to be claimed against it as the six thousand returned as having voted on the 21st of December, have to be counted in favor of it. That was my object. It was to show that there was a majority against this instrument, and assuming all this action to be equally legitimate, the members of the convention had no more right to order a vote to be taken by the people on any part of the constitution than the Territorial Legislature had to order an election to be taken on the whole constitution. Both proceeded from organized recognized bodies; one the Legislature, the other the convention. When, therefore, the common appeal is made to us, and the constitution is brought before us, it seems to me that we ought equally to take into consideration both these facts. Furthermore, I adverted to the evidence going to show that from the six thousand in favor of the constitution there were many spurious and fraudulent votes to be deducted.

Mr. President, I acknowledge that forms are not only useful, but, in many cases, necessary. I agree that if at an election two thirds of the people stay away from mere apathy or negligence, the votes of those who do act, and do vote, must be effectual, and must control. I agree, also, that the return is a necessary form, and that the revision of that return is subject only to the particular authority appointed for it, and when that is done, there is an end of the case—because there is no further tribunal to which an appeal can be taken; but I suppose and argued that when this constitution was presented before us, the supreme power, called upon now to recognize the validity of these acts; called upon to recognize what was the will of the people, in respect to them—we have a right to look to all the evidence, as well to that which is furnished in form as to that which impeaches it for fraud.

I have spoken on these conclusions, and I shall act on them in voting against the acceptance of this Lecompton constitution. My friend, [Mr. Toombs,] I have no doubt in perfect sincerity, regrets that my conclusions have forced me to this course; but I have followed my convictions, and I mean to do my duty as I understand it. I confess it is painful to me to differ with such a friend on any occasion so important as the present.

Mr. President, I am not wanting, I think, in those feelings of our nature which connect us with our neighbors. Although we have a common country to look to, and ought to have a common patriotism which would embrace the whole, our natural affections and our natural feelings bind us more closely to those with whom we are more immediately associated, to whom we are more nearly assimilated in manners, customs, and institutions—ay, peculiar institutions. I am not wanting in those sympathies; but what is my duty as one belonging to a particular section, by his nativity and by his residence—what is my duty when a great question of this sort comes up? What is my duty to those neighbors, to whom by natural sympathies and affections I am most bound? Is it not my duty in this house of our common councils to give the best counsel and advice I can, or I am to inquire whether this is to be regarded as a sectional question, and follow whatever course is indicated by a majority of its sectional members? Is it not rather my duty to my friends to give them the best counsel I can? I want to see the South always right. How am I to accomplish that? By advising always what my best judgment thinks is right, and endeavoring to prevail upon her to take that course. Is not that my duty? Is not that my duty to my common country; and more especially is it not my duty to those with whom circumstances more nearly connect me? I have done that. I should have been gratified if the South had taken the same view of this subject that I have. I am sure she would have lost nothing by it. The question of slavery is not in the case. I think there is not one gentleman here who entertains the hope that Kansas can ever be really a slave State. If it be made so, it will continue only for a moment—a little feverish moment, filled up with strife and angry controversy. No gentleman here believes it will really and permanently be a slave State. There is nothing, then, to be gained by the South, as I regard the subject. The element of slavery is only thrown in for the purpose of arousing feeling on the one side or the other. It is no real element in the question before us, because no man has any hope that Kansas will be a slave State. We learn that from every source. The hope of it was disclaimed before the Kansas-Nebraska bill was passed; that view is now turned into conviction by all that has occurred since; and there is nobody who deceives himself so much, or would deceive the South so much, as to tell her that Kansas will be made a slave State by the adoption of this constitution, except it may be for that miserable and feverish period to which I have alluded, and which would be filled up in a struggle that could serve only to exasperate parties, and make the contest there more fierce than it has been.

If the South could have taken the view of the case which I have taken, it seems to me it would have been better for her. Then she would say, "the South scorns to take advantage of the little circumstances that might enable her to press her claims upon a reluctant and unwilling people—press the claim to impose slavery against their will; we snatch at no such accidental advantages; we see that the question is determined partly by climate, and more certainly and decisively by the majority of the people; the determination has been against slavery; we stand up in our justice and in our honor always untarnished, and constituting our great strength as Commonwealths and States; and we say we will make no strife about it." If this element of slavery could be discharged out of the case, put out of our minds, put out of our debates, and we could look at this question as it is presented to us, I think there is no one here who would be willing to give his sanction to an instrument which is so stained with fraud, and so manifestly in violation of the rights of the people of Kansas.

Why need we of the South be impatient and anxious to hasten the admission of Kansas into the Union? Whatever constitution you put upon them now will not last; but you will have two Senators immediately from there. Should the South be in a hurry to have two more such Senators here as you would now get from there? But these are small matters. If the South could view this subject as I do; if they could have looked at this constitution and the circumstances from which it had its origin, and those which attend it, as I do; they would have acted the very part which I have indicated; they would take no ignoble advantage; they would occupy no ignoble position of standing upon little points and nice stoppels. No, sir, the South would say—it is in her character, in her spirit to say so—we go upon great principle, and we go for the truth. Occupying that position, she would have stood proudly erect, with justice and honor seated upon her brow. That is her natural and accustomed attitude, and in that attitude I love to contemplate her.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Public Expenditures—Mr. Letcher.

Ho. OF REPS.

Sir, gentlemen of the South from whom it is my misfortune to differ on this occasion, will do me great injustice to suppose that it was my purpose, in anything I have said, to question or impugn the purity of their motives. They but follow their honest convictions, as I follow mine. I have endeavored to perform my duty as a Senator belonging to the same section; my opinion and advice have been given frankly and independently; but I hope without any presumption. I devoutly hope that whatever measure be adopted, though contrary to my opinion, may turn out to be that which is most beneficial to our country. I choose to be in the wrong, rather than that my country should suffer from my error.

I am neither of the Democratic nor of the Republican party. I wear no party shackles. I am here as the Senator of "Old Kentucky"—brave and noble old Commonwealth. My ambition is to act in her spirit and by her inspiration. I did not come here to act in the character of a partisan. Long service and experience in public affairs have divested me of much of the misconception, the prejudice and passion that belong to the partisan; and upon lately taking my seat here, probably in the last term of my public service, it was my intention and my hope to act rather the part of a patriot than that of a party man.

I am a true son of the South; may prosperity fill all her borders, and sunshine forever rest upon her head! But for all this, I do not love the Union the less. I am a true citizen of the United States; I claim the whole of it as my great country; and for the preservation of that Union which makes it so, I will always be ready to say and to do whatever in me lies. It is in this spirit, sir, that I have endeavored humbly to do my duty—my duty to the South, and my duty to the whole country.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

SPEECH OF HON. J. LETCHER,

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 12, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. LETCHER said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: In the discussion which took place some days since between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and myself, I then stated to the committee that I would seek some suitable occasion between that time and the close of this session of Congress to present my views fully on the interesting subject of Government expenditures. His speech exhibited all the evidences of careful preparation, and is interspersed with tables of figures that must have cost him immense labor in their construction. Without a moment's preparation, and without even the advantage of hearing the entire speech, I was called upon by several of my political friends to reply. Under these circumstances, I entered into the debate, and amid constant interruptions from the gentleman himself, and several others, replied briefly to some of the leading positions which he had assumed. The speech, which was doubtless intended for general circulation, as a campaign document, preparatory to the elections that will take place this fall, demands, from its ability and ingenuity, a more elaborate reply than it was in my power then to make.

This speech, and others made in the latter part of this session, gives reason to believe that the questions which divided parties in other days are again to be revived. Since the adjustment of the Kansas controversy, and its removal from the congressional Halls, gentlemen in this and the other end of the Capitol have directed their attention to subjects of more practical importance and of more immediate interest to the people. In the past two months our discussions have been mainly confined to questions within the range of legitimate congressional action. Questions of a financial character and bearing; the tariff and its revision; the disposition of the public lands and their proceeds; the comprehensive subject of internal improvements; the best mode of raising revenue to defray the expenses of the Government, and the purposes and objects to which it should be applied; and last, but by no means least in importance, our relations with foreign Governments—these now furnish the topics for speeches and claim from us that consideration which has been too long withheld from them, and too often directed to exciting sectional questions, mischievous in their tendency and ruinous to the peace, prosperity, and fraternity of the people who constitute the States and organized Territories of this great nation. These things indicate a return to the policy of the earlier and better days of the Republic—those days in which Representatives of the people legislated practically within the limits of the Constitution; exhibiting that manly patriotism which embraced the whole Union and its interests, and repudiated all attempts to interfere with the rights and institutions of the States. They recognized and acted upon the doctrine—the Union of the States is secure so long as the rights of the States are respected. I trust most sincerely that these indications are not deceptive, and that they presage a calm and happy future, when sectional controversy and strife shall be banished from the national councils.

The bill now under consideration proposes a loan of $15,000,000, which is absolutely necessary to enable the Government to meet its obligations. The gentleman from Ohio admits the necessity of the measure; admits that the Government must have the amount provided for in this bill, or the obligations incurred cannot be met as they mature. Yet, strange to say, he avows his opposition to the only feasible measure that has been or that can be presented to furnish the means required to sustain the credit of the Government! After voting with a vast majority of his party friends to create this necessity—after a formal complaint that we would not increase the expenditures by voting $1,500,000 to the improvement of rivers and harbors in the Northwest—he now comes forward to resist the passage of a bill to furnish the means required to meet the appropriations made by the two Houses of Congress. The policy of that side of the House seems to be to vote expenditures, and then refuse the means to meet them—to impose burdens on the Government, and then repudiate all the measures proposed for its relief. I anticipated such a result, and hence it was that I have on several occasions during the session proposed to ingraft upon the bills a section providing for a loan sufficient to cover the expenditures provided for in each. It is my deliberate opinion now that such a section should have been ingrafted upon all the appropriation bills, and then those who voted the expenditure would have been compelled to take the responsibility of providing the means to pay the sums appropriated. The House, however, did not concur in this opinion, and hence it is that many of the most liberal voters for expenditures of money will now refuse to give their support to this bill. If it shall fail, these appropriations must remain unsatisfied, until it shall please Congress to provide the necessary means. Neither the President nor the Secretary of the Treasury has authority or power to furnish the money for that purpose beyond the provision made by the Treasury note bill, and the accruing revenue from customs and lands.

The gentleman charges that on the 1st day of July last there was a surplus of $17,710,114 in the Treasury, and that Congress has already granted $20,000,000 of Treasury notes, making an aggregate sum of means of $37,710,114 in a single year, which, together with the current revenue, has all been expended by this profligate Administration. These facts, in his opinion, make out a clear and undeniable case of extravagance against the party in power. Accompany me in the investigation of these facts, and we will ascertain the precise weight to be given to the charge.

The Secretary of the Treasury informs us in his annual report that the public debt amounted on the 1st of July last to the sum $29,060,386 90, and since that time the sum of $3,895,232 39 of the debt has been redeemed. This sum, then, is to be deducted from the surplus in the Treasury at the date fixed by the gentleman from Ohio. Making this deduction, we have the sum of $13,814,881 61, instead of the sum with which we are charged in the account as stated by him; or, in other words, an error within a fraction of $4,000,000. Now add the $20,000,000 of Treasury notes authorized by the act of this session, and we have the gross sum of $33,814,881 61, instead of $37,710,114. Deduct the amount contained in the deficiency bills, stated by the gentleman to be $11,201,708, and we shall then have a balance of $22,613,173 61.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask whether the present Administration can, with even a show of reason or justice, be held responsible, by its bitter enemy, for the expenditure this year of a dollar beyond the amount of the deficiency bills, which we have passed? The remaining $22,613,173 61 is the unavoidable result of paying for the legislation of the last Congress, of which the gentleman from Ohio was a leading member. The Speaker of the House in that Congress belonged to the Opposition. An Opposition majority controlled and directed the legislation. A Committee of Ways and Means, Opposition by two to one, reported the appropriation bills, and that Opposition are responsible to the country for the expenditures of the present fiscal year, expiring on the 30th day of this month.

The gentleman then proceeds to give us the items that are embraced in the deficiency bills passed at the present session, and charges that the extravagance of the Administration has rendered the passage of those deficiency bills necessary. He presents the following table of items, to which I invite the attention of the committee:

Sound dues by treaty with Denmark	$333,011
Printing deficiency already passed	341,188
Balance of printing deficiency for this year (estimated)	600,000
Miscellaneous	373,318
Army deficiency	7,925,000
Post Office deficiency	1,469,173
	$11,041,690

The first item charged against the present Administration, in the gentleman's table, is $333,011, for the Sound dues, by treaty with Denmark. This treaty was negotiated by the last Administration, and, as no appropriation was made to meet its stipulations, the duty was devolved upon the present Congress of furnishing the money required to fulfill its provisions. Can it be pretended that this item furnishes evidence to prove the extravagance of the present Administration? Was it not our duty to execute that treaty fully, fairly, and justly, to the letter? There cannot be two opinions on that point. The next item is the printing deficiency of $341,188. The legislation of the last Congress imposed upon the country the debt for printing, and the duty of paying this debt has been devolved upon us. Will the gentleman pretend that the Administration is in any sense, or to any extent, responsible for this expenditure? They had no agency in contracting the debt; but it came down to them as a burden imposed upon them by the Republican House, over which N. P. Banks presided as Speaker. The next item is an "estimated" printing deficiency for this year of $600,000, which, if it is to be provided for, is needed to pay the debts entailed upon us mainly by the last House. Why was the printing ordered by the Opposition? Did they not know when it was ordered that it would have to be paid for, and as it was ordered by the Opposition—the gentleman's friends in the House—with what propriety can they now arraign us for providing the means to pay for it, if we shall be compelled to do so? Neither the Administration or its friends in this House can be held responsible for it. But will such a sum have to be paid? I apprehend not, as our action shows that we have only appropriated in the sundry civil bill the sum of $316,000 for this purpose. Here, then, is another error of the neat little sum of $284,000—no great amount, to be sure, yet still worthy of a passing notice. Then we have an item, styled miscellaneous, of $373,318, which is intended to pay off obligations imposed upon us by the legislation of the last Congress. It is under this head that we find the appropriations for custom-houses, marine hospitals, and other public buildings, which cover the "jobs and contracts" to which he refers. I cannot suppose that the gentleman designs to impute dishonesty to the officers of the Government in connection with the contracts for these buildings ordered by Congress. The contracts which have been made, were made by the Fillmore and Pierce administrations, and not by the present Administration. But for the Opposition these buildings would not have been ordered by Congress, and I would really like to know what the gentleman from Galena [Mr. WASHBURN] and from Detroit [Mr. HOWARD] and from Louisville [Mr. MARSHALL] and from Cleveland [Mr. WADE] think of this assault, coming from so distinguished an Opposition leader. Let the gentleman and his friends shoulder the responsibility which legitimately attaches to them for the necessity which demanded this appropriation. The Administration is in no just sense chargeable with it, and the country will so decide. Then we have the Army deficiency of $7,925,000, paraded as another evidence of extravagance and profligacy. Was this expenditure necessary? I maintain that it was; that the public sentiment of the people, without distinction of party, demanded that the laws should be enforced in Utah. The President has executed this order of the people, and has brought the Mormons into subjection to the lawful authority of the Government. A prudent forecast, a wise statesmanship, have controlled and directed the entire policy of the President towards these misguided people; and peace, quiet, order, and obedience to the laws have been secured without firing a gun or shedding a drop of human blood. Everywhere this result is hailed with satisfaction, and the sound, conservative men of the nation applauded the prudence, wisdom, firmness, and practical judgment which have been exhibited by the Administration in the happy adjustment of this difficult and dangerous question. Let the gentleman from Ohio and his party friends make the issue that the President has done wrong; that the measures which he has adopted have been unwise and injudicious; let them, if they see fit, charge that he has wasted the public money, and they will find us ready to meet them and try the issue before the people. The respect and affection of the people for law and order, their settled and determined hostility to everything that wears the appearance of open resistance to the authority of a Government to which we owe obedience, leaves no room for doubt as to their verdict whenever such issues shall be presented to them for their decision. We challenge the Opposition to these issues. Will they, dare they, meet us upon them? If they think we have spent more money than is necessary, we call upon them to specify the items of expenditure that are, in their judgment, extravagant. Withhold in future your wholesale charges, and give us the details. In the name of the tax-paying millions, I demand this of you. This sum, however, has been appropriated to support the army in Utah, for the next year, and is therefore an advance—not a deficiency. The last item enumerated is, the deficiency for the Post Office Department, amounting to $1,469,173. Was not this expenditure required to carry out the legislation of the last Congress? New post routes were established, and mails could not be placed upon them without entailing expense upon the Treasury. To meet this expense we were compelled to provide the means in the deficiency bill, passed at the opening of the session. I imagine the gentleman, and nine tenths of his friends in both Houses, voted for the post-route bill; the execution of which made this expenditure unavoidable.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Public Expenditures—Mr. Letcher.

HO. OF REPS.

On this branch of the subject I prove that the gentleman from Ohio has committed several very extraordinary errors—unintentional I doubt not, but yet such errors as clearly demonstrate that implicit reliance should not be placed upon his calculations. The first error consists in charging the Administration with the surplus in the Treasury on the 1st of July last, and withholding from it credit for the amount of the public debt, which it has paid out of it since that date. The second error consists in fixing the Sound dues, by treaty with Denmark, at $333,011, when the true sum is $408,731 44. The third error consists in estimating the balance of the printing deficiency for the year ending the 30th of this month at $600,000, while the civil appropriation bill shows that it is only $316,000. The fourth error consists in fixing the amount of the deficiency bills passed at this session at $11,041,690, when it should have been $9,704,209 89 for the first, and $341,189 58 for the printing bill, and $408,731 44 for the treaty with Denmark, making, in the aggregate, $10,454,130 91. Rather serious errors in a speech which was designed to be used as a text-book by the Opposition in their war upon the Administration!

I now come to his estimate of the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1859. He makes a most startling exhibit, and works out an aggregate of expenditures for the next year of $92,143,202. And how is this monstrous result ascertained? In the first place, he informs us that the Secretary of the Treasury estimates the expenditures for the year named at $74,064,755, and then he adds the following items, amounting to $18,089,547:

Three new regiments	$4,289,547
Probable Post Office deficiencies over amount appropriated	2,500,000
Public buildings	1,700,000
Private bills, (estimated)	1,000,000
Printing deficiency	600,000
Army deficiency, (estimated to be the same as last year)	8,000,000

Not one cent has been appropriated for the three new regiments—the President having ascertained that they would not be needed for the service in Utah. In the regular Post Office appropriation bill we have appropriated for the Post Office Department, for the year 1859, the sum of $3,500,000, which exceeds the regular appropriation for the present year, by the sum of $1,000,000. The Post Office Department drew from the Treasury, for the year ending June 30, 1858, $3,969,173. Suppose the Department should require the same amount for the year 1859, as we have provided in the regular appropriation bill for $3,500,000, we would only be called upon for the additional sum of $469,173. This, then, is an error of upwards of $2,000,000 in his estimate in regard to this single item. The regular appropriation bill contains all the sums necessary for public buildings, amounting to $3,104,600; and this, therefore, is likewise an erroneous estimate. We have been charged once by the gentleman with the printing deficiency of $600,000 in the expenditures of 1858; but, for some reason that he has not chosen to assign, he again charges us with it in the expenditures of the year 1859. And, finally, he estimates that the Army deficiency for the year 1859 will amount to the round sum of $8,000,000. All these are conjectures, and, so far as their accuracy can be tested by existing facts, they are shown to be of the most unreliable character. That the gentleman himself is not satisfied with them is clearly manifest from his declaration that they "may be over-estimated." I submit it to him to say, whether, from the facts now before him, he is not entirely satisfied that they are greatly "over-estimated."

The gentleman then proceeds thus:

"Now, this sum of $92,000,000 does not include any of the following items of expenditure, and I wish gentlemen to add those, upon their own estimate, to this aggregate: For protecting works commenced on our numerous rivers and harbors, the lowest estimate of which is $1,500,000; and then there is your Calendar of one thousand private bills demanding your attention. There is the pension bill for the old soldiers of the war of 1812, proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. SAVAGE], requiring $8,000,000 per annum. There are the ten new war steamers, proposed by my friend from Virginia, [Mr. BOOCOCK], $2,500,000. The French spoliation bill, urged so forcibly by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS], which, if passed, will require $5,000,000. The duties to be refunded on goods destroyed by fire—I do not know how much. Commutation to the heirs of revolutionary soldiers—I do not know how much. Claims growing out of Indian wars in Oregon and Washington, urged by the Delegate from Oregon, and certified by an executive officer, $5,000,000. Then we have the Pacific railroad, a foretaste of the cost of which we have had in $1,000,000 expended already in the publication of the report of the surveys."

But two of the measures enumerated in this formidable list by the gentleman from Ohio have received the sanction of Congress—the addition of seven steamers for the Navy, and for that purpose an appropriation of $1,200,000 has been embraced in the regular naval bill; and the amount necessary to pay the private claims allowed by Congress. What sum will be required for this latter purpose cannot now be determined, but I imagine it will exceed his estimate of $1,000,000. The bill to refund duties on goods destroyed by fire was defeated in the House before the gentleman's speech was delivered. Bear in mind the fact, that none of these measures have been recommended by the Departments or the President.

Having thus noticed the gentleman's estimate, I now desire to inquire whether he is not in favor of all the measures he has referred to, and whether he is not ready to give each and all his cordial and hearty approval? Are not his political associates, or, at any rate, an overwhelming majority of them, in favor of all these measures, and are they not ready to cast their votes in aid of their passage? Whatever may be the gentleman's individual position, I apprehend there can be little, if any, doubt as to the position of the larger portion of his political friends.

I now come to the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to the recommendations of the Committee of Ways and Means, made to Congress at the present session:

The Secretary estimates that of the appropriations for 1859, there will be expended during 1859	$16,586,588 35
Permanent and indefinite appropriations	$7,165,224 49
Add for collection of revenue from customs	1,150,000 00
	8,315,224 49
Recommendations for the year 1859, as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means	52,295,048 22
All other appropriations (estimated) at the present session	3,000,000 00
	55,295,048 22
Of this sum there will be expended during the year 1860	15,000,000 00
	40,295,048 22
	$65,196,861 06

When the gentleman from Ohio made his estimate of $92,000,000 as the expenditures for the year 1859, he was sadly mistaken in his calculations. Against his conjectural estimates I now oppose conjectural estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury; and it is palpable that the gentleman has been mistaken to the extent of only about $27,000,000. Is it to be wondered at that, with such errors as I have pointed out, the shrewd editor of the New York Tribune, in his issue of the 3d of this month, in noticing the gentleman's speech, should have said: "We should have liked it much better if it had worn no party aspect, and had been undeniably non-partisan in its scope and bearings?"

I propose to examine into the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury a little further, to show that he has exhibited sound judgment and practical knowledge of the duties of his office:

The annual estimates of appropriations submitted are	$30,312,943 13
Other estimates referred to the Committee of Ways and Means at various times during the session	3,909,917 91
	$34,222,861 04

So much for the estimates of the Secretary. Now, I present the regular appropriations for the service of the year 1859, amounting to the sum of $53,453,233 22:

Pension	$769,590 00
Indian, regular	1,338,164 49
" supplemental	959,957 86
" deficiency	339,593 00
Consular and diplomatic	912,120 00
Military Academy	182,804 00
Naval	14,508,354 23
Sundry civil	5,537,148 07
Legislative, executive, and judicial	6,134,093 61
Army	17,145,806 46
Mail steamer	960,700 00
Post Office	3,500,000 00
Collecting revenues from imports permanent, additional	1,150,000 00
	$53,453,233 22

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Public Expenditures—Mr. Letcher.

HO. OF REPS.

To which add:
Treasury notes.....1858	$20,000 00
Manufacture of arms. "	360,000 00
Expenses investigating
committees.....	35,000 00
Treaty with Denmark. "	408,731 09
Deficiency in printing,
&c.....	341,189 58
Deficiency for the year	9,704,209 89
Deaf, dumb, and blind,
District of Columbia, "	3,000 00
Expenses investigating
committees.....	12,000 00
Clerks in Oregon to register and receiver. "	7,000 00
Running Texas boundary line.....1859	80,000 00
Incident to the loan of
$20,000,000.....	5,000 00
	10,976,130 91
	$64,434,364 13
Esimate:
Other appropriations, bills not printed and indefinite, including all private bills.....	3,565,635 87
	$68,000,000 00

Thus we find that the expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1859, amount to the sum of $68,000,000, instead of $52,000,000, as estimated by the gentleman from Ohio. If the wishes of the President and Cabinet, and a large majority of the Democratic members of Congress, could have prevailed, the expenditures would have fallen below this sum. The result, however, demonstrates most conclusively that the conjectural estimates of the gentleman from Ohio were not within millions of the true amount, and should cause the people to distrust all theoretical and imaginative calculations on subjects of so much importance to their welfare.

And, in this connection, permit me to express my cordial approval of the sentiments embodied by the President in his annual message, in which he declares that—

"An overflowing Treasury has led to habits of prodigality and extravagance in our legislation. It has induced Congress to make large appropriations to objects for which they never would have provided had it been necessary to raise the amount of revenue required to meet them by increased taxation or by loans. We are now compelled to pause in our career, and to scrutinize our expenditure with the utmost vigilance; and in performing this duty, I pledge my cooperation to the extent of my constitutional competency.

"It ought to be observed at the same time that true public economy does not consist in withholding the means necessary to accomplish important national objects intrusted to us by the Constitution, and especially such as may be necessary for the common defense. In the present crisis of the country it is our duty to confine our appropriations to objects of this character, unless in cases where justice to individuals may demand a different course. In all cases care ought to be taken that the money granted by Congress shall be faithfully and economically applied.

"Under the Federal Constitution, every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it becomes a law, be approved and signed by the President; and, if not approved, he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it originated. In order to perform this high and responsible duty, sufficient time must be allowed the President to read and examine every bill presented to him for approval. Unless this be afforded, the Constitution becomes a dead letter in this particular; and even worse, it becomes a means of deception. Our constituents, seeing the President's approval and signature attached to each act of Congress, are induced to believe that he has actually performed this duty, when, in truth, nothing is, in many cases, more unfounded.

"From the practice of Congress, such an examination of each bill as the Constitution requires has been rendered impossible. The most important business of each session is generally crowded into its last hours, and the alternative presented to the President is either to violate the constitutional duty which he owes to the people, and approve bills which, for want of time, it is impossible he should have examined, or, by his refusal to do this, subject the country and individuals to great loss and inconvenience.

"Besides, a practice has grown up of late years to legislate in appropriation bills at the last hour of the session on new and important subjects. This practice constrains the President either to suffer measures to become laws which he does not approve, or to incur the risk of stopping the wheels of the Government by vetoing an appropriation bill. Formerly, such bills were confined to specific appropriations for carrying into effect existing laws and the well-established policy of the country, and little time was then required by the President for their examination."

Conservative men of all parties have expressed their approbation of these sentiments, and it should be cause of gratulation with all that the President has adhered to them with so much firmness and courage. His course at this session has saved millions of dollars that would have been uselessly expended. It has given to the country cleaner appropriation bills than we have heretofore had during my service in Congress. He has in this respect inaugurated a policy that will insure results important to sound legislation, and of lasting benefit to the people. It is a practical measure, well calculated to bring about a much-needed economy in public expenditures. For it he deserves the thanks of the people, and they will be gratefully accorded.

So true a friend to economy has the President shown himself, and so anxious is he to secure it in his administration of the Government, that he has again, this day, in a special message, endeavored to impress upon Congress his views on this interesting subject. Who can fail to indorse these sentiments in his special message? Who can hesitate to accord to them his entire approval?

"Adversity teaches useful lessons to nations as well as individuals. The habit of extravagant expenditures, fostered by a large surplus in the Treasury, must now be corrected, or the country will be involved in serious financial difficulties.

"Under any form of government extravagance in expenditure must be the natural consequence when those who authorize the expenditure feel no responsibility in providing the means of payment. Such had been for a number of years our condition previously to the late monetary revulsion in the country. Fortunately, at least for the cause of public economy, the case is now reversed; and to the extent of the appropriations, whatever these may be, ingrafted on the different appropriation bills, as well as those made by private bills, over and above the estimates of the different Departments, it will be necessary for Congress to provide the means of payment before their adjournment. Without this, the Treasury will be exhausted before the 1st of January, and the public credit will be seriously impaired. This disgrace must not fall upon the country."

The gentleman, then, charges that the expenditures now are extravagant beyond all precedent, and that they are wholly inexcusable upon any fair ground. Before proceeding to reply to the views which he presents in this part of his argument, I desire to call attention to some historical facts that are important in this connection, and which are indispensable to a correct judgment upon the issues he has tendered.

And first, as to the number of States and organized Territories, and their area, in 1815; and the number of States and Territories, and their area, in 1858. At the former period we had eighteen States, covering an area of 504,412 square miles, and five organized Territories, (exclusive of the District of Columbia,) covering an area of 254,452 square miles. In 1858 we have thirty-two States, covering an area of 1,602,000 square miles, six organized Territories, (exclusive of the District of Columbia,) covering an area of 1,401,000 square miles. Besides this, we have the Mesilla valley, embracing 78,000 square miles, and Indian Territory, embracing 187,000 square miles. In 1815, therefore, the States and Territories covered 759,864 square miles, while in 1858 they cover 3,268,000 square miles, an area four times and one third larger now than in 1815.

In 1815 the strength of our Army was 10,000 men, while in 1858 its strength is 17,984 men.

In 1815 the Navy comprised 968 officers, of all grades, (including marines.) In 1858 the officers had increased to 1,336. In 1815 the number of men cannot be ascertained, but from the best evidence that can be obtained, the number was about 5,370. Now the number is 8,500. In 1816 we had 52 vessels, carrying 1,119 guns; 25 vessels with no armament; 4 bombs, and 11 gun-boats—making 92. In 1858 we have 10 ships-of-the-line, carrying 872 guns; 10 frigates carrying 500 guns; 21 sloops-of-war, carrying 426 guns; 3 brigs, carrying 16 guns; 1 schooner, carrying 3 guns; 8 screw steamers of the first class, carrying 268 guns; 6 of the second class, carrying 89 guns; 2 of the third class, carrying 11 guns; 3 side-wheel steamers of the first class, carrying 24 guns; 1 of the second class, carrying 6 guns; 2 of the third class, carrying 6 guns—making a total of 2,221 guns. Besides these there are two tenders for the screw-steamers, and one tender for the side-wheel steamers, and five permanent store and receiving ships.

Captain Wright, of the engineer department, to whom I applied for information on the subject of fortifications, says:

"I am not aware of any records in this office giving the number of fortifications in the United States in 1815, and believe it would be a work of much labor and time to ascertain with certainty what the number was. Many of the works bearing the name of forts were merely improvised field works or batteries; while others, like those on Staten Island, for the defense of the entrance to the harbor of New York, were State works."

As to the number of fortifications in 1858, Captain Wright says:

"There are at the present time, under the charge of the engineer department, fifty-six distinct permanent works of fortifications on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, and on the northern lake frontier, which are either completed or in course of construction. In addition to these, appropriations were made at the last regular session of Congress for ten additional works, on which little or nothing has been done toward the commencement."

The number of light-houses and light vessels prior to 1815 was 49. In 1858 lights of all kinds, including beacon lights and light-vessels, existing and authorized to be built, number 602. About 33 have not been finished, but are in the course of construction.

In 1815 we had 99 collectors of the revenue, and 77 surveyors, and in 1821 we had 631 inferior officers in the revenue service. In 1858 the number of collectors is 116, and the number of surveyors 110—making 226. The number of inferior officers employed in the collection of the revenue is 3,088.

The number of land offices in 1815 was 19. The number in 1858 is 86.

The expenditure for the Indian service in 1815 amounted to $111,750. The same service now requires an expenditure of $4,158,430 39.

In 1815 the number of pensioners was estimated at 1,400, and the amount paid to them was $98,000. At this time the number has increased to 13,186, and $1,365,717 54 is now required for their payment.

These facts, thus presented, clearly show the condition and extent of our territory, the larger portion of which has been acquired since 1815, the period at which the gentleman sums up the annual expenditures on the third page of his speech. Since that time we have acquired the Floridas, Texas, New Mexico, and California, and the Gadsden purchase. Under these circumstances, no fair or just comparison in regard to the expenditures can be instituted between the years 1815 and 1858. It would be about as fair and wise to institute a comparison between the expenditures of a child and those of the full-grown man.

The gentleman is a recognized leader of his party, and to this position he is fairly entitled by his intelligence and character. He was a member of the last Congress, and I desire, as he is now preaching economy, to call his attention to some of the legislation of that Congress, in which he participated, and for which he and his party, so far as the House is concerned, are responsible, to a great extent at least.

The submarine telegraph bill appropriated $70,000 per annum to that scheme until the interest on the investment should reach six per cent., and then $50,000 for twenty-five years. The company had the use of two of our best vessels and their crews. But six Democrats voted for the bill.

On the proposition to pay $186,765 85 for books for members of Congress, only eleven Democrats voted for it.

The appropriation of $100,000 for the Capitol dome was voted for by both parties, and therefore each party is responsible to the extent of the support given to it.

The bill creating a Lieutenant General, and increasing the pay of the officers and men in the Army, was passed by the last Congress, and was most cordially supported by the Opposition party in this House.

During the Thirty-Fourth Congress, $16,022 was appropriated to pay per diem and mileage to Archer, Fouke, Turney, Reeder, Milliken, and Bennett, for contesting the seats of members returned to that Congress; and in all those cases the contests were decided against them. The yeas and nays show that the Opposition are responsible for this expenditure.

During the same Congress river and harbor bills, footing up the sum of $745,000, were passed by the Opposition and vetoed by President Pierce, greatly to the annoyance of the gentleman and his party. At the first session of the same Congress appropriations amounting to $3,189,739 were passed for forty-one custom-houses, court-houses, post officers, and marine hospitals. Of this number, only eleven were recommended by the Administration. At the third session of the same Congress, appropriations for the same purpose were made to thirty-one buildings of a like kind, amounting to $2,084,000, only four of which had the recommendation of the Administration.

During the same Congress appropriations amounting to the sum of $2,270,000 were made for the extension of the Capitol, the dome, and works of art. It was out of this appropriation for the Capitol extension, if I am rightly informed, that desks were purchased at ninety dollars each, and chairs at seventy dollars each, for the new hall of the House of Representatives.

The appropriations for the several items of the contingent fund for the House of Representatives for the Thirty-Third Congress amounted to $903,100 56. The appropriations for the same objects for the Thirty-Fourth Congress ran up, under the action of the Opposition in this House, who had the majority, to the sum of $1,087,770, showing an increase in this branch of expenditure of $184,669 44.

At the last session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress the Senate returned to this House the sundry civil bill with one hundred and three amendments, covering appropriations to the amount of $3,771,816 45. It came to this House on the last night of the session, when we had no opportunity even to read the amendments in the House. On the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, the House rejected all the amendments, and the bill and amendments thus rejected went to a committee of conference, who reported the next morning that the Senate should recede from amendments covering $713,256 01, and that the House should recede from its disagreement as to the residue. When the reading of the amendments was called for, Speaker Banks decided that they could not be read, and the House was brought to a vote on the adoption of the conference report—and thus, without any knowledge of what they were doing, the members voted away $3,058,560 44 of the public money, by 87 yeas to 67 nays. Of the eighty-seven yeas, fifty-eight belonged to the Opposition.

If I had the time, I would refer to some of the votes on the Senate's amendments to the sundry civil bill at the present session. For the custom-house and marine hospital amendments; for the amendment directing the payment to the State of Maine of usurious interest on money borrowed to carry on the Aroostook war; for the amendment appropriating to Gales & Seaton, $340,000 for the publication of the American State Papers; and other amendments that might be enumerated, a decided majority of the yeas came from the Opposition side of the House.

The gentleman complains that our foreign intercourse expenses have run up to an enormous figure. The gentleman evidently does not understand the subject. It will be recollected that awards paid under treaties and other payments of a like character are embraced in this expenditure. By way of illustration, I take the year ending June 30, 1849, when the appropriation for this object was $6,908,996 72, made under a Democratic Administration, and the year ending June 30, 1853, made under an Opposition Administration, when the appropriation was $950,871 30. In the former year $6,565,354 79, was used to fulfill treaty stipulations with the Mexican Republic, the King of the Two Sicilies, and the Republic of Peru, leaving a balance of $343,641 93. In the latter year only $297,155 57 was required to pay awards, leaving a balance of $653,715 73 for foreign intercourse proper—almost double the amount used for this purpose, in 1849. How will the gentleman explain this increase under Opposition rule?

Sweeping charges of extravagance, such as the gentleman has indulged in, do not strike my mind as the most satisfactory mode of discussing this question. If the charges are well founded, it is an exceedingly easy matter for gentlemen to designate the items in the annual appropriations that are not justified by a proper regard for economy. If you are for reform, present your measures, let them be examined, and, if they are wise and just, you can rely upon our support to aid in their passage. If you are in earnest, you will do this; but, until it shall be done, you cannot convince the people of your sincerity. Cease your denunciations, give us the details, bring forward your measures of retrenchment and reform, and thus furnish practical evidence of your disposition to remedy what you consider existing evils in the Administration of the Government and in our system of legislation.

Another question which has attracted a large share of public attention is the proper disposition to be made of the public lands. It is undeniably true that the Opposition in the North and Northwest, as a party, are committed to the policy of railroad grants. In the Thirty-Fourth Congress, when the Opposition had undisputed control in this House, the House Committee on Public Lands reported seven bills, making grants of alternate sections of land, six sections in width on each side of the respective roads, to the States of Iowa, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Mississippi, covering thirteen million six hundred and eighty-six thousand three hundred and four acres. A like grant was also made to the Territory of Minnesota, which passed the Senate by yeas 32, nays 10. Of the yeas, twenty-one were Democrats, nine Republicans, and two Fillmore-Americans. The ten who voted in the negative were all Democrats. When this bill came to the House, it was amended by a grant for Alabama, and as amended was passed by yeas 87, nays 60. Of the yeas sixty were Republicans, eighteen Democrats, and nine Fillmore-Americans; of the nays, twenty-two were Republicans, twenty-eight Democrats, and ten Fillmore-Americans. If I had time I would refer to the votes on such bills on other occasions to show that the Opposition cannot be relied upon to husband the public lands, and so to manage them that they may be a source of revenue to the Government. In my view, such dispositions of the public lands are wrong in principle, unjust to the old States, and of mischievous policy. Such grants build up monopolies, and monopolies are always prejudicial to individual interests and the equal rights of all.

In 1848, the Opposition raised the cry of extravagance against the Democratic party, and in the then existing condition of the public mind, succeeded in obtaining possession of the Government. Taylor and Fillmore were elected to the Presidency and Vice Presidency of the United States, and entered upon the discharge of their duties on the 4th of March, 1849. They came into power avowing their purpose to retrench expenditures and reform abuses which were alleged to exist under the Administration of their predecessors; and the people were induced to believe that these great results would be attained. During the administration of Mr. Polk, the duty of carrying on the war with Mexico devolved upon him, and, as a necessary consequence, the annual expenditures were much larger than, under other circumstances, they would have been. In the four years his expenditures amounting (exclusive of the public debt) to $165,381,026 58—being an annual average expenditure of $41,345,256 59. In the four years of Taylor and Fillmore the expenditures (exclusive of the public debt) amounted to $165,683,650 48—being an annual average expenditure of $41,420,912 62. The Whig administration, therefore, of Taylor and Fillmore, cost the people $75,656 04 a year more, in a time of profound peace, than the Democratic administration of Polk, cost them in a time of war. If such was the result in that instance, may we not reasonably anticipate a like result if the Opposition shall succeed in the next presidential struggle? The same men who elected Taylor and Fillmore now constitute the body of the Opposition arrayed against the present eminently patriotic Administration.

It is known to this committee that during my entire service in this body I have labored zealously to reduce expenditures. So decided has been my public action on this subject that it has subjected me to the fierce denunciations of agents and all others interested in large expenditures of the public money. Indeed, many of my political associates in the House, whose views upon this subjected are more liberal than my own, not unfrequently complain of the course which a sense of duty to those I represent constrains me to pursue. While I have resisted all appropriations for custom-house, marine hospital, court-house, post office, territorial and District buildings which are now dotted over this District, the States, and Territories, and in the construction of which millions of dollars have been most profligately dissipated, the Opposition in this House at the last session of the last Congress succeeded in appropriating for these objects no less a sum than $5,445,651 48. The appropriations for these objects alone, during the Thirty-Fourth Congress, amounted to the monstrous sum of $8,633,390 48!! The country will be astonished to learn that for the Capitol extension, the dome, and a few works of art, $4,970,000 have been appropriated since 1852. An enormous amount has also been appropriated to the aqueduct, that can only be told in millions. I have resisted all these things to the extent of my feeble ability, but who of the Opposition has come to my aid? Now and then, some one of them has raised his voice in opposition, but it is undeniable that an overwhelming majority of that party has voted for them. The nineteenth amendment of the Senate to the civil bill at this session made appropriations for eleven custom-houses, in different parts of the country, and on agreeing to that amendment the vote was—yeas 50, (Democrats, 18; Opposition, 32;) nays 73, (Democrats, 51; Opposition, 22.) I have resisted the increase of salaries, and the multiplication of officers and Government employés; and have, in all fair and honorable modes, endeavored to reduce the expenditures to the lowest practicable amount consistent with a proper regard to the public interest and an effective administration of the Government.

Such has been my course as a Representative of the people, and I now tender to the gentleman my cordial coöperation in all wise, just, and proper measures which he or his friends may propose for the reformation of abuses or the reduction of expenditures. I think the expenditures may be curtailed without detriment to the public service; that the number of officers may be diminished and many salaries reduced without prejudice or embarrassment to the prompt, intelligent, and faithful disposition of the public business. The gentleman will find this side of the House ready to second all efforts he may make to this end, and all he has to do is to introduce his measures at the earliest practicable moment. He has been rather dilatory heretofore, considering the magnitude and importance of the work before him, but still there is ample time during the next session to accomplish all that may be needed to inaugurate his reign of economy.

There is still another point—the “endless jobs and contracts,” to which the gentleman has referred. What those “jobs and contracts” are I have no means of knowing, and the gentleman has not informed me. For all “jobs and contracts” that were to let, I imagine at least one bidder could have been found among the Republicans in the last Congress. The results of the investigation at the close of the last session showed very conclusively that some of the Republicans kept an eye open to “the main chance,” and that they were the recipients of such plunder as was to be appropriated and enjoyed. Suspicion attached to no member of the Democratic party in that House.

I heard this remark, in regard to “jobs and contracts,” with no small degree of surprise, from the gentleman from Ohio; and I am sure, from my knowledge of him, that, in his moments of calm reflection, he will see the injustice he has done to the officers of the Government.

In this connection, permit me to say that the Democratic party passed the tariff bill of 1857—a measure of vast interest and importance to all sections of the country. At the present session an investigation into the mode of its passage was ordered, and it is a source of pride and pleasure to find that not a member of the Democratic party of either the House or the Senate could be found who was even suspected of being influenced in his action upon this measure by pecuniary or other improper considerations.

I have heard it said often and again in the House, during the present session, vote for expenditures, and thus create the necessity for a revival of the doctrine of protection for “protection's sake.” The Opposition, aided by a fraction of the Democratic party, have acted upon this principle, and have accordingly voted for numerous items of expenditure not recommended, either by the President or the heads of the Departments. Complaint has succeeded complaint that a high protective policy has not been recommended by the Administration. If it had been recommended and successfully carried out by legislation, what practical end could it have accomplished? Our exports have fallen off more than twenty per cent. and our imports have fallen off more than fifty per cent. as compared with last year, as the following facts demonstrate most conclusively.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

Exports from the port of New York, from January to May inclusive, in the year 1857, amounted to $46,460,641; for 1858, $36,516,465.

Importations of foreign goods, including specie, from January to May inclusive, at the port of New York, for the year 1857, amounted to $105,590,501; for 1858, $51,668,192.

Our revenue is mainly derived from imports; and if the importations fall off the receipts of the Government must be reduced in a corresponding ratio. Under the recent revulsion, which prostrated commerce, trade, and business, the importations were necessarily reduced to so great an extent that the revenue from that source fell greatly short of the sum which, under ordinary circumstances, would have flown into the Treasury; and hence the necessity of borrowing an amount of money sufficient to supply the deficiency until the financial storm should blow over, and commerce, trade, and business of all kinds should again resume their wonted activity. That time is coming, and by the month of August or September we shall in all probability have a pretty lively trade, and it will continue to improve to the first of the next year.

But says the gentleman from Ohio and his friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. DUFFEE,] something must be done for the manufacturers. The tariff of last year must be overthrown and substituted by a measure more highly protective—a measure something like that of 1842. The manufacturers of cottons, woollens, and the iron and coal interests of the nation imperatively require a change that will give them greater protection. From the complaints made by the gentleman from Rhode Island we would be naturally brought to the conclusion that the manufacturing interest was the only one that had been affected by the financial storm that has swept over the country. But it is not so. All other interests have suffered and are as greatly depressed. In the South, the East, and the West, all business is seriously depressed, and they could with as much propriety demand from the Federal Government relief from their pecuniary embarrassments. If the tariff of 1857 prostrated the iron and coal interests and the cotton and woollen interests in the North, what has caused the embarrassment and depression in these and all other branches of industry and trade in the other sections of the Union? I do not propose to enter into a general discussion of this subject at the present time. I will content myself with a few facts in regard to the production of iron in our own country, to show that, whatever embarrassment may now attend this interest, it is not justly attributable to our tariff legislation in the last Congress.

In 1809, the production of iron of all kinds in our country was about 50,000 tons. In 1820, owing to the war, it ran down to about 10,000 tons. Between the years 1820 and 1826 it rose steadily until it reached 100,000 tons. In 1828, it rose to 110,000 tons; in 1830, to 190,000 tons; in 1833, to 210,000 tons. In this year the compromise tariff measure was adopted, under the operations of which the duties were regularly reduced each year. Between the years 1833 and 1840 the production steadily increased, until in the latter year it reached 310,000 tons. In 1842 it dropped down to 240,000 tons. Between the years 1842 and 1846, after the railroad fever had broken out in our country, it rose to 775,000 tons. The production continued to increase until, in 1848, it reached 800,000 tons. In 1849, it sunk to 640,000 tons; in 1850, to 560,000 tons; and continued to fall until, in 1852, it had reached 500,000 tons. In 1853 it rose rapidly to 650,000 tons; in 1854, to 800,000 tons; and continued to rise until, in 1855, it reached 1,000,000 tons. If the theory of gentlemen now contended for be true, I call upon them to explain how it was that, under the operation of the tariff of 1846, the production sunk from 800,000 tons in 1848 (two years after the bill was passed) to 500,000 tons in 1852; and, again, I call upon them to explain how (under the operation of the same tariff) the production rose, in the short space of three years, from 500,000 tons in 1852 to 1,000,000 tons in 1855. These facts are important, and eminently deserve consideration. In my view, they demonstrate conclusively the fallacy of the Opposition theory, which charges depression of the iron interest to the tariff legislation of the last Congress. The revulsion through which we are now passing is justly chargeable to individual imprudence, and not to Governmental action. We live in an age of the world characterized most strongly by individual and social extravagance. Extravagance has its punishment in poverty; and our commercial, mechanical, agricultural, and manufacturing interests, as well as all other interests in the country, are suffering that punishment which imprudence in expenditure has brought upon them. Economy, energy, industry, and a determined spirit will relieve us from our pecuniary trials, and restore to us that prosperity which has been so suddenly lost, and the loss of which has been accompanied by so much physical suffering and anguish of mind.

The Democratic party and the country demand a stable policy on this subject. The Government must raise its revenue mainly by duties on imports, and those duties should be fairly imposed with reference to the amount of revenue which may be needed to carry on its operations, due regard being had to economy in expenditure. All the interests of the nation and all sections should be considered in adjusting the details of the measure, to the end that equal and exact justice may be done. This is all the South asks, and surely it is entitled to it.

The "ultra protectionists" demand more. They demand legislation for specified branches of industry, and would burden all other interests to secure it. This species of legislation we are inflexibly opposed to, because we see and feel its injustice, and know that it must end in the creation of sectional jealousies, prejudicial to that harmony and cordiality which is so greatly to be cherished, and so important to our progress as a nation. The excessively and oppressively protective tariff of 1828 produced results that shook the nation to its center, and at one time seriously imperiled the existence of the Union. Patriotism, however, triumphed, and the measure of 1833 was passed, which gave peace to our distracted country. A high degree of prosperity followed, but the protectionists were not satisfied, and, to carry out their ultra views, passed the tariff of 1842. So much dissatisfaction resulted from it, that it was found necessary to repeal it in 1846. The latter measure remained in full force and effect until, in 1857, it was ascertained that it raised more revenue than was needed for an economical administration of the Government. We thus see that high tariffs, adopted with more reference to protection than revenue, have been short-lived, and eminently mischievous to the public peace in their operations and results.

Give us, then, something fair, just, and equal, and our prosperity and progress as a nation will be secured.

FIFTEEN MILLION LOAN.

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN BELL, OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE SENATE, May 26, 1858.

The Senate having under consideration the bill to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of $15,000,000; the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SIMMONS to provide for the home valuation of all foreign imports—

Mr. BELL said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: I perceive the anxiety of the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] and the disposition of the Senate generally, to vote upon this subject without further debate, and it is certainly with great hesitation that I obtrude myself on the attention of Senators by making any remarks on the subject; but it strikes me as one that deserves more consideration than it has yet received, and one that, from its peculiar, and, in some respects, extraordinary character, calls for a scrutiny such as, under ordinary circumstances, a loan bill might not require.

What is this measure, Mr. President? Here is a proposition for a loan of $15,000,000 within a little more than four months from the date of a former one of $20,000,000, both of which being sums declared to be necessary to carry on the Government until the end of the present calendar year, or until the next session of Congress; thus increasing the public debt within a single year to the amount of $35,000,000; and yet no plan is proposed or provision made for its redemption, and none to increase the receipts of the Treasury from the ordinary sources of revenue; and this, too, in a time of peace. But so little importance appears to be attached to these striking facts by the administrators of the Government, that they scarcely condescend to give an explanation of them. Even the Senator from Virginia himself [Mr. HUNTER] has touched very lightly, and given apparently but little attention to, the important questions which lie back of the present one. I pass by all that, however, for the present. I suppose there may be some considerations of policy or interest connected with the Administration which dictate a course so unusual on such subjects.

But, sir, it is not easy to pass without notice another circumstance connected with the measure now before the Senate. The tables of the trade of the country, and other well-authenticated facts, show that the frauds committed upon the customs revenue, supposing the imports in future to be as large as they have been in the last seven years, will amount annually to a sum equal to the proposed loan, and even exceed that amount, if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. TOOMBS] is right in his estimate. These frauds have been practiced ever since the passage of the tariff of 1846, and chiefly in consequence of the policy of levying the duties under that act on the foreign value. It is estimated by the honorable Senator from Georgia that the custom-house returns do not show the real amount of importations, and that the deficiency last year was not less than one hundred million dollars. Estimating the average duty under the act of 1857, on the whole amount of the imports, at fifteen per cent., it will be seen that a saving could be made of the amount of the proposed loan in one year, by providing a remedy against frauds in the collection of it. But supposing the annual amount of imported merchandise exhibited in the custom-house accounts to be less than the actual value imported, by $50,000,000, one half the deficiency estimated by the Senator from Georgia, still it will be seen that a saving in the revenues might be effected in two years, under a fair and honest system of collection, to the amount of $15,000,000—the sum proposed to be borrowed.

Another view of this subject will show results not less striking. Taking $200,000,000 as the average amount of importations for the last ten years—and that is under the average—and further estimating $50,000,000 as the difference between the value of the imports taken from the custom-house accounts and the actual value annually imported, it will be seen that $500,000,000 of foreign goods have been imported into the country, in the last ten years, beyond what appears in the tables reported by the Secretary of the Treasury; and that, in the same period, the frauds upon the public revenue have been upwards of seventy-five million dollars. Under such circumstances, I am surprised that the honorable Senator from Virginia should interpose any formal or technical objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. SIMMONS,] by which many or all the devices by which such extensive frauds have heretofore been practiced upon the revenue may be corrected, and the wants of the Treasury be amply supplied without the slightest change of the duties authorized by the act of 1846. Does not the long continuance of these frauds, and no remedy proposed for their correction, present a most extraordinary state of the public councils and administration of the Government?

That is not all. The international trade of the country has become demoralizing in its tendency; the tone and character of the American merchant is lowered; the honest importer is driven from his employment. I undertake to state that three fourths of the foreign trade of the country is now in the hands of foreigners, their agents, or factors. If I am wrong in my estimate, I would thank my friend from Rhode Island to correct me.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

Mr. SIMMONS. You have not overstated it.

Mr. BELL. These are important considerations of themselves; but the main point is, that at a time when the Treasury is annually defrauded of from ten to fifteen million dollars, by undervaluations and other devices, and when a loan is proposed of $15,000,000 beyond the current receipts, to carry on the Government until the next session of Congress, in itself a revenue measure, the honorable Senator from Virginia objects to an amendment which proposes no new duties, but simply to enforce the collection of those now authorized by law, on the ground that it is unconstitutional. On the same principle, it would seem to me that exception might be made to the bill as it now stands. What is that bill but a measure to raise revenue? As to the objection of the constitutionality of the amendment offered, I will not say that there is no plausible ground upon which that objection may be urged. It is true that, if the amendment should prevail, the receipts of the Treasury will be increased; and that is the extent of the argument. The objection can only be defended upon narrow and technical principles. There is not a single item of imports upon which the rate of the existing duty is proposed to be raised by the amendment. There are no new articles of commerce enumerated in the amendment on which duties are proposed to be levied. One would suppose that a bill to raise revenue within the meaning of the Constitution, in the clause requiring all such bills to originate in the House of Representatives, should propose to lay a duty upon some article of foreign growth or manufacture not already subject to duty, or to increase the existing rates, or by imposing excise duties or internal taxes in some of the hundred different ways in which revenue may be raised; but there is no such provision in the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, as I understand it. It is in effect and substance simply to secure the faithful collection of the amount of duties and revenue contemplated by the act of 1846, according to a fair and just construction of its provisions. No further duties or charges are imposed upon imported merchandise than they would be subject to if the existing laws were executed in good faith. That is substantially the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island; and yet it is objected to as unconstitutional. Taking these circumstances into view, the case does furnish the test which I said last evening, when I rose to address the Senate, I wanted to see applied and exhibited to the country—a test of the lengths to which this Administration, when upheld by a party majority in both Houses of Congress, is prepared to go in carrying out their favorite dogmas of political economy, and how far it may be expected to go hereafter in opposition to the plainest and saddest experience of their fallacy.

A case like the present, of persistent obstinacy in opposing what appears to me the clearest dictate of public interest and a sound policy, is unparalleled in the history of the legislation of this country, or of any other free Government.

A great deal is said on the subject of the vast expenditures of the Government, and a question is raised as to what department is responsible for them. Sir, here we have the evidence where the responsibility rests, and ought to rest, upon all these questions. It may be said that the party now in power have had the control of the Government for more than a quarter of a century past. The few years of Whig rule scarcely break the uniformity of Democratic domination. They have had the power, as a general proposition, whenever they chose to exercise it, to press a favorite party measure through Congress, or to defeat an obnoxious one, by Executive patronage and party discipline, to say nothing of the veto power; and they have not been over-scrupulous in the exercise of that power.

Why have not these vast powers and influences been brought to bear upon the expenditures of the Government, with a view to keep them within moderate bounds? But especially, when the Treasury is annually robbed of some ten or fifteen million dollars by fraudulent contrivances and evasions, why is not the power of the Administration brought to bear in the correction of that great evil?

The honorable Senator from Virginia, who says it is unconstitutional to move any provision in the Senate to prevent these frauds on the Treasury, cannot shelter himself or the Administration from their proper responsibility in relation to this subject, by taking the ground that a remedy for these frauds can only be brought forward in the House of Representatives. Why has no such measure been moved by the supporters of the Administration in the House of Representatives? Why has it been withheld there? Why has the Senator from Virginia, if he really thinks these frauds ought to be corrected, failed to have some measure for their correction brought forward in the House of Representatives through his friends in that body? Why has not the Secretary of the Treasury or the President, or both, seen to this business? They are not so forbearing, nor so delicate in their practices in this respect, that they cannot interfere or lend their influence in carrying this reform in the collection of the revenue through Congress; nor ought they to shrink from the exercise of a legitimate and constitutional interposition in reference to a question of great public interest like the present. I fear, sir, that the Administration and the honorable Senator from Virginia, and those who agree with him in his theories of political economy, consider that if we corrected these frauds, and brought about a wholesome reform in the collection of the customs revenue, it would be a step backwards in the march to free trade. If any other explanation can be given of their conduct, I trust it will not be withheld.

Every step taken by the Administration connected with this subject tends to bring me to the conclusion that I have been right in my apprehensions. If, at such a time as the present, the Administration, and the party which supports it, dare to pursue the course indicated in reference to this loan, what will they not dare to do when the wants of the Treasury shall not be felt? Whither is this Government tending? What is, or what is to be, its settled policy? The honorable Senator from Virginia seems to take it for granted that his views, and those of the Administration, are sustained by the settled sentiment of the people of this country. They may be, for aught I know; but is this policy so firmly settled that he and his party may speculate and experiment upon the strength of the sentiment which sustains them, to the extent they have undertaken to do in relation to this bill, and the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Sir, I am astonished at the course of the honorable Senator from Virginia and his political friends upon this subject; nor has their course upon other grave questions tended to assure me that I have been wrong in my impression, formed long since, that the old landmarks set up by our fathers are likely soon to be utterly disregarded and overthrown, and with them the political honesty which for a long time forced their observance. Sir, I regard our whole system of free government as in imminent peril.

At no period, in the last thirty years, have so many circumstances in the condition of the country conspired to awaken inquiry and create anxiety as to its future. There is a vague but very general impression floating in the minds of the thinking portion of the people, that we are hastening to a crisis—to a change, of the nature of which there is no well-defined idea or conception. Possibly it may be beneficial in its results; on the other hand, it may usher in an epoch marked and distinguished by great calamities and obstructions to the progress of civilization. The student of general history must have been struck by the fact, that all those great movements and revolutions which have changed the destiny of nations, and the social and political conditions of their populations, sometimes rolling back the tide of improvement, and threatening the extinction of all that science and art had achieved in preceding ages, and in other instances giving a new impetus to further progress, have been preceded by some vague perception or apprehension among the more observing of the people to be affected, of the coming change. So at least contemporary historians will have it.

Whether any change which may take place in the condition and affairs of this country may rise to an importance to be compared with those great revolutions to which I have referred, and which have left their impress upon the world, I will not undertake to say, nor am I prepared to subscribe to the theory that there is any preternatural or mysterious cause operating in the moral world, which sometimes gives warning of approaching change or convulsion. I rather think that the true solution of the apparent mystery involved in the common saying, that "coming events cast their shadows before," is to be found in the actual circumstances and tendencies of the times—circumstances and tendencies which make but a slight impression or none at all upon the thoughtless, but strike the sagacious observer as most significant and ominous.

That many of the purest patriots and best informed of the people of this country at this time are disturbed and apprehensive of change and convulsion, cannot be denied; but there is no mystery in that. Ample cause may be found for this in the present social and political condition of the country.

It is remarkable, that coincident with this feeling of uneasiness and insecurity in this country, a similar one is felt all over Europe, though rising from different, and, in some respects, from opposite causes; and in both countries tending strongly to postpone the restoration of trade and industry to that degree of activity by which they were but lately distinguished, and upon the restoration of which the Senator from Virginia relies to supply the future wants of the Treasury.

The peace of Europe may be said to be suspended by a hair. The brittle thread of one man's life snapped, and it seems to be conceded that a revolutionary struggle must ensue in one powerful State, which may, in its consequences, involve all Europe in a sanguinary war. That life preserved and prolonged, offers no absolute security for the general repose. Peace would still hold her sway by the slender and uncertain tenure of one man's will. In this fact alone may be found sufficient ground for some apprehension; but there are other causes of uneasiness. However well disposed to peace the Emperor of the French may be—hated and feared rather than loved, as he is, by the great Powers around him—he may be driven by the necessities of his position to avail himself of the passion for military glory which distinguishes his subjects, and seek to strengthen his dynasty by trying his fortune in war. Besides all these, there exists still another cause of uneasiness. The spirit of liberty in Europe is repressed, but not subdued. It is still too formidable an element of disturbance to the established despotisms of the continent to be overlooked in calculating the chances of peace. Like a pent-up giant, it is ever restless, watchful, and prompt upon opportunity to break its fetters.

Here, in this country, we have no despotic governments, general or local. All are molded in the most perfect forms of freedom consistent with the preservation of the great and legitimate objects of civil society. Neither by the theory, nor by any of the express provisions of our political system is any one man clothed with authority, even for a term of years, to play the despot, to substitute his will for the will of the people in deciding upon the issues of peace and of war, or to dictate the policy of the country, domestic or foreign; though, in the practical operation of our system, we know, by experience, that a weak or a bad man may assume and exercise all these powers. Here we have no pent-up spirit of liberty, as in Europe, threatening to burst forth and disturb the public peace in an effort to assert the rights of the people. Still I assert, that there are just grounds for the uneasiness and apprehensions which pervade the public mind. As the country advances in wealth and power, as our territorial dominion expands, it is but too manifest, that in the practical operation of the Government there has been a regular progress of departure from its true theory. The forms of the Government have been observed, while the spirit and objects of their institution have been for the most part disregarded and defeated. The regular and legitimate influences which, by the theory of our system, should preside over elections, and control the administration of the Government, are superseded and inverted.

Whatever other causes may have contributed to this deplorable result, the chief one undoubtedly has been the extreme and anomalous party action to which the Government has been subjected by the prevalence of party spirit, that proverbial bane of all free governments, stimulated to excess by the magnitude of the prize of victory in the great quadrennial struggles for the presidential purple—the thousands of lucrative offices, and the millions of public treasure belonging, by established usage, to the victors in these great contests.

35TH CONG., 1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

That the machine of Government, propelled by such a motive power, should be driven off the track, far out of its legitimate course, and often produce a train of consequence and disasters fatal to many of the great objects and purposes of its construction, should not surprise any one. That a Government thus impelled in its course should come to be one of devices and expedients, rather than one of any sound and settled maxims or principles of public policy; that, in its operation, party interests and objects should predominate over all others; that a general demoralization should ensue; that liberty should exist in excess and become license; that disorder, corruption, and crime should more and more abound; that respect for the laws and all lawful authorities should decline, and that distrust in the stability of the Government itself should gradually infuse itself into the minds of the sober and thoughtful portion of the people, who can wonder at or feel surprise?

The experience of the past teaches us to what dangerous results the extreme party action of the Government may lead, if no check to its intensity can be provided. The same experience teaches us that to do this will be no easy achievement. No sooner is one great struggle for the possession of power and its glittering spoils decided, than the contest is renewed between rival aspirants for the succession. Invention is again upon the rack; the whole moral field of adventure, "from Arctic to Antarctic pole," is explored for the discovery of some new device—some new issue—some new scheme of policy by which the popular sympathies and passions may be excited. Since politics have become a trade, an employment, in which wealth as well as honor and personal distinction may be won, the votaries of ambition are not over-scrupulous as to the means of success. When all other resources are exhausted; when foreign intervention for the protection of trodden-down nationalities fail them; when schemes of annexation and further national aggrandizement offer no immediate prospect of success in winning popular support; when no quarrel can be picked with any foreign Power, a favorite resort of many in seeking to reach the popular heart, the more desperate do not hesitate to try their fortunes by exciting and fomenting sectional jealousies and resentments; anything but general quiet is desirable to them. That would be destruction to their objects. They abhor a political calm as much as nature is said to abhor a vacuum. Peace is not what they want. If they had it, they would fling it away. They prefer a sword. And thus the country seems doomed to one eternal round of excitements and agitations. Twice within the short space of ten years have we seen from such causes the Government brought to the very verge of dissolution.

Happily a hope may now be indulged that these sectional dissensions, which have been so unfortunately fomented, will cease. We have, at least, a truce; an interval of repose, which may be improved and ripened into permanent quiet, and the downward tendency of the Government arrested by a timely diversion of the public mind to questions and measures of public policy, national in their character, and more in conformity with the purposes and objects for which the Government was established. To do this we must economize time. If we loiter by the way, if we hesitate, we are lost. The evil spirit which has been so successful heretofore in sowing discord, is ever awake and of a most inventive genius.

Sir, I speak melancholy truths, but I do not altogether despair of the Republic. The circumstances of the times appear to me to be most auspicious for a determined and successful effort to accomplish a great reform. Besides the apprehensions as to the future, and the diminished confidence in the stability of the Government itself, prevailing in the minds of many of the best men of the country, to which I have before alluded, the mass of the people have become weary and tired of the strife and agitation growing out of these sectional issues. Thousands and tens of thousands of them are suffering privation from the prostrate condition of trade and many important industrial enterprises of the country; and all the business classes feel that their resources are diminished, and their productive energies more or less crippled and paralyzed by the late unparalleled monetary and commercial revulsion. Happy will it be, if this shock to the great business interests of the country, this check to the general prosperity, shall awaken such a spirit of inquiry among the people as to the causes which produced it, as will restore the Government to its regular and constitutional action, and require the public functionaries, the trustees of power, and those who aspire to those great trusts, to give more of their attention to the public welfare than to the ways and means of retaining or acquiring them.

But, sir, there is another circumstance in the condition of the country, the one to which I alluded at the outset of my remarks, which offers strong inducements to a combined effort to bring back the Government to its original and constitutional tack, and to correct the further progress of the vicious principles and practices in its operation, which threaten to undermine and destroy it.

Twelve months ago, and for the preceding two years or more, there was a surplus in the public Treasury of nearly twenty million dollars; and this was so, even under the drainage of that profuse and extravagant expenditure which has been so often spoken of. But now, in a time of peace with all the world, except with one of the corporations or Territories of our own system, with no extra expenditure except that incurred in fitting out the expedition to Utah, the Treasury is reduced to the necessity of appealing to Congress to supply its wants! In six months from the time when the pressure upon the money market commenced, notwithstanding the surplus then in the Treasury, and the $28,000,000 of current receipts in the first two quarters of the fiscal year 1857, the Government, technically speaking, was reduced to bankruptcy. An application was made at the opening of Congress for a loan of $20,000,000 in the form of Treasury notes. It was sustained and carried through under the whip and spur of immediate necessity; the honorable Senator from Virginia telling us that in a fortnight from the time when he spoke, the Treasury would be absolutely exhausted if we failed to pass that bill; while the Secretary of the Treasury, in his letter applying for that issue, intimated distinctly that the $20,000,000 were only asked as a precaution against a possible deficit, and might not be needed at all. Yet, sir, within four months from that time we have an application for an additional loan of $15,000,000! To do what? To carry the Government through the present fiscal year ending on the 30th June next, and until the next session of Congress; thus adding to the public debt of the country, in one year, $35,000,000. Independently and outside of the loan of $15,000,000 now asked, the means provided for the expenditure of the Government within the present fiscal year, including the surplus in the Treasury at the beginning of it, the current receipts from customs and the public lands, together with the $20,000,000 of Treasury notes, exceed eighty million dollars. Such is the condition of the Treasury and of the country; a new debt of $35,000,000, and an annual expenditure of upwards of eighty millions! And unless the expectation of the honorable Senator from Virginia be realized in regard to the revival of trade next year, of which I see no prospect, at least to the extent he estimates, by the time another fiscal year closes we shall be burdened with a public debt far exceeding the debt at the close of an expensive war with Mexico. In the mean time, the depression of trade, and of most of the great industrial employments of the country, caused by the late revulsion, continues with little abatement.

Is there not enough in all these circumstances to awaken inquiry among the people into the causes which have brought so many evils upon the country? To show how much dependence ought to be placed in those who now control the Government and dictate the policy of the country for the correction of the multiplied evils of the times, we may learn, once for all, from their conduct in relation to the present condition of the Treasury and to the business interests of the country generally. After the lapse of half a year from the time of the extreme point of depression caused by the late commercial revulsion; after the exhaustion of the large surplus of more than eighteen millions in the Treasury when the pressure began, and of all intermediate receipts whatever, a loan of $20,000,000 in Treasury notes, reissuable in addition, was found to be insufficient to carry on the Government; and when the receipts into the Treasury from all sources have fallen off one half, the Secretary of the Treasury sends a special report to Congress simply asking for a further loan of $15,000,000, which he thinks may be necessary to enable the Government to fulfill its engagements until Congress shall assemble again; and further stating, in the coolest manner possible, that it is not deemed expedient to make any change in the existing provisions of law for raising revenue, inasmuch as the times have not been favorable for testing the operation of the act of March, 1857.

Truly, sir, the condition of the business and trade of the country has not been favorable for any such purpose; and, unfortunately, in the judgment of the most experienced business men, there is no prospect that the time will ever come when the revenues raised under that act, without a decided change in the regulations or mode prescribed for the collection of duties under it, will ever be sufficient for the support of the Government. It is remarkable that in this report the Secretary does not make any suggestion as to the expediency of providing any relief for the suffering interests of the country. But what is most remarkable and significant of the future is, that the Senate Committee on Finance adopt all the views of the Secretary, and report a bill for this new loan, carrying the public debt in one year up to $35,000,000, but fail to make any provision for its redemption, or for supplying the future wants of the Treasury. Never in the history of any free Government, or one pretending to be free—certainly not in Great Britain since the expulsion of the Stuarts, nor in this country—has there been an instance of such indifference to the business interests of the country, and such utter disregard manifested, by the public functionaries having charge of the subject, of all the guards and precautions necessary to the protection of public credit. Sir, had a minister of the British Crown, with a sanction of his colleagues, brought forward a naked proposition for a loan in the British House of Commons under similar circumstances, how would it have been treated? Such a storm of indignation would have arisen as would have quickly expelled them in disgrace from power. But one of two things could have been predicated of them: either that they were totally incompetent, or that they were indifferent to the public interests, and disposed to trifle with the feelings and insult the intelligence of the country.

Mr. President, the late commercial and monetary revulsion in this country, in the opinion of the able writer of an article in a late number of the Edinburgh Review, has had no parallel in Europe since "the breaking up of the great South sea scheme;" and yet in the American Congress there is no investigation, by a committee, of the causes which produced it, nor any inquiry as to any means in the power of Congress to adopt, either to prevent or to mitigate the severity of similar revulsions in future; nor is there likely to be any, or but a very slight discussion of those important subjects. I can easily conjecture the policy which may influence those who have the conduct of affairs at the present time in their hands, in desiring that this bill should pass with but slight consideration or discussion of the great subjects directly connected with it; but I cannot quite reconcile their policy in this respect to the true interests of the country. It may suit their ends very well that this monetary and commercial crisis shall be permitted to pass without attracting any large share of public attention to its origin; but I am not sure that the country will gain anything by this course. However that may be, it is very certain that neither the President, nor the

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

Secretary of the Treasury, nor the honorable Senator from Virginia, is prepared to admit that the late revulsion has been in any degree brought about by the policy of the Government, or by any false theories of political economy, either in regard to trade or currency, held by the party which has so long controlled it.

The honorable Senator from Virginia has briefly presented his views on the subject before the Senate, and he has done so skillfully, and I may say in one respect ably, but not with the frankness that I would have expected from the character of the honorable Senator. He can see in the present depressed condition of the trade and industrial enterprises of the country no cause for any change in our present commercial regulations or revenue system; no cause for the adoption of any new policy on the part of the Government either to restore confidence and hasten the revival of trade, or to replenish the Treasury at the present time; nor does he anticipate that there will be any cause for such change in the future. He looks confidently to the native energies and recuperative powers of the people to overcome all obstacles, to retrieve all disasters, and effect an early revival of trade and industry in all its branches. He has his theory of finance, trade, and currency, which he is content to stand by; but, sir, he has, as it appears to me—I beg his pardon if I do him any injustice—with studious caution avoided saying one word as to the causes which have led to the late commercial and monetary catastrophe; nor does he suggest any remedy for such evils in future. On the contrary, he openly avows his fears that any change which may be made in our present revenue system will tend to retard the progress of free-trade principles. The maxim is now, as at another memorable period in the financial and commercial history of the country, “the Government is able to take care of itself; let the people take care of themselves.” Yes, sir; the Government is able to take care of itself. If the ordinary and current receipts of gold into the Treasury are not sufficient, the Government can borrow enough to supply all deficiencies. The holders of the millions of gold hoarded in the banks, or in private coffers, will prefer lending to the Government at a low interest, to any investment they can make in private enterprises, at a much higher rate of interest, at a time when they can see no prospect of the adoption of a wiser policy by the Government. The policy of the Administration is now in perfect conformity with the maxims and principles of the Democratic Administration of 1838, when the sub-Treasury was first established. I do not charge them with any inconsistency. They have either to adhere to their policy of 1838, or to abandon their theories of political economy as utterly unsound, or at least inapplicable to the condition of this country. The only ground upon which their patriotism can be impeached is, that after experience has so often demonstrated the fallacy of their commercial and monetary theories, in a manner so afflictive to the country, they have not the frankness or moral courage to openly avow the necessity of adopting and acting upon some modification of their former opinions and doctrines.

I said that the honorable Senator from Virginia had carefully avoided to touch upon the causes of the late revulsion. The President, however, is more adventurous; he has given us a description of the condition of the country, in his late annual message, so graphic, and at the same time so true, that I beg leave to read it to the Senate:

“The earth has yielded her fruits abundantly, and has nonnificantly rewarded the toil of the husbandman. Our great staples have commanded high prices, and, up till within a brief period, our manufacturing, mineral, and mechanical occupations have largely partaken of the general prosperity. We have possessed all the elements of material wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all those advantages, our country, in its monetary interests, is at the present moment in a deplorable condition. In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions of agriculture and in all the elements of national wealth, we find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want.”

Following this faithful picture of the effects of the late revulsion in those sections of the country which have suffered most, these remarkable passages may be found:

“It is our duty to inquire what has produced such unfortunate results, and whether their recurrence can be prevented? In all former revulsions, the blame might have been fairly attributed to a variety of cooperating causes; but not so upon the present occasion. It is apparent that our existing misfortunes have proceeded solely from our extravagant and vicious system of paper currency and bank credits, exciting the people to wild speculations and gambling in stocks.”

After this bold and confident announcement that the disasters of the late revulsion have proceeded solely from “our extravagant and vicious system of paper currency and bank credits,” the President proceeds to console us with the assurance that “these revulsions must continue to occur at successive intervals as long as the amount of the paper circulation, bank facilities, and discounts are left to the discretion of fourteen hundred irresponsible banking institutions;” and he further announces, that to this cause may be assigned the character “of our financial history for the last forty years,” which, he states, has been one of “extravagant expansions in the business of the country, followed by ruinous contractions.” These views of the President, if well founded, are of the greatest importance, and should be well understood by the country.

I will now, with the consent of the Senate, read a few passages from the British journal to which I have before alluded, and which may be regarded as the exponent, as it unquestionably is, of the views of the leading champions of the present policy of Great Britain on the subjects of trade and currency:

“The concurring panics of England and America present an instructive contrast. They occurred under dissimilar circumstances, and they have issued in different results. In the United States there was a new country, a boundless extent of unappropriated land, a public debt scarcely exceeding the revenue of a single year, a field for employment so ample as to cause a constant influx of labor and capital from Europe, and resources progressively developed during years of uninterrupted peace. In England there was an old and densely-peopled country, land so completely appropriated as to leave no field spot where, without trespass, we could plant a foot, a weight of debt which no other country in the world has ever been called upon to bear, a field of employment so overcrowded as to cause an annual exodus of labor and capital from the land, and resources diminished by the vast expenditure of the Russian, Persian, and Chinese wars, still subject to a heavy drain for the suppression of the Indian revolt. Who, upon glancing at these contrasting antecedents, could have hesitated to infer that the occurrence of a commercial revulsion would have proved beyond comparison more disastrous in England than in the United States? Who could have anticipated that when a pressure came, America would fall, while England stood apparently unharmed? Yet such has been the actual result. America sank at the first upheaving of the storm. England did not bend to it until a desolating wave from the troubled waters of the West had broken upon her shores. How can this apparent reversal of the natural sequence of events be accounted for? By what latent agency has weakness been conjoined with the elements of strength, and strength with the causes of decline? This unusual conjunction, however anomalous and mysterious it may appear, admits of easy explanation. America has an ill-regulated, England a well-regulated currency. In both countries the law requires that the note circulation shall be convertible into gold upon demand; but in the United States the maintenance of a sufficient supply of gold to secure the fulfillment of the legal requirements is intrusted to the discretion of the banks, while in England it is secured by the provisions of the act of 1844.”

Every fact, every statement expressed in this extract, deserves serious attention and study, remembering that the article was written by an Englishman, a supporter of British policy and British interests, which are deeply involved in the commercial policy which this country shall adopt. No exposition of the striking contrast in the circumstances and condition of the two countries could be more clearly conceived or forcibly expressed; and showing, what the writer did not intend to show, that, if an unrestricted commerce was the policy of the one, it could not be so of the other.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] suggests that the bank act of 1844 was suspended in the late revulsion.

Mr. COLLAMER. It was suspended by the British Ministry immediately upon the revulsion occurring.

Mr. BELL. There was no suspension of specie payments by the bank. There was a suspension, at the suggestion of the Ministers of the Crown, of the restriction imposed upon the amount of the notes the bank was authorized to issue by that act; and the bank proceeded to issue a large amount, I believe, of one pound notes—not to protect the bank itself, or the Government, from discredit, but for the relief of the suffering business interests of the country, and thereby prevent the bankruptcy of thousands. That is the difference between English policy, English wisdom, and American policy and folly.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the Senator excuse me for interrupting him for a moment?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If I understand the matter, the Bank of England was only authorized to issue dollar for dollar upon the securities it held and the specie it had; and the consequence was that when this difficulty occurred, there was no danger of its suspending specie payments; but the act was suspended so as to allow it to issue more. The safety of the system, in England, seems to have arisen from the fact that the bank could only issue in proportion to the bullion it had. Now, do I understand the gentleman as favoring, in the United States, a proposition to put our banks on the same footing, and require them only to issue a paper dollar where they have a dollar in bullion to meet it? Do I understand him as advocating that policy here?

Mr. BELL. My friend from North Carolina will understand me presently. I see his object, but I do not mean to commit myself to any folly, if I know it. He will presently see what my views are on the subject.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I only meant this: the gentleman spoke of the folly of the United States as compared with England. I admit England is wiser; and I wanted to see if we could get at the English system, so as to prevent the over-issue of our banks, which I presume led to the evil.

Mr. BELL. I see the Senator's mind is directed to the same object that mine is in respect to currency, though we may differ as to the means by which that object is to be reached. Yes, sir, England is wiser, not only in regard to the restrictions she has imposed on bank issues, but wiser in her commercial policy. There is not a principle or dogma of political economy, as now taught in the schools, in regard to which England, in my judgment, may not be said to have reached the very acme of wisdom, in its practical application of them, in its broad admission or qualified rejection, in its enactments relative to all the important industrial and commercial interests of her people and her empire. England rejects a principle or a policy at one time, which she adopts at another, just as her condition and varied circumstances demand.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The Senator says England is wiser in her commercial regulations. Does he allude to her having a lower tariff, a lower rate of duties than the United States? If so, can he support this measure, which will, in its effect, largely increase our present duties?

Mr. BELL. What measure?

Mr. CLINGMAN. The measure introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BELL. I will try to satisfy the Senator as to what my views are before I conclude; but I do not suppose that he and I shall agree altogether.

My object in calling the attention of the Senate to the extract from a British journal, which has just been read, was to show that a high British authority agreed with our President in attributing all the mischief, and the ruin to thousands which have resulted from the late revulsion, to the ill-regulated paper currency of the country—to the abuses of our banking system, and to that cause alone.

I am not at all surprised to find this concurrence of sentiment between English statesmen and the President upon this point. But, assuming that the true and sole cause of the late revulsion and all its train of evils—which, by-the-by, I deny—under which the country is now suffering, is justly attributable to the banks; and when, more especially, we are warned that these ruinous revulsions, at stated intervals, are never to end as long as we have a paper currency consisting of notes issued by so great a number of irresponsible banks, it becomes a subject of the last importance to inquire whether any remedy can be found for so great a mischief? The President, as he ought, has felt the force of this obligation resting upon himself. And what, sir, is the remedy which he prescribes? A bankrupt law, to include banks!—a war against the banks!

I wish my friend from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] to watch me and see if I do injustice. I understand the war is to be against all banks and all paper circulation. If that is not the policy of the President and his political friends, I should like to have it disavowed. A question has even been raised as to the constitutional power of the States to charter State banks. Upon that point I will refer the Senate to an argument which appears to me to be conclusive. In General Jackson's time, and when the question of currency and the right of the General Government to control it, was one very much discussed, Mr. Gallatin, who took a deep interest in all such questions, was asked, in a mixed company, whether, in his opinion, the States had the constitutional power to charter banks of issue? He replied to this question by asking one in his turn, which was, "how many of the States had chartered such banks?" The gentleman who had made the first inquiry replied that he believed all but one or two. "Well, then," said Mr. Gallatin, "I ought to consider the question very carefully before I decide that the States have no power to charter banks;" implying, of course, that a power which had been exercised from the time the Constitution was formed, and antecedent to that time under the old Confederation, which nearly every State in the Union had exercised, it was at that late day idle to suppose could be determined differently, or that the States would ever surrender the power; and it is well for the country that it is so. Any attempt to bring the chartered banks of the States under the control of the Federal Government by a bankrupt law, would be equally idle and abortive. It would be regarded as equivalent to a denial of the constitutional power of the States to grant bank charters, and a flagrant violation of their reserved rights. Yet this is the only remedy the President is able to discover for the prevention or mitigation of those commercial hurricanes which have so often swept over the country; and this one, I venture to say, will never be seriously pressed even by his own political friends. It may be questioned, in fact, whether it was ever intended to be pressed. Why, then, is this war upon the banks renewed at this time?—for it is but a renewal—a taking up the notes of the same war-cry which was raised in 1837, upon the failure of the deposit banks, and which have been feebly echoed ever since in some sections of the country. It is the counterpart of the "perish credit, perish commerce" doctrine contemporaneously proclaimed. I repeat the question, why is it that this war upon the banks and a paper currency is renewed at this time, when no just expectation can be indulged that either the one or the other can be put down, or brought under the control of the Federal Government? I answer, that this clamor against banks, bank credits, and paper money, is renewed now for the same or similar reasons which operated in 1837, when it was first heard. The clamor was then raised to save the party then in possession of the Government from the just responsibility incurred by tampering with the banks, and the direct encouragement given to their creation by the States, and to over-issues, which had resulted so disastrously to the country. The dishonesty and bad management of the banks were then denounced as the sole cause of the revulsion of that time, just as they are now. Yet they had increased their issues under the express recommendation of the Government.

A fierce war upon the banks at this time may be accounted for, in part, by the explosion of the delusion by which the people have for a long time been misled as to the efficacy of the sub-Treasury invention. It is now manifest that it can neither regulate the currency nor prevent over-trading; but what is most vexatious to the inventors is, that while it secures to the Government a metallic currency for its own support, so far as the receipts from customs and other sources of revenue extend, the important discovery is made that when, from the false policy of the Government in its commercial regulations, or from any other cause, the trade of the country is prostrated, no money of any kind goes into the sub-Treasury, and the Government is driven to the necessity of resorting to the so much despised and denounced paper money for its support. At this time, sixty millions of gold is held by the banks of some four or five of our large commercial cities alone; yet the sub-Treasury continues empty, and can only be relieved by the use of Government credit. But whatever may be the real motive which has prompted this renewed attack upon the banks, whether it be patriotic and intended to promote the public interest, or as a decoy to divert attention from the great questions and principles which are involved, one thing is most certain: the gross-misapprehension or ignorance of the laws of trade and currency, as developed by experience, prevails among those who are leading and instigating the crusade. The President, in arraigning the banks as the sole cause of the late revulsion, would seem to be ignorant of the fact that commercial and monetary revulsions may occur from over-trading in communities in which the currency is altogether metallic. If any nation or people, whose currency is composed exclusively of gold and silver, buy more from a foreign nation or people than they can pay for in the ordinary products of their own industry, the balance must be paid in the precious metals; and if this unequal trade continues for any length of time, the currency, or circulating medium, falls below the amount necessary to a healthy state of commerce and exchanges, and then prices fall, credit is impaired, and trade comes to a stand, just as certainly as though the currency had consisted chiefly of bank notes.

If the President is really not ignorant that the late revulsion may have proceeded mainly from other causes than the excess of bank issues and discounts, why does he urge the war against banks and a paper circulation with such earnestness? The impression produced upon the common mind, by his views as expressed in his annual message upon this subject, is, that if we had no banks of issue—no bank-note circulation—if we had a gold and silver, a hard-money currency, we should never hear of any more commercial revulsions, bankruptcies, private distress, or the stoppage of individual enterprise.

I see, sir, that the President, in all that he has said upon this subject, has allowed his judgment to be quite too much biased by the known prejudices which, from various causes, exist in the minds of a large portion of the people of this country against all banks and bank paper, and the instinctive preference of the masses for gold and silver over their representative value in paper. A late eminent citizen, long a member of this body, made a gold and silver or a hard-money Government his hobby, as we all know. That distinguished gentleman did more to prejudice a large class of the people against banks and bank notes, and to fasten a conviction upon their minds that their interest would be best promoted by a currency exclusively of gold and silver, by a single but very simple proposition, and his peculiar mode of illustrating it, than all the elaborate speeches made upon the subject in either House of Congress. His proposition was, that every paper dollar in circulation expelled a gold or silver dollar, and so of a bank note of any greater denomination. It kept out of circulation its equivalent amount of gold or silver. To be satisfied that a gold or silver coin was more valuable than a bank note of equivalent nominal value, however good the credit of the bank which issued it, any man had only to ask himself, when called upon to pay a debt, and his money on hand consisted in part of gold and silver coin, and in part of bank notes, which he would pay out—the hard money or the paper—the currency which is imperishable, or that which is perishable? This simple interrogatory was enough to settle the question with all who were not engaged in trade, or who had not leisure to study the question as a science. The fallacy of the argument, as one intended to show that all banks and bank paper ought to be dispensed with, lay too deep for detection by an ordinary inquirer.

There are some important truths or doctrines connected with the subjects of trade and currency, of which the President and those who sustain his views would seem to be ignorant, or behind the age. From the time of Adam Smith, it has been admitted by writers upon political economy that bank notes, or a paper circulation founded upon such securities as insure their convertibility into gold and silver on demand, are of equal value in all respects to gold and silver. A not less important fact, which appears to be ignored by the President, is the superior advantages and convenience, in some respects, of a paper currency, or circulation convertible into gold or silver. A sound paper circulation has not only the advantage of cheapness and convenience, as a medium of exchange, but, to the extent that it takes the place of the gold and silver that would otherwise be required to be kept in circulation in any community or country as a medium of exchange, it adds to the floating or unfixed capital of the country. The gold and silver dollar released or expelled from circulation by a paper dollar, being no longer required as a medium of exchange—in which employment it could not increase, but, on the contrary, daily loses by abrasion—becomes a part of the active and productive capital of the country, and adds its due proportion of increase to its wealth.

If, therefore, the President and those who support his policy should succeed in putting down all banks of issue, and provide no other paper circulation of equal value, it can be demonstrated that $100,000,000, at least, would be withdrawn from the present productive capital of the country, without any equivalent benefit.

But, after all, I cannot suppose that the President is so profoundly ignorant of these laws of currency and trade as his policy in making war upon the banks, and pandering to the popular prejudice against paper money, would seem to indicate. When he assumes that the present monetary and commercial condition of the country is to be accounted for by the excessive issues of bank notes, the extravagant expansion of bank credits and discounts, and suggests no other remedy for these evils, except to subject the banks to the penalties of a bankrupt law, he must be supposed, in charity to him as an intelligent gentleman, to be controlled by some higher law, by more imperative obligations in his present position, than any which the true interests of the country would dictate or prescribe. How is it, that he makes no reference in his message to any practical remedy for the evils of a deranged currency? Because he is forbidden by the creed of the party which brought him into power. I do not wish to speak of this subject, if it could be avoided, in reference to parties at all; but we know that a large amount of the political capital of the Democratic party, and which they have wielded with great effect for the last quarter of a century, is founded in opposition to a United States bank. It has been ostentatiously paraded every four years in their platforms—opposition, unrelenting opposition, to a United States bank. Look at the Baltimore and Cincinnati platforms, and every preceding platform from the time of General Jackson, and you will find that opposition to a United States bank is a prominent article in the creed of that party; and yet, in the last fifteen years at least, nobody, Whig or American, has proposed the establishment of a United States bank. It has for twenty years been held up as a monster—a raw-head and bloody-bones, to frighten the weak and timid. It answers the same invaluable purpose to the Democratic party that, for half a century or more the Pretender did to a corrupt Ministry of the British Crown. It was only necessary in Protestant England to get up some alarm about the Pretender and Popery, to silence all opposition to the Cabinet Ministers or to the policy of the reigning dynasty.

The President is forbidden by his political creed to recommend a United States bank; yet the organs of British sentiment, as I have shown by the extract read from a leading British journal, while they agree with the President in assigning our ill-regulated banking system as the sole cause of the late revulsion, which they have particular reasons for doing, admonish him that the evil can only be corrected by some regulator in the nature of a bank.

I do not mean to suggest that any party, or any public man, in this country, ought to propose a national bank, nor do I think that one can or ever will be established, formed on the model of the late Bank of the United States; but that the Federal Government possesses the power, and that some such institution can be devised, by which the currency can be regulated so as to prevent the recurrence of any serious monetary and commercial revulsion so far as excessive issues of paper money may tend to produce such results, I have no doubt. As to the question of power, it may be well to call to mind that the first Bank of the United States was approved by Washington; that the second charter of a United States Bank, in 1816, was supported by Mr. Calhoun, and approved by Madison; and that for forty years such a bank was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

It may be further stated, as a historical fact, that, on a question of the renewal of the charter of the second or last Bank of the United States, it fell a victim to party interest, in the fierce political conflicts of the period of General Jackson's administration; and it may be of some importance also to state that General Jackson himself did not discountenance the policy of a national bank. He expressly said in his veto message that if Congress had called upon him for the plan of a bank which would answer the most important purposes of such an institution, he would cheerfully have presented one. The plan he had prepared to lay before Congress is still in existence. Other plans of a national bank for the regulation of the currency, and to perform the duties of a fiscal agent of the Government, have been presented by persons in high public position. Mr. Tyler, who vetoed the last bill which passed Congress chartering a similar institution, presented a plan of a fiscal board, said to have had the approval of Mr. Webster, which contained provisions looking to the regulation of the currency. If the Government has no power to regulate the currency, it fails in one of its great purposes.

Sir, I agree with the President in the views he has expressed in his message on this subject, so far as to admit that the banks must bear some share of the responsibility for the late revulsion; but I insist that, so far as an undue expansion or increase of their circulation is concerned, they appear to have kept no more than an even pace with what seemed the increasing business and prosperity of the country. By the returns of the condition of the banks made to the Treasury, it appears that the average of their issues of notes in the last five years did not exceed one hundred and ninety millions, and that not more than one hundred and seventy-five millions was at any time in actual circulation—not more than some political economists have estimated might be safely circulated when the trade and business of the country are successfully and actively prosecuted.

But, to whatever degree the banks may have contributed to the late commercial and monetary derangement, by affording improvident facilities to over-trading and speculation, they were very far from being at the root of the evil, as I shall attempt to show.

Sir, the Government cannot escape its share of the responsibility for the consequences of the late revulsion, by the bold and confident manner in which the banks are assailed as the sole cause of it. I propose to inquire whether the Government, or those who have so long administered it, are altogether free from blame or censure? Does no responsibility rest upon them? We shall see.

First, I wish to bring to the notice of the Senate the fact that, from 1851 to 1857, inclusive, embracing a period of seven years, the amount of coin and bullion imported into the United States was only $42,137,430; and that in the same period there was exported $332,199,531, showing an excess of gold and silver exported over the amount imported of $289,762,101; but it is now quite certain that neither the President nor the Secretary of the Treasury had ever turned their attention to the commercial or financial condition of the country until they were suddenly awakened to a sense of danger by the suspension of the New York banks.

That the Secretary of the Treasury, or the President, did not see anything that deserved serious notice in the continued and rapid withdrawal of the gold and silver for so many years is manifest from the fact that, even when the storm came, neither of them knew or suspected from what quarter it came, or what was likely to be the extent of it. They could make no calculations of that from anything they knew of the preceding state or condition of the commerce of the country; and supposing that it was but a sudden squall, which would soon blow over, they actually went on to pay, out of the still diminishing resources of the Treasury, seventeen per cent. premium for the privilege of redeeming the public debt; and continued to do so as long as any certificates of debt were presented.

But, Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the doctrines and sentiments of a gentleman who has given more of his attention to subjects of this nature than the Secretary of the Treasury or the President; I mean the distinguished Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] He utterly ignores the idea that there was anything in the state of the exchanges—any significance in the fact that millions and millions of coin and bullion were annually flowing out of the country, as has been the case for the last seven years, as worthy of particular observation or notice. He considers gold and silver as commodities; that their exportation, whether large or small in quantity, is no more to be considered in reference to the sound or unsound state of the currency and trade of the country than any other product. The honorable Senator has reputation as a gentleman skilled in questions of finance, and I should like to hear him on this point; but it will be most prudent for the honorable Senator to be silent on this question. For the last quarter of a century, from the period of 1832 at least, if not dating back to the revulsion of 1825, and from that time to the present, the doctrine that the only criterion of a redundant paper circulation, or of an excessive issue of bank notes in any country, is the efflux of coin and bullion, and that the state of the foreign exchanges may always be relied upon as an infallible index of the condition of the currency, in this respect, may be said to have been firmly established. It was first clearly elucidated in 1826, fully sustained by the evidence given before the Parliamentary committee in 1832, and afterwards sanctioned by an act of Parliament in 1844, imperatively requiring the observance of it in the issue of the Bank of England notes; and it now appears to be permanently ingrafted into the policy of that Government. And yet the honorable Senator from Virginia undertakes to state that there is nothing but mere theory in all this—that it is of no value in practice; and insists that gold is only a commodity, and subject to the laws of trade and barter like other products. If he had chosen to go on with the elucidation of his theory upon the subject, he would doubtless have said that we get those large supplies of gold and silver from California—that they are the staple products of the labor of that State, and are exported just as other commodities are. This has been the invariable response to me whenever, within the last three or four years, I have expressed apprehensions that we were upon the eve of a commercial crisis. The answer was, invariably, there is no danger; it is the extraordinary yield of gold in California and Australia, that, both in America and Europe, has stimulated commerce in a degree unequalled in the history of either hemisphere. I was not convinced by this view of the case, though each successive year of a series tended to confirm the delusion that there was no danger of a revulsion.

It is astonishing, however, that those gentlemen who, from their position in the Cabinet and in Congress, were called upon to look carefully into these questions, and especially the Senator from Virginia, should for so many years have overlooked the fact that as much if not more gold was shipped from the Atlantic ports to England and other countries than was received from California; or, if it was observed, that it never caused them to doubt whether the currency of the country could be maintained in a sound condition under such a continued drain of the precious metals, and especially when it was evident that the internal traffic and business of the country, from their uncommon activity, required an increased circulation. The Senator's doctrine is, that gold and silver are but commodities, no way distinguished as articles of trade from any others. He forgets, or will give no weight to the fact, that these commodities, from their peculiar qualities, have been adopted as a common medium or standard of value by which all other commodities are measured and exchanged, and that these metals, or a competent portion of them, as instruments or agents in effecting the exchanges of the products of labor, and giving activity to internal trade and industry, are just as important as the circulation of the blood is to the human system. Money is the life-blood of all trade and industrial employments, and when in any country the money is composed in part of paper or bank notes, as experience shows that it may safely be when not in excess, it becomes still more important to watch the movement of the precious metals. If the flow is inward there is never any danger. If they become redundant, a portion of them soon find their way abroad, and thus the equilibrium is restored. But when, in any country, as in this, a large portion of the money or circulating medium consists of bank notes, and the flow of gold and silver outwards is largely in excess of the influx, and so continues for a length of time, it may be regarded as an infallible sign that the paper circulation is redundant. The currency of the country is then depreciated relatively to the currencies of other countries, and gold and silver, in this respect, like other commodities, go where they command the highest prices. But the Senator from Virginia denies that this long-continued outward flow of gold from this country was anything remarkable, or furnished any reason for believing that there was an excess of paper money in circulation, or that there was any danger of a revulsion, although for the last seven years, from 1851 to 1857, there was an average annual export of gold and silver amounting to one fifth of our exports, and showing an excess, in the seven years, of the export of gold and silver over the import of the same metals, amounting, as before stated, to $289,000,000! It is but too evident that neither the Senator from Virginia, nor the President, nor the Secretary of the Treasury, nor their predecessors in office, did see these signs of an approaching commercial catastrophe in time to arrest it; but ought they not to have seen and heeded those signs? ought they not to have studied and profited by them? And will it do for those who were intrusted with the control of the Government to say that they are innocent and in no way responsible for this great evil which has befallen the country, because they did not see and understand what it was their business to see and understand? If the rapid and continued drain of the precious metals did not strike them as a matter of any importance, was there nothing in the unusual and extraordinary increase of the foreign trade of the country to warn them that over-trading and speculation were prevailing to a dangerous extent, and that a revulsion was inevitable, involving the destruction of commercial credit, and a serious derangement of the business operations of the country?

In 1847, the year after the passage of the tariff act of 1846, the total amount of the imports was $146,543,638; and in the year 1857 they rose to $360,890,141; showing an increase of imported merchandise in ten years of more than one hundred per cent. In the ten years preceding 1847 the increase was only $6,000,000; but in the ten years from 1846 to 1857 the increase amounted to $214,000,000. Was there nothing to awaken inquiry or excite distrust in the solidity of a prosperity which thus appeared so far to surpass all former experience and example?

I have been stating the increase of our imports in the last ten years upon the assumption that the tables of our exports and imports, made up at the Treasury from the custom-house returns, are correct. If the imports were really no greater in amount than there reported, the increase therein exhibited of $200,000,000 in the consumption of foreign goods by the people of this country, in so short a period as ten years, would be sufficiently astonishing, if, indeed, they were paid for as well as consumed; but if I should show the Senate, as I am confident that I shall be able to do before I take my seat, that the tables of imports sent us from the Treasury Department are deceptive and wholly unreliable; that instead of $360,000,000, reported to have been imported in 1857, the actual amount must have been at least $460,000,000, and that a ratable addition ought to be made to the figures representing the imports in each of the last ten years; and when to this statement we add the fact that, in the last ten years, the exports and imports, as reported in the tables compiled at the Treasury, have about balanced each other in their gross amounts, but that one sixth part of the exports in the last seven years has been coin and bullion, the increased consumption of foreign merchandise in the last ten years will appear to be still more astonishing; and that such an unequal trade could have been maintained for a period of ten years, is really marvelous. Why, sir, it rivals in extravagance some of the stories in the entertainments of the Arabian Nights; and it is only a less marvel that none of the public gentlemen addicted to the study of such questions should not have foreseen the catastrophe which did finally come.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

It has been said, by way of apology for those whose duty and position required that they should have proposed some preventive measure in time to have avoided the late revulsion, that nobody anticipated or could have foreseen such an interruption to the prosperous condition of the country.

Allow me, sir, in answer to this very extraordinary assertion, to read a passage or two from a number of the London Economist, a journal of great authority upon all questions of trade and finance, published 3d January, 1857, and which reaches this country usually in about a fortnight after the publication, and which I must presume is taken at the Treasury Department:

"Turning from the finance accounts to the trade returns, they present, as we have already said, results altogether unprecedented in the history of this or any other country; and we frankly admit that it is impossible to contemplate them without feeling some misgiving as to the continuance of an expansion so sudden and so remarkable. An increase in our exports to the extent of £20,000,000 in a single year is a fact for which the most sanguine could not be prepared. It is true that, at the commencement of the year, we concluded a great war, and entered upon a period of peace. But it must be borne in mind that the war was not of a character which interfered much with our foreign trade, and that, in point of fact, our exports, while they had not increased, yet did not suffer any material diminution during its continuance. There were not, therefore, as has sometimes been the case at the conclusion of a war, great markets to supply, which had become exhausted of stocks."

"Judging, therefore, only by the events of the past year, it would be difficult to conceive any combination of circumstances more promising for the year to come. Past experience has, however, shown that periods of sudden expansion and of remarkable prosperity, even though unaccompanied by any obvious speculative character, are generally followed by a reaction, less or more serious, according to circumstances."

The exports of British manufactures in 1855, amounted to £95,688,085; but in 1856, at one bound, they rose to £115,890,857—an increase in one year of £20,000,000, equal to $100,000,000; an increase unparalleled, according to this authority, in the history of trade and commerce in that country or any other. But dropping this point, and assuming that it is too much to expect of our public functionaries that they should be able to descry any signs of an approaching storm until it bursts upon them, let us inquire, for a moment, in what other respects the Government has contributed to bring upon the country the late disastrous revulsion. The Government is altogether innocent, says the President, of this thing; and so say the leaders of the Democratic party; the banks alone are guilty; all the wild speculation, over-trading, and stock gambling, which brought on the late crisis, were caused by the banks.

Sir, let us see how this is. What has been the policy of the Government of late in relation to the public lands? Millions upon millions of acres of the public lands have been purchased from the Indians and thrown upon the market, far exceeding in amount the wants of the country, or of an increasing population. Investments of a speculative character in the public lands have thus been invited and encouraged by the Government, which have greatly deranged and embarrassed the regular business operations of the country. This is a notorious fact.

Again, in the last five or seven years, twenty-five million acres of the public domain have been given to encourage the construction of railways in the new States—some of them penetrating to the remotest borders of the settlements in the interior; and these donations have stimulated the expenditure of large amounts of borrowed capital in constructing roads, which cannot pay the current expenses of operating them, and are not worth one half their original cost.

Can it be truly said that the Government is in no degree responsible for this enormous extension of credit, absorption of capital, and stock-gambling which have grown out of this improvident multiplication of railroads, and its kindred policy of tempting speculation in wild lands, not wanted for settlements? I have heard that some grave Senators have been seduced by the idea that they could be suddenly enriched by embarking largely in the purchase of these lands.

Mr. President, embarrassed as I am by the obvious desire of the Senate to close this question without further debate, I am sensible that I have not been, and shall not be, able to do any sort of justice to the subjects which I have undertaken to discuss. But, sir, even at the hazard of incurring the displeasure of some of my friends, I propose to continue my remarks, and bring to the notice of the Senate and of the country another branch of the subject before us—one which I consider of the greatest importance.

The observation and experience of the ablest business men of the country have led them to the conclusion that the best regulator of trade and currency, and the surest preventive of those disastrous fluctuations in both which have so often brought distress upon the country, is to be sought for in the commercial policy of the Government. By the Constitution the commerce between the thirty-two limited sovereignties of the confederated Union, with an aggregate population of thirty millions, is free. Here there is full scope for the operation of free-trade principles. The commercial power of this Government, though given in terms equally over domestic and foreign commerce, is virtually limited by other provisions of the Constitution to foreign commerce; and, accordingly, if we leave out of view the regulation of the coastwise trade, it is only in reference to foreign commerce that we have any commercial regulations, prescribed either by treaty or by statute. The great question is, whether this power to regulate foreign commerce can or ought to be exercised in such manner as to increase and give stability to domestic or internal commerce; or, as one school of political economists contend, solely with the view to raise revenue for the support of the Government? Can it be that the commercial power of the Government was given for any such narrow and limited object; or was it not rather given for the far more noble and beneficent purpose of developing the resources, stimulating the productive energies, increasing the wealth of the country, and thereby adding to the comfort and improving the condition of the people? Commercial regulations that look exclusively to revenue, or to an increased foreign trade, neglect the foundation of both; for an ample revenue and a constantly-increasing foreign commerce depend upon the increasing activity and productions of internal commerce and industry. Increased productions depend upon the diversity of pursuits which invite the employment of capital and labor, and, withal, upon a sound and sufficient circulating medium. All these considerations enter into the economy of domestic industry and trade; and as these flourish and increase, so do the revenue and foreign trade. There is no antagonism between them; yet from the nature of things, that one interest upon which another depends for its support, must be of the greatest importance. So in fact it is, in magnitude as well as in priority of rank.

Taking $1,100,000,000—the estimate of Professor Tucker—as the value of the annual product of the industry and capital of the country in 1840, and taking further his estimate of the decennial increase of the annual products relatively to population, and making proper allowance for the accession of California to the productive power of the country since 1840 as the basis of the calculation, the value of the annual products of the industry and capital of this country, at this time, may be estimated at two thousand five hundred millions of dollars. The distribution and interchange of the articles or the commodities which make up the amount of these products are what constitute the domestic or internal commerce of the country, except that portion which not being wanted for consumption at home, is exported and exchanged for foreign merchandise; and these last, when brought into the country, add to the internal commerce of the country in proportion to their quantity and value.

Discarding alike the amount of exports in the fiscal year of 1856, ending on the 30th June, 1857, and the exports of the present fiscal year, ending on the 30th June, 1858—the one being too high and the other too low upon which to base an estimate of what the amount or value of the exports would be if the commerce of the country were in a sound and prosperous condition, I will take a medium amount—say $250,000,000—as likely to be the full value of the annual exports of domestic produce, for some years at least after the trade and industry of the country shall resume their usual activity. The profits made upon the exportation of these $250,000,000 worth of domestic productions, and upon the merchandise received in exchange, constitute the full value of the foreign commerce of the country for one year.

It will thus be seen that the domestic commodities annually sent abroad and exchanged for foreign products, estimating them at $250,000,000, constitute but one tenth part of the value of the annual products of the capital and industry of the country. This one tenth of the annual national products is all that is exchanged abroad, and is the basis of what we call the foreign commerce of the country. As to the relative magnitude of the two interests—the foreign and the domestic—the one is ten times more valuable than the other.

But small as is the proportion of our foreign to our domestic commerce, I do not undervalue its importance. It is our foreign trade which takes up and turns to account the annual surplus products of our industry, or that portion which is not demanded for use or consumption at home.

Though from the variety of soil and climate, and the extent of its mineral deposits, this country is less dependent for any essential supply upon the products of foreign growth than any country beneath the sun, yet it is dependent upon foreign trade for some articles which from habit have become necessary to the comfortable subsistence of the people—such as tea, coffee, and sugar, and some others employed in certain manufactures; but for all else—for the $30,000,000 of woolen goods, the $30,000,000 of cotton goods, the $30,000,000 of silks, the $25,000,000 of iron and iron manufactures, and many million dollars' worth of other articles annually imported—this country could, and may in time, be rendered wholly independent of foreign supply. Silks, and the finer fabrics of wool and cotton, and some of the finer articles of cutlery excepted, the whole amount of the woolen and cotton goods, the iron and iron manufactures, now imported from abroad, could be produced in this country in a comparatively short period; for it is a remarkable fact that three fourths of the entire amount of British manufactures are such as require no greater skill in the operative than can be acquired in a few months' practice. The bulk of the cotton and woolen goods, all the iron, and most of the iron manufactures exported, are of the coarser qualities.

But to come back to the point in question. Two things are clear: the extent and value of the foreign trade does and must always depend upon the quantity and value of the products of internal or domestic industry; and the greater the activity of internal trade and industry, the greater will be the quantity of surplus products, raw or manufactured, to swell the outward current of trade, and the greater the power of the people to consume the foreign products received in exchange for them. The first and greatest question, therefore, to be considered in deciding the policy of our Government in relation to currency and commerce, is, beyond all cavil, what policy would be best calculated to develop the resources of the country, and impart the greatest degree of activity to internal trade and industry? That is the great question; and in regard to this, two directly opposite theories or opinions are held, and one other intermediate between the two. One division or class of the partisans of free trade contend that foreign commerce should be as free and untrammelled as the commerce between the several States of the Union; and, to give effect to this policy, that the revenue to support the Government should be raised by direct taxes, and that the commercial power given to Congress by the Constitution should be and can be exercised constitutionally no further than to compel reciprocity. Another class of the same school of economists do not go quite so far; they hold that it is well enough to raise the necessary revenue to support the Government by duties on imported merchandise, but insist that it is neither expedient nor constitutional to impose any such duties on imports but for purposes of revenue, and that no discrimination is admissible with a view to the protection of domestic manufactures. But there is still another class of political economists, or rather of practical business men, in this country, who hold the opposite of these doctrines; who hold that the commercial power given to Congress by the Constitution was intended to be exercised not merely to countervail the commercial policy of other nations, but to establish a commercial policy of our own, founded upon the particular circumstances in the condition of our own country; such a policy as would lead, in the first place, to the production within our own limits, as far as practicable, of all commodities of first necessity to our defense in time of war, and our subsistence both in time of peace and war, that being an essential condition of independence; such a policy as, in the next place, would be calculated to develop every latent or neglected resource of the country, and call into action and stimulate every moral and physical element of productive industry to the highest point of attainable skill and excellence.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

How the foreign commerce of the country, small as it is in value, compared with the internal trade and production, if left free from all or from proper restrictive control, may injuriously affect the latter and the greater interest, may be shown by a few facts and considerations.

No great derangement or fluctuation in the currency of the country, nor any commercial revulsion, has ever been brought about, but in connection with excessive importations of foreign products. There may be speculation and overtrading to a considerable extent at home; the circulation may be occasionally increased beyond a safe limit; but the great internal machine of production is a self-adjusting one, if left to its normal operation. Those who speculate wildly and overtrade, suffer; but there is no general crash or stoppage of business, unless there be an explosion from abroad. Take the example of the revulsion of 1837, one of the most ruinous the country has ever passed through; the value of the imports of foreign merchandise in 1834 was, in round numbers, $126,000,000. In 1836 they rose to $189,000,000, showing an increase in two years of $63,000,000. No wonder that in 1837 there was a general crash. Many ingenious suggestions have been made to relieve foreign commerce from any responsibility for the revulsion of that year, but there stands the fact of an increase in imported goods of fifty per cent. in two years. Let us now see how the case stands in relation to the recent revulsion. In the year ending 30th June, 1855, the imports were, in round numbers, $212,000,000; in the year ending 30th June, 1857, they rose to $360,000,000, showing an increase in two years of $148,000,000. Is it therefore wonderful, that a general crash followed this enormous violation of the laws of regular trade? When it is considered how important it is to the active and successful prosecution of all the arts of production to maintain a currency at once sound, steady, and abundant, and that it is impossible to maintain such a currency without an adequate supply at all times of the precious metals, we may be able to form some estimate of the extent of the injuries inflicted upon the country by an ill-regulated foreign commerce; draining it of those indispensable commodities, or causing them to be hoarded in banks or private coffers, forcing a rapid contraction of the circulating medium, superinducing a fall of prices, a depreciation of property ruinous to debtors, a general loss of confidence and destruction of credit, the utter prostration of many important branches of individual enterprise, and the depression of all.

But however grievous the consequences of these occasional revulsions to the general prosperity, they sink into comparative insignificance when contrasted with the permanent obstacles interposed by an ill-regulated and inadequately restricted foreign commerce to the full development of the industrial resources of the country. The native energies of the people will, in a few years, overcome the disasters of the most ruinous commercial revulsion; but they can never be displayed in their full proportions under the perpetual incubus of an essentially vicious and injurious commercial policy.

I have before stated that the value of foreign products in 1857 must have been $460,000,000, instead of being no more than the $360,000,000, as shown by the custom-house accounts. I found this conclusion upon these facts and circumstances: The value of the products exported in the year 1857, at the place of export or shipment, was, in round numbers, $362,000,000; while the value of the imports at the place of export from the country where produced, was, in round numbers, only $360,000,000; neither the increased value of the exports in the foreign market, the interest on the capital invested by the merchant, nor the profits upon the inward adventure, or the wages of mercantile industry, are represented in the amount of imports; and it not being so represented, where it should regularly appear, it would seem that the foreign trade of this country is carried on without any profit, or rather at a loss. American merchants do not engage in foreign trade on such terms. How different the returns of the British foreign commerce. It appears from the accounts returned to Parliament of the foreign trade of the United Kingdom for the year 1856, that the declared or real value of the British and Irish exports was £115,890,857, or $579,454,285; while the declared value of the imports of the United Kingdom, for the same year, were £172,654,823, equivalent to $863,274,115, and showing an excess of imports over exports of more than forty per cent. after deducting £23,000,000 of imports exported to foreign countries. On the same authority, I am authorized to state that the excess of imports over exports, in a series of years, has averaged forty per cent. If the rate of returns on foreign trade carried on by American merchants should be equal to that of the British merchant—and I cannot see why it should not be—then the value at the port of delivery of the foreign merchandise imported into this country in the year ending the 30th of June, 1857, should be stated at $505,246,197. Allowing a similar rate of increase in the annual amount of importations stated in the Treasury report, it will result that in the last ten years $960,000,000, or nearly one thousand million dollars' worth of foreign products, have been imported into the United States more than appears in the custom-house returns, or in the Treasury reports; and in the same time, the frauds upon the revenue must have exceeded one hundred and fifty million dollars—an amount sufficient to construct a railway to the Pacific. The people of the country, not even the President himself, nor the officers of the Government, who have a more particular interest in the subject than others, have no means of knowing the amount of the foreign merchandise brought into the country at any time. Nothing could be more conclusive than this extraordinary deficiency of information upon so important a subject, that our whole commercial system is essentially blind, deceptive, and founded upon false principles.

In the absence of all reliable custom-house returns, showing the amount of our import trade, and when credit enters so largely into all mercantile operations, it is easy to see how the country may become extensively involved by overtrading, and find the currency and the whole machinery of production suddenly disordered without any previous warning; especially when the state of foreign exchange is repudiated as any indication, either favorable or unfavorable, of the condition of the currency or of foreign trade, as it is by our most distinguished financiers and political economists. The delusion of a prosperous condition of the country, in the absence of wise and proper commercial relations, may prevail for years before the inevitable catastrophe dispels it. That such a delusion prevailed during the last five years, we now know; but the mystery is, how it was kept up so long; for, dim as the light was which the Treasury reports shed upon the subject of the trade of the country, it was sufficient, one would have supposed, to have put business men on their guard.

The average value of the annual amount of imports during the five years, commencing with 1848, was $181,000,000; while the average of the last five years was $301,000,000, showing an increase in five years of $120,000,000. In 1852, the year preceding the last term of five years, the imports were only $212,945,442; in 1857 they rose to the sum of $360,890,151, exhibiting a difference of $147,944,699, or nearly seventy-five per cent. We can now understand, if we will, why it was that the gold and silver, the basis of a sound currency, was leaving the country during the last five years at the average rate of $47,000,000 a year. We can now understand, if we will, how, in order to keep pace with this extraordinary expansion of foreign trade, and to supply the place of the gold and silver sent out of the country to pay for the excessive importation of foreign wares, the banks increased their issues and extended their discounts; how the manufacturers continued their business at a loss, as they must have done, under a competition with foreign goods so overwhelming in amount, in hopes that a better time would come; and how it was, that when neither the merchants, nor the manufacturers, nor the banks, could longer bear up against the pressure, all went down together, some few of the banks, swindling concerns from their origin, and thousands of honest merchants and manufacturers, never to rise again. I repeat, that we can now understand, if we will, how and why it is that when such a crash comes, money becomes scarce or ceases to circulate; that the prices of property and all the products of industry fall; that the debtor finds that he has substantially double the amount to pay that he contracted to pay; how the farmer and planter have to take half price for their products, or let them rot in the barn or under the shed; how all the springs of production become relaxed, and the whole social movement retarded.

Whoever, like the President and the author of the article I have referred to in the Edinburgh Review, attributes the late revulsion, with all its train of evils, to an ill-regulated currency, must be deaf to the teachings of experience. The one of these authorities is supporting a party, and the other the interests of his own country. The unrestricted issue of paper money may have contributed to the disaster, as I have before stated, but the great first cause of this wide-spread calamity is to be found in an ill-regulated, unrestricted foreign commerce. Sir, it was free trade!

I have heard it announced once or twice, in debate on this floor, that nobody is now bold enough to advocate the protective policy. The Secretary of the Treasury announces, in his report, that "the day has passed in this country for increasing the restrictions on commerce." The enlightenment of the period in which we live is too great for that! The policy of Great Britain, in modifying her tariff, to some extent, in conformity with the spirit of free trade, is held up as an example fit to be followed by this country. I have already expressed my admiration of the profound wisdom of British statesmen. They never sacrifice a great national interest to a mere abstraction. They know perfectly well that they risk nothing in the changes they have made in their commercial policy. They know, too—what American statesmen have yet to learn—that the reciprocity in trade which they affect generously to offer to the acceptance of all nations is neither fair nor equal in its benefits, except as between nations in some parity of condition, and the natural resources of which have been equally developed. There can be no fair competition otherwise in the race for preeminence in wealth and power. All the world knows that England stands now without a rival in the arts of production, and that, if the principles of free trade were now ingrafted upon the policy of all other nations, she never could have a rival. The free-trade partisans in this country speak so vauntingly of the progress of these principles, that I should like to hear what nations or people have made them the basis of their commercial policy? what great Power, especially, has adopted this policy? Great Britain, it is true, has adopted them as far as they are applicable to her circumstances and condition; and to that extent, other Powers have done so; But what one has gone beyond that point? Is it Russia? Is it Austria? Is it France? None of those Powers have fallen into the snare; nor could either of those great Powers adopt such a policy without endangering, nay, without a positive sacrifice of the great element of progress, as well as of independence. Which of the smaller States of Europe have been so insane as to accept the invitation of England? Some few commercial cities only. Neither Holland, nor Belgium, nor Sweden, nor Denmark, nor the Zoll Verein, which represents most of the States of Germany, nor Switzerland, nor Spain, nor Portugal. Several of them have reduced their duties on imported merchandise, but none of them have fully embraced free-trade principles.

The advocates of free-trade principles in England affect to sneer at the narrow policy of France in adhering to her restrictive system; and they point especially to the high rates of duty imposed upon foreign iron. How absurd the idea that France could allow her iron manufactures to go down under the cheaper supplies from England! Where would she be as a military Power without that most essential material of war? But France has evinced the superiority of her wisdom in other respect besides the costly protection of her iron interest. Conforming to the first maxim, or what ought to be the first maxim of political economy, which is, that it is the paramount duty of every State or nation that would secure its independence against all contingencies, so to mold its commercial policy as to insure the production, within itself, of all the essential articles of military supply, and, as far as practicable, of such articles of subsistence as are of prime necessity, or such as are by habit so necessary to the comfort of the people, as that discontent would follow the want of them, France, by her persistent efforts and proper protection, has brought the manufacture of sugar from the beet-root to such perfection as to meet the foreign product upon equal terms in the domestic market, and to furnish a large proportion of the amount consumed by her population.

The considerations connected with military defenses and national independence will always prevent the general adoption of those principles of free trade which the Secretary of the Treasury dreams of seeing incorporated into the code of international law. As long as Great Britain maintains her superiority as a naval Power, France dare not relax her commercial system. To do so would reduce her forthwith to the rank of a second-rate, or rather to the condition of a dependent Power. Great Britain alone, of all the nations of the earth, could, at this time, without danger or permanent injury to any of her interests, conform her commercial policy to the principle of free trade: for, as to whatever essential supplies she may want, she can command them by the thunder of her naval batteries.

Those who would follow the example of Great Britain in adopting the principles of free trade in this country, would do well to give some attention to the "vantage ground" she would occupy in entering upon a free competition for the trade of the world; and that is the question at last. All freely admit that the manufactures of Great Britain are the principal foundation and support of her immense commerce. She exports no raw products; her manufactures now supply annually an average of £100,000,000 of exports, equivalent to $500,000,000; and this they do after supplying the home consumption to an equal amount, as estimated by her ablest economists; thus making the whole annual product of her manufacturing industry £200,000,000, equivalent to $1,000,000,000. It was this exhaustless mine of wealth that carried England through the terrible and expensive wars of the French revolution triumphantly; and it would enable her again to subsidize half the world in any great war in which they may happen to be engaged.

If it should be inquired how England has been enabled to surpass all the world in manufacturing industry, the free-trade advocate will tell you that this great success arose from several causes: the character of her population; their hardihood and enterprising spirit; the natural advantages of the country; its minerals of greatest utility in the arts; its treasures of iron and coal; the abundance of capital, the accumulation of centuries; but none of them are ever heard to allude to another and most potential cause of the wonderful progress of manufacturing skill and enterprise in Great Britain. I allude, of course, to the encouragement and protection extended by the Government to the manufacturing interests, by duties and imposts upon the products of other countries, when brought to be vended in the English markets. When the attention of the champions of free trade is called to this point, their utterance is suddenly choked up, or they boldly deny that the protective policy has had anything to do in building up that great British interest.

They dispose of the famous navigation acts in the same way—acts so long and so justly regarded by Englishmen as among the most politic measures of the English Government, and the origin of their maritime ascendancy. By those acts, the importation of foreign merchandise was restricted to English bottoms, or to the ships of the nation or country of which the merchandise were the growth or manufacture; and they also provided that the master and three fourths of the crews of all English vessels should be British subjects. At the period of the passage of these acts Holland aspired to be mistress of the sea. Her fleet became so formidable while under the command of Van Tromp and De Ruyter, that at one time during a war with England, an English ship could hardly venture out to sea. Van Tromp audaciously sailed down the English channel, with a broomstick at the mast-head of his ship, and once entered the Thames and spread consternation among the inhabitants of London itself. The navigation acts were dictated by jealousy and the fear of these bold rivals, and their effect was, in a comparatively short time, to humble the naval power of the Dutch, and to acquire a superiority on the ocean which she maintains to this day; yet those celebrated enactments are now derided as having been dictated by ignorance and a false conception of the true principles of trade and navigation. All that remains of them now is the monopoly of the coasting trade, which is still secured to British vessels. Some of our leading advocates of the free-trade school in this country have proposed to throw open the coasting trade of the United States to British enterprise. In that event, Great Britain would be nothing loath to take advantage of that new opening to her commerce; and before a great while, her trading vessels would be found not only in all the bays, inlets, and rivers on our extensive sea-coasts, but also upon all the lakes and rivers in the interior, peddling British wares at every landing; for the principle would lead to that. It would be free trade, and as for the revenue which it may be supposed would suffer by this license, that is already proposed to be raised by direct taxes.

But I am digressing from the train of my argument. I was enumerating the circumstances in the condition of Great Britain which gave her great advantages in the contest for the trade of the world in which she is embarked, and in which she invites all nations to contend with her upon principles of free trade, and the causes of her unparalleled success in manufacturing industry. I alluded to the abundance of British capital as one great element of her success; but I did not notice one advantage derived from that source, and that is, that it enables the more wealthy class of manufacturers occasionally to submit to great sacrifices in the sale of their manufactures, as it is known they often do, to strangle rival interests springing up in other countries. That combinations for this purpose are often entered into by British manufacturers, I presume will not be disputed.

Nor have I treated, as fully as I should do, of the truly wonderful progress which has been made in Great Britain in substituting mechanical for human power. An able and approved economist of the free-trade school computes that, by this substitution, an available force equal to the combined energies of six hundred millions, or two thirds of the population of the globe, have been crowded into a country not exceeding in extent some of the separate States of this Union, and the entire population of which does not exceed thirty million. What proportion of this vast power or force is employed in the various branches of industry connected directly or indirectly with manufactures, I have no means of estimating, but it must be very large. All agree that what we call manufactures, would be more properly described as the product of machinery than of the hands—the bone and sinew of man. The mechanics, properly so called, make the machines, and the machines convert the raw material into artificial forms and textures. It has been estimated that the whole number of mechanics and operators, men, women, and children, employed in the production of British manufactures, does not exceed one million and a half, though many millions more are dependent upon them for their support.

It is upon this vast-accumulation of mechanical forces, it is upon this general superiority over other nations in the mechanic arts, that the free-trade advocates base their belief that Great Britain will enjoy a virtual monopoly in supplying the world with certain descriptions of manufactured articles. It is upon these broad and truly wonderful foundations—the creations of British invention, skill, and energy, aided by a wise policy on the part of the Government—that those advocates predict still greater triumphs of British art, claiming that "British cotton and linen goods, British iron and hardware, will become a kind of current money throughout the globe;" that British commerce will be so extended that Britain will become the factor for the world—"its vast capital rendering it an industrial agency for diffusing and equalizing the collected affluence of mankind." These are the calculations—the dreams, perhaps—of enthusiasts; but when we reflect upon the past success of that great people in all that constitutes the glory of nations, we should not be surprised at any future triumph they may achieve. How proudly erect she now stands amid difficulties that might well appal the most powerful nation! Not altogether free from apprehension of the hostile designs of the first military Power of the world, yet with cool determination subduing India, with its one hundred and fifty million inhabitants, to a more perfect obedience to her rule; and at the same time, dictating to the sovereign of three hundred million subjects on the eastern verge of Asia, the terms upon which he may be permitted to occupy his throne in security; and, what is scarcely less admirable in her bearing at such a time, her apparent indifference whether or not she gives offense to this country—no despicable antagonist, if she had no other. But what is most wonderful, not to say mysterious, in the cool and unshaken attitude assumed by Great Britain at this time, is the enormous financial burdens under which she still moves onward in her course—the immense amount of taxes levied upon the industry and resources of her people for the support of her vast public establishments, and to pay the interest upon her public debt of £800,000,000, equivalent to $4,000,000,000. I see by the returns made to Parliament, that the net revenue collected and paid into the exchequer in 1857, was £72,218,988, equivalent to $360,000,000. Though there is something truly wonderful in all this, yet there is no mystery in it. The port and majesty with which Great Britain moves among the nations are justified by her inexhaustible natural sources of wealth which she early discovered, and had the wisdom to cherish and develop. If it were fit and just that any one country should make all others tributary to it, the small group of British isles, the seat of British power, with their comparative diminutive population, by raising themselves to their present preëminence, have won the right to make the world tributary to them; and now, having attained the full measure of the benefits which a protective policy could bestow, well may that great people challenge an exchange of their products for the commodities of other nations on free-trade principles. It remains to be seen whether the challenge will be accepted. This country already takes from Great Britain within a fraction of $100,000,000 worth of her manufactures in exchange for its raw produce, that being one fifth of the whole amount of British exports to all the world, and one third of her entire exports, exclusive of the amount exported to her own possessions and dependencies. But what is more remarkable still in the policy of this country is, that far the largest portion of all the products of British industry brought to this country could, in a comparatively short time, be supplied by native industry and resources.

Mr. President, a desire to close my remarks in-

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

duces me to pass over many points I should like to notice; but there are a few, out of which so much capital has been made in this country by the champions of free trade, that I am not willing to slur by silence. They expatiate largely upon the success of free-trade principles in England, and, by this means, they have succeeded in imposing on the credulity of large numbers of the people of this country. After all, what does the free trade of England amount to? She still imposes duties on her imports to the extent of $20,000,000 on an average. Last year they amounted to $22,000,000; and how much of the $17,000,000 raised by excise duties is imposed upon the same commodities before they are consumed I cannot state. What do you think, sir, of the free-trade principles, or rather practice, of England, when she imposes a duty of seventy-two cents upon every pound of tobacco imported into the kingdom, and five per cent. upon the value in addition? What do you think of an annual revenue of from six to seven million pounds, equivalent to thirty or thirty-five million dollars, derived from tobacco alone, the largest portion of which is exported from the United States? How does this consist with the idea of free trade? That, however, is the character of the free trade of England! But even here, we may learn something from the wisdom of English statesmen. Why do they impose such large duties on this article? Because tobacco is an article which enters into what is called unproductive consumption. Though it has become an article necessary to the comfort of the toiling million, yet it is taxed to the maximum that it will bear, because it perishes with the use; because it cannot be spun into yarn or made into cloth. British policy is to import nothing but raw products which can be converted into a product of ten times their original value by the agency of her wonder-working machinery, and such other commodities as contribute to the subsistence and comfort of the operative mechanics and laborers who make and direct the machinery.

Again, we have heard a great deal of the repeal of the corn laws of England, as a great act of justice to the toiling millions, extorted from the Government by the principles of free trade. Sir, I should be pleased to see the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] in his seat; the Senator who spoke so pathetically of the impositions and oppressions that were practiced upon the toiling millions by the protective policy of this country, by the unjust taxes imposed on them for the improvement of rivers and harbors. He spoke of the hundreds of thousands of poor people—I believe he said there were four hundred thousand in the single city of New York of untaxed inhabitants—scarcely able to eke out a living; many of them not able to do that; and yet Congress was asked still further to distress and oppress them by increased expenditures and the imposition of higher duties—thus raising the price of the goods with which they are to be clothed.

What was the repeal of the corn laws of England intended to effect? The corn laws were that part of the general protective policy of Great Britain which was intended to encourage agriculture, and to insure, as far as practicable, that sufficient supply of food within itself, for the subsistence of its inhabitants, necessary to its independence; but when, from increased population and the limited quantity of lands fit for cultivation, the products of the soil often fell short, as they were almost sure to do in unfavorable seasons, of a sufficient supply for the whole population, the prices in such seasons, as was inevitable, rose so high that the laboring classes, depending upon their daily or weekly wages for the subsistence of their families, and especially those who could get no regular employment, were often not able to buy bread enough to support life; and great numbers, under these circumstances, but for the relief extended under her poor laws in years of scarcity, would have perished. Under these circumstances a cry of "repeal" was raised against her corn laws by the suffering and toiling millions. It was heard and responded to by the Government, and the corn laws were repealed. They ought to have been repealed as soon as population began to tread upon the heels of subsistence. Protection of agriculture had gone as far as it could safely go without a sacrifice of other great interests, and it was withdrawn without the sacrifice of the agricultural interest. One fourth of the population of Great Britain is still engaged in agricultural pursuits. Agriculture still flourishes, and all the wheat and other grains, and the flour made from them, imported from other countries, constitute but a fraction of what is consumed. It is estimated that all the ships of the merchant service of the world would not be sufficient to transport breadstuffs and provisions enough to supply the United Kingdom, if their entire crop should at any time fail. The sentiment of the invocation of Thomson, is still the sentiment of the English people, as it is of every intelligent people. Agriculture is the foundation of all prosperity, and without its successful development civilization would retrograde. But all history teaches that a people addicted to agriculture only have invariably become either the dependents or the victims of the Powers addicted to trade, war, and spoliation.

"Ye Britons, venerate the plow,"

But upon what pretext can it be claimed that the repeal of the corn laws of England was a triumph of free-trade principles? Here we have no question about the protection of agricultural industry; it is about the protection of mechanical and manufacturing industry. As to these interests, the repeal of the corn laws was a triumph of the protective policy—of the manufacturing interests of Great Britain—and was so expressly claimed to be by the Anti-Corn Law League and the advocates of free trade. The repeal of the corn laws cheapened breadstuffs and provisions, brought them more within the means of the operatives and laborers in the machine-shops and foundries, in the mines and in the factories, which enabled them to do more work with the same or less wages, and to consume more of the products of manufacturing industry, encouraging new investments of capital, the building of new factories, and thus regular employment was found for thousands who otherwise might have been still doomed to the pittance of subsistence doled out by the poor-rate charity. The repeal of the corn laws brought relief to the toiling millions, but unhappily it could bring no relief to the unemployed poor, except to the extent and in the way I have just explained; for though the market was thrown open to the wheat of the Baltic, of the Black sea, and of the United States, still the poor man out of employment had no means to buy it; and as for him and his starving family, it might as well have remained in the country where it was grown.

How does my friend from Georgia, and those who concur with him in the policy of free trade, expect to advance the interests or relieve the wants of the toiling millions about whose distresses and oppressions under the protective policy they so eloquently declaim? How do they propose to benefit the four hundred thousand destitute poor in the city of New York, referred to by the Senator from Georgia, by their free-trade policy? When you take off all the duties on foreign merchandise, and thereby, if it should so happen, reduce the prices of them, does that relieve their distresses or promote their comfort? Unfortunately, their condition would remain precisely the same; for they have no means to buy clothing at any price, nor will they ever be able to improve their condition until they shall find employment by which they can first put money in their pockets. Nor is this the doom of the poor and idle about the large cities alone, but of the thousands dispersed over the country, who, either from taste or habit, prefer the excitements and the associations of the town and village, or of mechanical labor, to the solitary employments of the farm or the country. But a wise protective policy looks beyond the supply of such employments as will raise the condition of the laboring man above want; it aspires to give him the option of employments at such wages as will enable him to build a house, to educate his children, and to clothe his wife and daughters in a manner conformable to the natural and becoming pride of an American freeman. That is the true way to relieve the wants and to elevate the condition of the toiling millions, and there is no other way.

But, sir, a wise and statesmanlike policy for this country must embrace other classes of our population besides the poor and unemployed. Three fourths of our population are now engaged in agricultural employments, leaving but one fourth for all others. The cotton and tobacco growers may be sure of a good market under all circumstances; but when the free-trade policy of those who now have control in our public councils shall be carried out; when all the most important manufacturing employments and enterprises shall cease or be broken down, except the building of ships, and steamboats, and locomotives, to carry off our bulky raw products, what will be the fate of the labor and capital employed in the broad expanse of our agricultural domain outside of the cotton and tobacco-growing States and districts? When, in addition to an area already under cultivation and ample enough to supply breadstuffs and animal provisions for half the Christian world, ten millions of acres of land are annually brought under culture; and when the population of all the countries where we sometimes find a market for our agricultural products, but seldom fall short of a sufficient supply derived from their own soil; and when those who sometimes fail in this can most commonly supply all deficiencies from the granaries of their neighbors cheaper than from ours—I repeat, under the circumstances I have enumerated, what is to be the condition of the agricultural population, the farmers and laborers of this country? Where are they to find a market for their still increasing products? What encouragement will they have to improve the productiveness of their lands, build good farm-houses and barns? It is true that the wheat growers on the Atlantic slope may find a good market in the large cities built up by foreign commerce; but when you cast your eye over the vast valleys and plains of the States west and northwest, teeming with the great agricultural staples, corn and wheat, hogs and cattle, horses and mules, you may well ask yourselves, where on this globe are we to look for a demand, an outlet for them at remunerating prices? After the horses and the mules required shall be driven to the cotton States; after the deficiency in their supplies of corn and bacon shall be furnished them; after the few populous cities shall have received their supplies of beef-cattle and pork and flour, where else, I repeat, can the farmer look for a profitable market for the vast surplus of his products which he will still find on his hands? Nowhere, but to the uncertain, fluctuating, and limited markets in foreign countries. In years of famine or short crops in Europe—which, by-the-by, we are liable to have at home as well as abroad—a market may be found for a portion of our large surplus; but the hopes and calculations excited by such occasional demands will prove delusive and short lived. A few years ago, when there happened to be a good market for breadstuffs in some of the States of Europe, and when some new railway connections between the West and the East had recently been finished, the farmers of Tennessee and Kentucky imagined that they had found a new mine of wealth in the wheat-producing qualities of their soil and climate. They obtained near their own doors some ninety cents or a dollar a bushel for their wheat; but as soon as Providence smiled upon their transatlantic customers, their newly-excited hopes and expectations vanished.

In the last five years, which, as we know, were years of inflation in everything, the average value of provisions and breadstuffs exported annually to foreign markets was only, in round numbers, $57,000,000; in the preceding five years, the average did not exceed $30,000,000; but under the new state of things which we may expect to follow the triumph of what is called free trade, unless there should spring up a demand abroad justifying an increased exportation of breadstuffs and provisions to the amount of at least fifty million dollars in each successive year, the farm-house would soon decay, and the plow stand still in the furrow throughout more than half the extent of our present agricultural and cultivated surface. Everybody knows that the prices of agricultural products at home are regulated by the foreign demand. If there is no demand abroad, of course prices come down to a figure regulated by the relations subsisting between the supply and demand in the home market; and prices will be very low, as such supplies in this country must, in an average of years, largely exceed the demand, even though no change should take place for the worse in our present commercial policy; and thus the producers of breadstuffs and provisions, the largest portion of our whole population, may be said to be already reduced to a state of absolute dependence upon foreign markets for any remunerative return for their industry and capital.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Fifteen Million Loan—Mr. Bell.

SENATE.

But what, especially, will be the condition and prospects of the new States of the West and Northwest, springing up on the Upper Mississippi and Missouri, in which wheat is the great, and in some the only staple production, if the policy foreshadowed, or the one even now existing, should be adopted or perpetuated? Producers of wheat and consumers of the flour made from it will they be all the days of their lives—not a mouth to help them to consume, except the merchant and Indian trader, who supply them with such foreign merchandise as the modicum of price they get for their wheat and Indian annuities pay for. Before the tariff of 1824, the highest price wheat commanded in Illinois was thirty-seven and a half cents per bushel. When wheat commands one dollar per bushel in New York, the farmer in the far West, at this day, may expect to get twenty-five cents per bushel for his surplus, and that will be the maximum in an average of years. What condition could be more forlorn and hopeless? The poor man who has laid up all his small earnings to gratify his pride in becoming a landowner, and now finds himself in the possession of one hundred and sixty acres, will in a short time find it to his interest to sell his land; and if he cannot find a purchaser at any price, to run away from it, and go where he can do better for his family in some other locality or employment. The only exception to this inevitable condition of the far West will be found on the great lines of travel and emigration to California and Frazer's river in pursuit of gold, for it will soon come to pass that no gold can be got in this part of the continent. The emigration to those points will greatly increase, and the emigrants will consume a portion of the products of the farmer immediately on the routes they pursue.

What is the true policy of this country? To encourage and protect by all constitutional and just means its internal trade and industry; to promote the division of labor and the diversity of industrial pursuits; to provide congenial and profitable employment, as far as practicable, for the whole population. Let all the arts of production and civilization be cherished by a discriminating patronage. Let the flame and smoke of the smelting furnace be seen rising from every hill and mountain side, and from every valley where nature has stored her mineral wealth. Let beautiful villages spring up along the line of all our railways, great and small, and dot over all the interior; and in or around all of them let the stately factory appear, with its busy hum of looms and spindles; and hard by, the great workshops be found in which that sort of machines are made that produce the wealth of England. Let the draught stacks of the foundry diversify the scene, and the stroke of the big forge-hammer, reducing the crude metal to the desired forms, be heard; nor let the decent school-house be forgotten, and first, and above all, let the tall church spire ascend—pointing to heaven. In a word, let domestic industry and the manufacturing arts be encouraged and sustained, so that agriculture may find its surest market at home, and be relieved of the foreign dependence and fluctuations to which it is now subjected.

Thus the producers and the consumers of agricultural products will be brought together. The producers of the raw material, and the manufacturer who fashions it into a thousand forms, for use or ornament, will be placed side by side. So Jefferson, with all his original prejudices, at last advised. Washington and Hamilton and the Adamsses also favored this policy: so did Madison and Monroe; and so did Lowndes and Calhoun, in 1816, both of them advocating and voting for the tariff of that year, which was strongly protective in all of its features. Even General Jackson, with all his wild notions about credit and commerce, was still too practical a statesman not to see and acknowledge that all such manufactures as are necessary to make a nation independent of foreign supplies in time of war ought to be encouraged. In fact, all those who in their day have rendered their names illustrious in the annals of this country, by their civil or military services, have, at some period of their lives, favored this policy. The illustrious names of Clay and Webster will occur to every one, without any mention from me, as champions of this great American policy.

But, sir, I cannot pursue this subject—I cannot do more than break the shell of it—according to my conception of its magnitude. I will only consume a few moments more in adverting to some of the more prominent objections urged against the protective policy, by the advocates of free-trade, and such as have been addressed rather to the ignorance and prejudice of the people than to their enlightened and impartial judgment. It is said that it is a system of robbery and plunder; taking money out of the pockets of one class of the people and putting it into those of another class; oppressing the laboring poor, for the benefit of the rich capitalist—in other words, making the rich richer and the poor poorer. I will answer the robbery and oppression of the poor argument, when I shall have ascertained how the fact is as to the more plausible charge that the capitalist alone is benefited by this policy. I should like to hear what the average profits have been on capital heretofore invested in manufacturing enterprises, from such gentlemen as the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, on the other side of the Chamber, [Mr. ALLEN,] who has been long and extensively engaged in the business, and who is the political friend and associate of the leading champions of free trade in the Senate, and from his colleague, who sits on this side of the Chamber, [Mr. SIMMONS,] who has also been extensively engaged in manufacturing. What have been the average profits of the capital invested in manufacturing, even in its most prosperous periods, in cottons and woollens, and whatever other manufacturing interests they have a knowledge of? Have they ever exceeded, in any term of years, say five or ten, an average of six per cent.? If the policy of the Government had been stable and reliable for any longer period, it is quite likely that from ten to twelve per cent. might have been realized—not too great a profit on such investments, considering all the risks connected with them.

I should like to hear from the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] whether his investigations have not satisfied him that the average profits of manufacturing in this country have never exceeded, for any number of successive years, a reasonable rate of compensation, or such as does not exceed the ordinary rate of profit derived from investments in trade or enterprises of any other description. Sometimes, owing to particular circumstances and contingencies, they may have risen to twelve per cent., and in extraordinary cases even fifteen or twenty per cent. When a broken-down establishment is bought under the hammer, the purchaser, getting the property for, say, $20,000, which cost $100,000, may well estimate his profits at thirty per cent., though, if he had bought at cost, he might not have realized more than six per cent.; but, upon an average, I suppose that the profits of manufacturing in this country have never exceeded the ordinary rate of profit in trade.

Mr. COLLAMER. If you deduct their losses, they have not made anything.

Mr. BELL. Instead of being robbers and plunderers, the manufacturers have then, in fact, been robbed and plundered by the Government by its frequent changes of policy; but I shall not dwell on that now. The question I should like the honorable Senator from Virginia to answer me is, whether, according to the laws which regulate trade, business enterprises of all kinds, production, and prices, it is possible that the capital invested in any one industrial employment would ever bring more, in any long term of years, than a fair average amount of profit, when compared with investments in other employments; and for the reason that whenever the profits in any business rise above that rate, other capitalists embark in similar enterprises, until the profits are brought down to the ordinary standard? English capital would find its way quickly to this country, if any rate of profit exceeding ten per cent., or even less than that rate, could be looked to with any assurance that it would be permanent. To be sure, capital invested in slaves and the rich lands of the Southwest, is supposed to yield a greater rate of profit than I have stated; but then it is subject to great contingencies, great chances. For a few years the seasons are favorable, the yield of cotton large, the prices high; but with the rise of the price of cotton, the prices of slaves and lands rise, and then come years of overflow, droughts, destruction by insects, epidemics, low prices, and declining values; so that, taking it as a whole, I do not consider the profits of planting above the ordinary standard of profits on investments in other industrial pursuits. I care not what employments you adduce to show the contrary. They all find the level of the average profits of business, unless, indeed, it be capital invested in other agricultural pursuits, the products of which often find no paying market. It is the certainty with which the cotton planter can cash his products, at a remunerative price, that gives it the advantage over other agricultural pursuits.

If the views I have presented on the question as to what has been the average profit on capital invested in manufacturing be well founded, there can be no truth in the charge that the effect of the protective policy is to benefit the rich, the capitalist, at the expense of the consumer.

It is said that the effect of a protective duty on foreign goods is always to raise the price of them. That is, indeed, the natural tendency, and for a short time such may be the effect; but it is, and has been, the invariable result in the end that where the article protected is one which can be successfully manufactured in this country, we having the raw material and the competent skill, to reduce prices. That was the case, we all know, in regard to cotton goods after the tariff of 1828. I know, from personal experience, that the price of charcoal-refined iron manufactured in the Southwest fell two cents on the pound the year following the tariff act of 1842. This is the natural result of the home competition; but the competition of the foreign article, in most cases, coöperates with that between the home producers in bringing about this reduction. The protective duty may be so high as to injure the home manufacturer; it may be so high as to stimulate investments of capital to an extent which will lead to over-production of the protected article; and it was for this reason that some of the most judicious friends of the protective policy in Congress voted against the act of 1828, and, among others, the late John Davis, of Massachusetts.

But the objection to the protective policy is still urged, that the price of the protected article is always increased by the amount of duty imposed on the foreign article, and that the consumer pays it, and hence a duty imposed for protection is denounced as a tax upon the consumer. This is the objection I have just answered, brought forward in a different form. Experience has amply shown, that even for the short period of the increased price which sometimes follows the laying on of a protective duty, the foreign producer pays, or rather loses, a portion of the duty. It is not the amount of the duty that regulates the price of the protected article, so much as it is the relation between the supply and the demand. If the supply exceeds the demand, the price falls; and in case the excess of supply over the demand be great, the price of the article will often fall below the cost of production. It is clear from this, that as a general rule, as long as the duty is not prohibitory in its character, the amount of the duty will have very little to do with the price of the article when it reaches the consumer.

The theory of the late Mr. McDuffie was, that the exporter of the domestic product, cotton for example, paid the whole amount of the duty imposed on the merchandise received in exchange for it in the foreign market. He contended that a planter who shipped a hundred bales of cotton to Liverpool, which were there sold, and the proceeds invested in merchandise which had to pay a duty of forty per cent. when imported into the United States, lost forty bales of his cotton—robbed of it by the protective policy of his country. This theory was long prevalent in the South, but it was too absurd to be held by any but the most jaundiced and intemperate partisans of a local interest. But another doctrine, almost if not quite as preposterous, now prevails to some extent in the South; and I am sorry to say that an American Secretary of the Treasury has committed himself to it before the world in his financial report at the opening of the session. Our accomplished minister of finance has discovered that we cannot expect foreign nations to buy our cotton, rice, breadstuffs, and tobacco, unless we continue to take their productions in return; but he does not appear to have learned that the larger and more diversified the products of internal trade and industry of any nation, the greater will be the amount and value of its foreign trade. Nor does he appear to have given any thought to the consideration that if the people of the United States, by a favorable change in their policy, should, in a few years, by their own machinery and skill, manufacture one half or two thirds the quantity of the $130,000,000 worth of the cotton, woolen, silken, and linen fabrics, and their compounds, and of iron and iron manufactures, now imported from foreign countries, one consequence would be that more of our cotton, rice, breadstuffs, and tobacco would be consumed at home, and a less proportion of them dependent on a foreign market; and that another and equally important consequence would be that the people of this country would import a far greater quantity of foreign products adapted to their wants and tastes than they do now, and that at the same time the flow of the precious metals would be reversed, and thus enable us, if we would, to impart to our currency a universal credit and a uniform value.

The cotton of the South is a great interest—the most important product, by far, of this or any other country, and no wise or patriotic statesman in this country will favor a policy which tends to impair its value. But it is most unfortunate, I think, that its public guardians are so sensitive to every movement connected with it, in any form or degree. The proposition to remedy the frauds on the revenue, arising chiefly from the mode of collecting duties on the foreign value of the imported merchandise, and to give to domestic manufactures the degree of protection intended by the act of 1846, is no sooner made than it is denounced as a blow aimed at the South.

In 1856 Great Britain imported, in round numbers, seven hundred and eighty million pounds of cotton from the United States, for which the planters were paid $74,000,000. This amount of American raw cotton, except a small portion exported to the continent, was by British skill and industry converted into fabrics of various kinds and qualities of the value of $302,000,000, the one half of which, it is estimated, was consumed at home, and the other half exported to foreign countries. Of the $30,000,000 of cotton goods imported into the United States in 1856, it may be assumed that $25,000,000 were of British manufacture, representing only one twelfth part of the raw cotton exported to Great Britain in that year. Yet many of the representatives of southern interests think it of vital importance to keep up this sort of interchange of commodities, so discreditable to the policy of this country. Great Britain already receives one fifth of her supplies of raw cotton from countries other than the United States, and every terra incognita of the globe is being explored to find some cotton-growing region to rival that of the United States. India, the native land of the cotton-plant, is being penetrated by railways with the same object; and all know how galling it is to British pride to be dependent upon this or any other country for any part of her essential supplies. Yet the cotton-growers take no interest in building up a home market for their great product; and still regard with jealousy and suspicion every proposed change of our commercial policy looking to that, among other objects—fearing some injury to southern interests, or some advantage to the North at the expense of the South.

I wish, sir, it were so, that upon such questions we could know no North, no South, but only our whole country.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

SPEECH OF HON. HENRY WILSON,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE SENATE, June 7, 1858.

[WRITTEN OUT BY HIMSELF.*]

The amendment offered by Mr. MALLORY, to make an appropriation for ten steam sloop-of-war, being under consideration—

Mr. WILSON said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: This proposition to increase the naval force of the Republic by the addition of ten sloop-of-war is a measure, not of war, but of peace. In December last, when not a speck of war darkened the horizon, the Secretary of the Navy, with the sanction of the President, asked Congress to increase the naval power of the country by the addition of ten small sloop-of-war. In response to the demands of the Executive, the Committee on Naval Affairs have reported the proposition now pending, to build ten war sloops. This is therefore a measure of peace, not of war, and I give it my vote as a measure of peace, not of war. The Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] himself a member of the Naval Committee, proposed to amend the proposition, by building five sloops, and by fitting for service the steamer Franklin. I have followed the lead of the Senator, who is ever watchful of the appropriations for the naval and military service, and given my vote for his amendment. But that amendment has failed to receive the sanction of the Senate, and I am now summoned to give a yea or nay vote upon the proposition to build ten sloop-of-war. I shall vote, Mr. President, for this increase of the naval force of the country, although I do so now with some little reluctance, in the present condition of the Treasury.

Our commercial marine equals, if it does not surpass in tonnage, the commercial marine of England. Freighted with the precious cargoes of a lawful commerce, our merchant ships are floating upon the waves of every sea in every quarter of the globe. The interests and honor of the country alike demand that we should give our lawful commerce, in every clime and on every sea, the protection of our own cannon. Believing that we ought to increase our naval force by annually building a few ships, adapted to the actual wants of our country, I am prepared to sustain the proposition of the committee to build ten sloop-of-war.

But the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] filled with apprehension and alarm, or with patriotic indignation, at the action of the naval forces of England in the waters of the southern Gulf, proposes to increase the naval power of the country by building twenty gun-boats. The Senator has, I am sure, astonished the Senate by his speech in support of his proposition as a war measure. The Senator's proposition to build twenty little gun-boats is, he tells us, a war measure! A war measure! A proposition to build twenty little cock-boats, hardly large enough to venture out of the waters within the headlands of our own coasts, a war measure! This absolutely insignificant proposition is made and supported in the Senate of the United States as a war measure! The Senator from North Carolina will pardon me for saying that his proposition and his speech will tend to excite emotions of ridicule and contempt towards us abroad. Sir, wherever this proposition shall go, wherever his speech in support of it shall be read, they will bring upon the country the smile of derision for our folly and contempt for our weakness. The commanders of the war ships of England—the great naval Power of the world—commit belligerent acts upon our merchant ships almost within cannon shot of our own shores, and a proposition is seriously made, and gravely supported in the Senate of the United States, to meet these acts of aggression by the first naval Power of the globe, by building twenty little gun-boats! If Senators wish to resort to war measures; if they wish now to meet the acts of Great Britain by preparations for the stern conflict of arms, let them make propositions for the increase of our naval force on a scale worthy of ourselves and of our great antagonist. Let not Senators resort to a proposition so utterly inadequate, so insignificant, so absolutely contemptible, as this twenty-gun-boat scheme—this twenty-gun-boat war measure!

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON. Most certainly.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understood the Senator to be in favor of taking and bringing into our ports vessels which have offended against us. Does he believe we have force enough to do that now?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly I do. I believe we have force to bring into our ports, or to send to the bottom of the ocean, the little war ships that have committed these hostile, and I believe unauthorized acts.

The honorable chairman of the Naval Committee tells us, Mr. President, that these sloops are admirably adapted to the work of cruising for ships engaged in the slave traffic. If these war sloops are adapted to the work of enforcing our treaty obligations, if they are adapted to the work of vindicating the honor of the country, now tarnished, by putting down piracy, which seeks shelter under the folds of the American flag, let us hasten to build them; let us man them, and send them to the shores of Africa, to the waters of the southern Gulf, to the seas where our flag is now prostituted to cover an accursed and inhuman traffic in the bodies of our fellow-men. Mr. Webster said in his speech in this Chamber, fifteen years ago, in vindication of the treaty of Washington, in which his name is forever associated, that "the immunity of flags is, with the French people, a deep principle, a sentiment, a passion."

Sir, I trust we are as passionately devoted to the honor of the stars and stripes, as the people of France ever were to the immunity of the flag of the lilies or the flag of the tri-color. I trust we are ready to vindicate the honor of the flag of the Republic, whether it be assailed by the aggressive policy of England, or prostituted by pirates in pursuit of a proscribed and hateful traffic. My vote will be given now for these sloops, to redeem the now prostituted and dishonored flag of the nation from the deep stain of covering the damning crime of the slave trade. Deeply as I feel the acts of the commanders of the war ships of Great Britain in the waters of the Gulf, I confess I feel more keenly the prostitution of our flag by men engaged in the polluted and loathsome traffic in the bodies of the children of Africa. I tell Senators that until we exert our power to fulfill our treaty stipulations, until we exert our power to prevent and punish the prostitution of our flag by men engaged in the slave trade, our very sensitiveness at the aggressive acts of the commanders of the English war ships, will bring not honor, but dishonor, upon us before the Christian and civilized world. If we allow our flag to be prostituted with impunity by pirates to cover a traffic abhorred by mankind, the world will regard our efforts to vindicate the immunity of our flag upon the high seas as evidences of our sympathy with, if not our complicity with, the men engaged in the crime of the slave trade. Vote I shall to-day, to build these sloop-of-war, to fulfill our obligations, to redeem our tarnished name, and to cause our flag to be hereafter saved from dishonor.

When the means are granted to build ships adapted to the work, I shall hold the Administration responsible; I shall demand, and I trust the country will demand, that the sincerity of the nation shall be vindicated; that we shall no longer be reproached by the world with allowing our flag to cover the traffic in the bodies of our fellow-men. I go as far as he who goes furthest, in maintaining the immunity of our flag, in denying to any Power on earth the right to molest, stop, visit, or search our ships, upon the highway of nations; but I cannot but feel shame and mortification when I hear, in response to our complaints, that our flag is the chosen flag under which pirates cover their cargoes of human beings, torn by their accursed traffic from their native Africa, to wear out their lives in perpetual bondage. Surely it is fit that while we say to England that we will not allow her cruisers, either on the shores of Africa, or in the waters of the southern Gulf, to visit or search

* For the original report, see page 2743 Cong. Globe.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

American Piracy—Mr. Giddings.

HO. OF REPS.

our merchant ships, we will make every effort within human power to put down the slave trade and to arrest the prostitution of the flag of the Republic to shelter criminals and protect crime. If honest and determined efforts cannot exterminate the unholy traffic, if these efforts cannot prevent the prostitution of our flag by men engaged in that traffic, then justice, humanity, and the national honor, demand that we should, by treaty stipulation, provide for the mutual right of visitation within certain lines of latitude and longitude, with such limits and guards as shall protect honest commerce and detect fraud and piracy. It seems to me, Mr. President, that our honor and our interests alike demand that we should, either by our own force, or, by treaty stipulations, redeem the flag of our country from prostitution and foul dishonor.

That the British Cabinet will disavow the recent acts of some of their naval commanders in the waters of the Gulf, that they will make ample reparation for those illegal and belligerent acts of their officers, cannot be doubted for a moment. England does not seek a controversy with us upon this, or any other issue—certainly not at this time. She has in the East, in China and India, ample fields for the exercise of all her naval and military power, and for the employment of all her resources of wealth and of power. Let her understand that we cannot, that we will not, admit the right of any Power to visit or search our merchant ships on the high seas; that this is a settled question; that there can be no negotiation about that right; that it is a closed question, never more to be reopened; that we would as soon reopen the treaty of 1783, by which she acknowledged America sovereign and independent; and she will give us ample indemnity for the aggressive acts of the past and ample security for the future. The right being admitted, we can, without national dishonor, enter into treaty stipulations, to promote a great object which concerns the cause of humanity and civilization throughout the world.

In December, 1845, I listened to a debate in this Chamber in which the present Secretary of State took the lead. War with England, growing out of the disputed Oregon boundary question, was declared here by leading Senators to be "inevitable." These Halls then rang with the fierce war-cry, "Fifty-four forty, or fight!" While these Chambers were echoing back these words of defiance to British power, the Administration, with Mr. Buchanan at the head of the State Department, was negotiating that treaty by which we retreated from 54° 40' down to 49°; that treaty by which we surrendered five degrees of territory, including Vancouver's Island, to which, President Polk told us, our claim was "clear and unquestionable." Sir, that ignominious surrender of American territory to the grasping cupidity of England was made while these Chambers echoed with fierce denunciations of the pretensions of England. We quailed before the demands of England; we surrendered thousands of square miles of American soil, including the noble harbor at Vancouver's Island; and then we pushed our little army to the banks of the Rio Grande, and involved the nation in a war with Mexico. We got up a war fever about the claims of England to more than five degrees of the territory of the United States on the shores of the Pacific, the tide to which we pronounced "clear and unquestionable," and we then surrendered that territory to our great rival, and whipped Mexico to redeem our tarnished honor.

I see now, Mr. President, evidences of that same policy. We are to bluster towards England, and then to empower the President to employ our aroused and rampant valor against Mexico, and the weak States of Central America. British war ships commit aggressive acts upon our commercial marine on the high seas. The nation feels the indignity, and protests against these acts; and in face of these aggressive acts of England, the Committee on Foreign Relations bring in a set of resolutions expressive of the sense of the Senate, and a bill conferring power upon the President to plunge the nation into a war with Mexico or the feeble States of Central America. England insults our flag; therefore we will resolve that she ought not to have done so, and must not do it again; and to vindicate the outraged honor of our flag we will authorize the President to punish Mexico and Central America. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] has well said that the position of the Committee on Foreign Relations is this: England insults us; therefore we will whip Mexico and the States of Central America. Sir, I do not admire this position; I do not like this policy; I shall not follow the lead of the Committee on Foreign Relations; for, in my humble judgment, this policy brings dishonor rather than honor upon the country. This is the repetition of the deceptive policy of 1845, which tamely shrank from maintaining our rights as against England, and then rashly plunged us into a war with Mexico. With England—proud, arrogant, haughty England—I would maintain the rights of the nation with inflexible firmness. In vindication of our rights or our interests I would cavil with her upon the ninth part of a hair; for our honor and pride demand that we should surrender nothing to the assumptions of power; but towards the poor, weak, distracted States of Mexico and Central America I would be generous, tolerant, and forbearing. This should be the foreign policy of a great Power. This would be a policy worthy of the great Republic of the Western World.

Rumors are rife, Mr. President, that expeditions are now organizing in the United States to make inroads into the territories of the feeble Powers south of us on this continent. It is even hinted that these lawless combinations of adventurers are known to the Administration and are not discouraged by the Administration. That we have fixed our hungry eyes upon the northern provinces of Mexico, upon the Central American States, is patent to the whole world. Should these anticipated raids be made into Mexico or the States of Central America during the coming year, should the Senator from Texas [Mr. HOUSTON] lead, as he hinted he would the other day, into the States of Mexico bordering on the Rio Grande or the Messilla valley, the hordes of adventurers who will conquer that protectorate we will not assume, is it intended by the bill reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations to empower the President to engage, if need be, the nation in this hurtful raid for dominion? Sir, I denounce this movement in advance, and I denounce this bill clothing the Executive with war powers. I will vote for no such bill; I will sustain no such policy. This timid, shrinking policy towards England, and this encroaching, aggressive policy towards the weak Republics south of us on this continent, will bring neither safety nor honor to the Republic. I condemn the one and scorn the other.

We are accustomed, Mr. President, to think that the three million square miles of British territory, and the three million British people, on the North, are the guarantees, the pledges, England has given to peace with the United States. I sometimes think, sir, that the fear that the banner of the Republic would go beyond the chain of lakes, beyond the St. Lawrence; that these provinces of England would, in case of war, become a portion of the country, adding to the territory, the population, the wealth, and the power of the northern section of the Union, had quite as much restraining influence upon the councils of Young America as upon the councils of Old England. The fear of acquisitions on the North, the hope of coveted acquisitions on the South, are guarantees that the influences which now control the policy of the country will not hurry us into any contests with Great Britain which can be avoided even by concessions to her demands. Evidences all around us admonish us that the men who now administer the Government of the United States dread expansion northward, and seek expansion southward; that they are in no haste to find cause of controversy with England, while they are prompt to find cause of quarrel with any Power south of us which will open to them the coveted fields of Cuba, Central America, and Mexico. It behooves the people of America, who ask of foreign nations, in the words of Andrew Jackson, "for nothing which is not right, and who will submit to nothing wrong," to watch and to check this tendency of the men in power to shrink from the maintenance of our rights against the strong, and this tendency to encroach upon the weak.

AMERICAN PIRACY.

SPEECH OF HON. J. R. GIDDINGS,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 7, 1858,

In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon the Joint Resolutions proposing Hostilities with England, on account of her exercising the Right of Visitation.

Mr. GIDDINGS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I assure the House and the country that I entertain no apprehensions of war; nor have I any fears that war will grow out of any question now pending between this nation and Great Britain. Our present Executive is a Democrat, under the guidance of the slave power; and southern statesmen are too sagacious to suppose that our nation can endure a war in support of the slave trade. In the present state of the popular mind, a war with that Power, for such a cause, would bring the institution to a speedy termination in every State of the Union. Northern members have no desire for war; they prefer the more tardy, but equally sure, method of effecting emancipation by force of public sentiment.

The imperfection of our language often leads to protracted discussion; I shall therefore avoid the use of terms, as far as possible, in what I am about to say.

"The right of search," as exercised upon the high seas in times of war, appears to be generally understood, and in regard to it there is no controversy; but for sixteen years our Ministers at London, and the representatives of the British Government, have been explaining to each other "the right of visitation," and a war is threatened because lexicographers have failed properly to define that form of expression.

Now, sir, I shall not attempt to do that which so many abler men have failed to perform; but I assert the right, and the duty, of the commander of any ship engaged in suppressing piracy, to ascertain the national character of any suspected vessel he may meet upon the high seas.

I also declare it equally the duty of every captain, officer, and sailor, on board the suspected ship, cheerfully to give this information. The owner of the suspected ship, and the owner of the cargo, are bound by every moral consideration to require such captain and crew to give this information when demanded.

It is the duty of all statesmen, and of all Governments, to require the ships belonging to their citizens to furnish this information when suspected. This obligation arises from the fact that all nations are interested in exterminating pirates. But merchants, ship-owners, and sea-faring men, are more directly interested in that object than any other class of citizens, and their obligations correspond with the benefits derived.

I will add, that for ages pirates have been regarded as "outlaws," at war with all nations, and all nations are supposed to be at war with them.

These rules have been held and practiced upon by this Government since we have been a nation. Many of the older members of this body will recollect that, after the close of the last war, the Gulf of Mexico was infested by pirates, whose headquarters appeared to be the Isle of Pines, lying at the west of Cuba. A naval force was engaged for a considerable length of time in accomplishing the destruction of those outlaws. Now, sir, during that whole expedition they visited every suspected vessel that fell in their way, no matter what colors it bore. They visited British and Spanish and French vessels, for that purpose, just as freely as they did those which sailed under our own flag. It was their duty to do so. I think their instructions will be found to contain orders to visit not only suspected vessels, but suspected places. And I believe the official reports now on file in the Navy Department will show that they faithfully fulfilled their instructions. They visited ships; they landed upon territory belonging to other nations, and I deny that England, or France, or Spain, ever uttered a complaint or demanded explanation. Indeed, the ships and people of those nations went further. Seeing our Government carrying on a war for the benefit of mankind, they lent our ships and men employed in that work every convenient aid and facility; and had a suspected ship bearing the British flag refused to make her true character known, her commander would have justly incurred the odium of aiding and encouraging piracy; or had the British Government denied our right to ascertain the character of suspected ships bearing the flag of that nation, we should have charged them with sympathizing with the pirates.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

American Piracy—Mr. Giddings.

Ho. OF REPS.

In these remarks I have described not merely our practice on that occasion, but on every occasion. I have described, not merely the practice of our own Government, but that of every civilized nation. From the 4th of July, 1776, to this day, our practice, and the practice of Christian Governments, has been uniform, when operating against pirates, excepting that class, more technically called "American pirates," who, under the flag of the United States, are engaged in the African slave trade. These were formerly treated differently. They were not regarded as at war with mankind. They bore the flags of various nations, and pursued their nefarious vocations unmolested. But as Christianity extended, and its principles were better understood, this traffic in human flesh was seen to be a revolting crime, and most Christian nations pronounced it piracy, and treated those who pursued it as "outlaws," worthy of death.

Participating in this general view, the United States, by express statute, prepared with great labor, examined and deliberated upon with great solemnity, and passed by the Senate and by this House, I think without a dissenting voice, pronounced the African slave trade to be piracy, and those who followed that vocation to be pirates, worthy of death. The act was duly approved by the Executive, published and announced to the civilized world.

At this point of my remarks, I lay down another proposition which, I think, will not be doubted or denied: By this important step, we as a nation became obligated, bound in justice and propriety, to treat those engaged in the African slave trade as pirates. That, as a Government, we are bound to aid and assist in eradicating this piracy from the earth. That it is the duty of our statesman and citizens to lend all convenient assistance to the ships of Britain and of all other nations engaged in suppressing this piracy. That it is the obvious duty of the commander, officers, and crew, of every suspected ship, whether it bear American, French, Spanish, British, or Russian colors, cheerfully to give satisfactory evidence of her nationality, when called on for that purpose by ships actually engaged in the humane work of suppressing this traffic in slaves. If any officer refuse to give such information, the refusal constitutes evidence of guilt. In short, I lay down the comprehensive proposition, that so far as this Government is concerned, so far as our statesmen, our people, our merchants, our ship-owners, the commanders and crews of our merchant vessels, are concerned, we hold the same relation to the African slave trade which we hold to other piracies—bound by all the duties incident to piracy of any other character.

Now, sir, like all other propositions based upon clear and obvious justice, I think these will not be denied. No statesman will take issue upon any one of them. They will deny none of them. The only objection that can be raised against them is that which our Ministers at London have repeated a thousand times. They insist that British officers, in visiting our ships to ascertain their nationality, may abuse their power. I grant it; and no power was ever held by man, that was not liable to abuse. They also urge that British officers have committed wrongs upon our ships, when visiting them for the avowed purpose of learning their character, and I add that, in every such case, the British Government is responsible, and has in every instance promptly granted indemnity.

I do not believe that a single instance of such abuse has occurred, at any recent period, in the Gulf of Mexico. If any has taken place, I have no apprehension whatever that hostilities will follow; for I am confident that the British Ministry will, as in past times, explain, apologize, or indemnify those who shall be shown to have sustained loss.

Here I might, with much apparent propriety, leave the subject. But our Government is now openly engaged in efforts to overthrow the doctrines I have laid down—doctrines which commend themselves to the conscience and judgment of all reflecting men and of all civilized nations: The absurd position now occupied by this Government, in regard to the slave trade, has been reached by slow degrees. We have taken one step after another in this downward course, until we now stand before the nations of the earth in the attitude of supporting this piracy. Historic facts will place this whole matter in a more conspicuous light than argument or refined logic.

Long before our Revolution, the people of these colonies complained to the parent Government of the existence of the slave trade as a grievance. In the Congress of 1774, the members formed an association for the purpose of discouraging the slave trade; and the author of the Declaration of Independence, in 1776, set forth in his draft of that instrument, "that the British King had kept open markets where men were bought and sold," and assigned this as one of the reasons why the colonies should separate from the mother country. In the convention which framed the Constitution, language equally denunciatory of this traffic was used, and Mr. Madison informs us that he himself declared, in convention, that it would be wrong to admit in the Constitution that men can hold property in their fellow-men.

Some of the States, however, felt desirous of continuing the slave trade for a time; but so strong was the sentiment of the people against that barbarous commerce, that it was deemed necessary to provide, by express stipulation, that Congress should not prohibit it prior to the year 1808. Before that day arrived, Congress passed a law for the total abolition of the African slave trade—the act to take effect on the 1st day of January of that year.

Unfortunately, by the same law, Congress provided that persons might carry slaves from one port of the United States to another, under certain regulations. This coastwise transportation of slaves was then supposed necessary for families who emigrated from one slave State to another, for at that day no such commerce was known as the inter-State slave trade. But this provision in the act of 1807 has for many years been prostituted to the protection of an increasing commerce in human flesh.

At the close of the war in 1814, both England and the United States felt the inconsistency which had characterized their action in the recent contest, by authorizing their people to butcher each other on the battle-field; and, having been regarded as two leading nations in the Christian world, they felt the propriety of abolishing this execrable commerce. Lord Gambier and his associates, acting for Great Britain, were distinguished men, and Albert Gallatin, John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, James A. Bayard, and James Russell, Commissioners on the part of the United States, were conscious of the odium which rested upon our people by reason of their supporting this slave trade. By mutual agreement, they inserted in the treaty of Ghent the tenth article, which reads as follows:

"Whereas the traffic in slaves is irreconcilable with the principles of humanity and justice; and whereas both his Majesty and the United States are desirous of continuing their efforts to promote its entire abolition, it is hereby agreed that both contracting parties shall use their best endeavors to accomplish so desirable an object."

I desire the committee to mark the language of this solemn treaty. The two Governments mutually bound themselves to "use their best endeavors to ENTIRELY ABOLISH THE TRAFFIC IN SLAVES." This treaty stipulation had no more reference to the African than to the American slave trade. Under British laws, there was a commerce carried on between their West India Islands in the bodies of men; and we had authorized a similar commerce on the American coast, and the sages who formed this treaty had no conception that it was more criminal to buy and sell God's image in Africa, than in America. They intended this solemn stipulation to apply to the crime, and not to the place of committing it. If any man doubts this intention, I invite him to examine the remarks of Mr. Adams, made on that subject in this body, I think in 1842. Congress proceeded to carry out this stipulation, so far as the African trade was concerned. It passed a law declaring that commerce to be "piracy," and we assumed upon ourselves all the duties incident to that view of it. But during forty-four years we have maintained the American slave trade, in violation of that treaty, in violation of JUSTICE and of HUMANITY. Neither the treaty, nor the laws declaring the slave trade to be "piracy," changed or modified any principle or existing element in our moral obligations; these had been established by the law of nature and of nature's God; but our treaty and acts of Congress constitute an acknowledgment of the duties then resting upon our nation, and mark our subsequent recreancy to principle.

Having avowed these sentiments, our Government appeared to rest satisfied, without even an effort to abolish our coastwise traffic. That crime greatly increased, and produced large profits to those engaged in it. It soon became popular with slaveholders; and respectable men, who had surplus slaves, sold them to those who dealt in mankind, and they were transported to the baracoons of more southern cities, where open markets were kept for buying and selling men. Slaveholders then understood that every owner of slaves was directly or remotely involved in the moral guilt of the slave trade; that every purchaser of slaves encourages and sanctions their importation. Every man who sells a slave thereby encourages the slave trade; and no reflecting mind can regard the coastwise slave trade less criminal than that which is carried on upon the shores of Africa. In truth, it was born of the African trade, and in its effects it is more atrocious, as its victims are more intelligent. It is thus that the African slave trade, the coastwise slave trade, the inter-State slave trade, the holding of slaves, the breeding of slaves, the selling and buying of slaves, are all connected and interwoven in one general network of moral turpitude, constituting an execrable, a cancer, upon the body-politic of our nation. The African slave trade constitutes the germ, the root, from which our American slave trade, and all the various relations of that institution in this country, have sprung. If the tree be piracy, it is clear that its fruit can be nothing else than piracy; and when the nation stamped that commerce as piratical, it proclaimed the guilt of every man who voluntarily connects himself with slavery.

Men who aspired to moral, political, and social position, could not submit to this ostracism. They were constrained to emancipate their slaves, or render slaveholding honorable. To effect this latter object, the wheels of progress must be stopped; religion, civilization, and Christianity, must cease their onward march; slaves must be robbed of their humanity, and transformed into chattels; and the Federal Government must become a patron of the slave trade, instead of using our best endeavors to "entirely abolish the traffic in slaves;" and Congress was called on to sustain and encourage it—to violate our pledged faith before the nations of the earth.

In 1834, two slave ships, the Comet and Encornium, one from Alexandria, and the other, I believe, from Norfolk, Virginia, bound to New Orleans, were shipwrecked upon British islands in the Gulf. The slaves of course became free by landing on British soil. They were suddenly transformed from chattels into immortal beings, destined to an eternity of happiness or misery. The slave merchants returned to this city, chagrined and mortified. The people of the West Indies looked upon these wretches with contempt, our countrymen regarded them with horror, felt they were worthy of the gallows, rather than Executive favor. But the President, himself a slaveholder, involved in all the moral turpitude of these hucksters in our common humanity, at once espoused their cause, and directed our Minister at the Court of St. James to demand compensation from the people of England for permitting their African brethren thus to enjoy their God-given prerogatives. A more arrogant and insulting demand was never put forth by one nation upon another. All understood that the laws of England knew no distinction between these masters and the slaves whom they claimed as property. Neither the people, nor the officers of the British Government, nor the King himself, had he been present, would have had any authority whatever for delivering one of these people to the custody or control of another.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

American Piracy—Mr. Giddings.

HO. OF REPS.

Our Minister at London, however, was himself a breeder of slaves. That noble patriot, Daniel O'Connell, had refused to extend to him the civilities due to a Christian statesman, and he felt the more determined to make the Government of England dignify this "American piracy" by acknowledging it to be a legitimate vocation.

To effect this object, however, he saw but one course—that was, to regard the slaves as property, and not as persons. The crime for which indemnity was sought was so obvious, that truth could not sustain it. The laws which govern the moral universe forbid the idea that truth can subserve such iniquity, the claim must therefore be maintained by deception, by "falsehood." And in his official communication to the British Minister, Mr. Stevenson declared:

"Our Government has determined, in the most solemn manner, that slaves killed in the public service of the United States, even in a state of war, were regarded as property and not as persons, and the Government held responsible for their value."

I need not repeat what I said of this unmitigated falsehood sixteen years since. I then pronounced it false in the concrete, and false in its details, and called on the friends of Mr. Stevenson, and the delegation from his State to cite an instance where the Government had ever paid for a slave killed in the public service. The assertion was not only false, but the reverse of his assertion was true. In every instance where compensation for slaves killed in the public service has been claimed, we have refused payment.

Sir, I feel humbled, as an American, as a Christian, when I proclaim these facts. Our nation was disgraced in the presence of the civilized Governments of the earth, when its accredited Minister thus condescended to slander the people of this Union, and libel this Republican Government, in order to support piracy, and do honor to the men so worthy of the gallows. But the falsehood answered his purpose; the British Minister was deceived, the people of England were defrauded of $115,000, and the first step in rendering the slave trade honorable was successfully taken.

The next step was to constrain northern members of Congress to legislate for the distribution of this money. The slave power insisted that we should sanction the proceedings of the Executive. A bill passed the Senate for that purpose, and those interested attempted to force it through this body, under the previous question. I obtained the floor by strategy, and uttered a protest against sitting in this Hall to legislate upon the price and value of immortal beings. The bill, however, passed, and Congress thus far contributed its influence to render American piracy honorable.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, has this Government lent its moral and political influence, through the executive and legislative departments, to violate, to blot out, its solemn obligations proclaimed in the treaty of Ghent, instead of using its best endeavors to entirely abolish the "traffic in slaves." We have lent our utmost endeavors to uphold, encourage, and render it honorable. We have done this through dishonorable means—through fraud and falsehood. Sir, could this Government be subjected to its own laws, it would be liable to fine and imprisonment for obtaining money under false pretenses.

In making these remarks, I am aware that I shall incur the criticism of those who say they will "stand by our country, right or wrong." The maxim is atheistic. I will stand by my Government when it is in the right, but when it is wrong I will do what I can to set it right.

During the session of Congress in December, A. D. 1835, a slave ship was fastened to yonder wharf. It was the Enterprise, waiting her cargo. They were purchased in this District; many of them were members of various churches, and one was said to belong to the minister who officiated in the same church of which the slave was a member. The whole cargo was gathered here, under the eye of the President, and of various ministers of the Gospel, and was said to be respectable.

Some of the victims, however, were not satisfied with their lot. They preferred death by their own hands, rather than meet the horrors of southern barracoons. One of them, a young woman, threw herself from the Long Bridge into the Potomac, seeking a watery grave as a relief from the horrors of this "American piracy." Her sad fate excited the attention of one of our most talented poets, who has commemorated the sad story in beautiful verse. But the cargo was completed, and the victims taken on board, after the manner practiced upon the African coast. Indeed, so far as the slave trade was concerned, there was nothing to distinguish this city from the many slave factories of Africa. The sails were hoisted, lines cast off, and the glorious flag of our Union raised. The ship departed under the stars and stripes which may be seen upon nine-tenths of the slave ships that leave the African coast.

But the winds of heaven were more favorable to human rights than our Executive or Congress. The ship was driven far out of her course; and after three weeks of tempestuous weather, the owners of the slaves being on board, preferred running into Port Hamilton, in the Island of Bermuda, and subjecting their slaves to British laws, rather than risk their own lives by remaining longer at sea. The slaves of course became free as soon as they came under the protection of British enactments. Those laws had jurisdiction not only upon the island, but they extended a marine league from the shore. This had been the opinion entertained, and the doctrine admitted and enforced, by all civilized nations, for a century previous. This Government had practiced upon it, and still practices upon it.

But our Executive had undertaken to uphold this American slave trade, and our Minister at London was at once instructed to obtain compensation for the slaveholders. The effrontery manifested in prosecuting such a claim serves in some degree to mitigate the contempt with which every honorable, every high-minded statesman must look upon it. Of course, the British Minister respectfully declined all negotiation upon the subject. He was conscious that his Government as well as ours was bound by the treaty of Ghent to use her "best endeavors to entirely abolish the traffic in slaves." Nor could he see any good reason why England should disgrace herself by an open and obvious disregard of her solemn compact, even if the Government of the United States requested it. England has faithfully carried it out by entirely abolishing it among the people of her West India islands. She had gone further, and abolished slavery in all her dominions, and was then using her best endeavors to suppress it on the coast of the Africa. She now refused to stain her honor by encouraging this American piracy. The slaves had been voluntarily brought within the jurisdiction of her laws by direction of their owners, and were free. Nor could her statesmen discover any good reason why the people of England should pay speculators in human flesh for their loss of human cattle.

The genius of Mr. Calhoun alone appeared equal to the emergency. He stood acknowledged at that time the most able and conspicuous of southern statesmen. He saw that the law of nations in regard to the local jurisdiction of each Government must be modified, entirely changed, before any plausible argument could be advanced in favor of this claim. He, therefore, introduced resolutions into the Senate, declaring, that when a ship or vessel enters the port of a friendly Power, through stress of weather or unavoidable accident, she carries with her the laws of the State from whence she sailed, and the persons on board in all their relation, are controlled by the laws of such State. In another resolution he declared that the slaves on board the Enterprise, while lying in Port Hamilton, continued to be legal slaves. The movement was a bold one.

I was at the time a member of this body, and well recollect the astonishment expressed by members of the House at these propositions.

Mr. Webster was regarded as the ablest statesman of the free States. He was a Whig, and believed to have some aspirations for the Presidency. All eyes were turned to him; the hopes of the free States appeared to rest on him, more than on any other man. We felt that an easy victory and high honors awaited him in the contest about to come off.

These resolutions were presented on the 4th of March, 1840, and came up for consideration a few days subsequently, when Mr. Porter, of Michigan, a young member of that body, spoke against them. They were then formally referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, who reported them back with some verbal amendments, but substantially as introduced; and with due formality and solemnity they came up for final action on the 15th of April. Mr. Clay and Mr. Calhoun, and perhaps one or two other Senators from the slave States, spoke in favor of them, declaring their readiness to sustain the institution at any sacrifice; but no voice was raised for humanity, for justice, for the honor of our nation. Mr. Webster was silent, and the record shows that the vote in favor of the resolutions was unanimous. The names of Mr. Webster and other Northern Whig Senators do not appear on the roll of votes given on that occasion.

It is not for me to characterize that act. The pen of the historian yet remains paralyzed in regard to it. My own political pathway has been rugged; storms have raged around me, and many years have come and gone, but the emotions of my own mind on that occasion will not soon be forgotten. I saw, or thought I saw, as clearly as I now realize the effect and tendency of that act. It was intended to stop the wheels of progress, of civilization, and restore the heathenish doctrine, that "Africans have no rights which white men are bound to respect." The advocates of the slave trade then felt that the Senate was fully committed to the support of this "American piracy." It constituted the most important step then taken towards the position which the Executive and his supporters now occupy.

When Mr. Tyler became President, he called Mr. Webster to the Cabinet, and that distinguished statesman was soon constrained to wield his moral and political powers either for or against this slave trade.

On the 27th of October, 1841, the brig Creole sailed from Hampton Roads, with a cargo of one hundred and thirty-five slaves on board, bound for New Orleans. It will be borne in mind, that when out from shore at the distance of a marine league, the laws of Virginia ceased to hold jurisdiction over the ship or the persons on board, and they became subject to the exclusive jurisdiction and laws of the United States; and I need not say that these laws had made no provisions for holding men in slavery upon the high seas or in our territories outside the District of Columbia. The moment the ship passed from the jurisdiction of Virginia, these people, by force of law, became clothed with the attributes of freemen.

The slaves on board the Creole were conscious of this, from intuitive conviction. Their own immortal natures spurned the doctrine asserted in the Senate, and, under the guidance and promptings of that innate love of liberty which throbs in every human heart, they asserted the rights bestowed upon them by the Creator. One of the slave-dealers attempted forcibly to maintain the doctrine avowed in the Senate. Here, again, that God-given reason, which every man possesses, taught these people, reared in ignorance, in slaveholding stupidity, that the slave-dealer was a pirate, had incurred the just penalty attached to that crime, and they at once inflicted upon the miscreant the punishment due to his iniquity. I leave it for casuists to determine whether he was more guilty than those that encouraged him in his accursed vocation. These quondam slaves, now freemen, taking possession of the ship, extended mercy to the other slave-dealers on board, and directed their course to Nassau, in the island of New Providence, and went on shore, seeking their own happiness.

I well recollect the scene which occurred in the Senate when the news of this transaction reached this city. The members of that body were even more excited than they have been recently. They then threatened to send our ships of war, and sink those British islands; now they only talk of sinking the British navy. It might prove instructive to gentlemen of the present age to read the high-sounding threats and epiphetas used at that day.

Mr. Webster was now Secretary of State under a slaveholding President, associated with a slave-

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

American Piracy—Mr. Giddings.

HO. OF REPS.

holding Cabinet. He was therefore constrained to speak and act for the slave trade; or, if he refused such action, he would be constrained to resign his office. He preferred the former course, and the intellect of that great man, who had been the pride of the free States, was now exerted to carry out the doctrines for which a few months previously he had declined voting. It was a great victory for the slave power. Christianity then lost one of its ablest champions. Forgetful of that eternal justice which sits enthroned above all earthly power, he sent instructions to our Minister at London to demand of the British Government compensation for the loss which the slave-dealers had sustained. In these instructions he assumed the whole theory of Mr. Calhoun, and even characterized the persons who had most righteously gained their liberty as mulattoes and murderers! Pardon me if I speak frankly. My lips were then sealed, under the gag-rules of this body; I was not permitted to utter the emotions of my soul in regard to this slave trade. I consulted with my venerable friend, Mr. Adams. He felt the outrage as keenly as mortal could realize it. I proposed that he should present to the House resolutions declaring the law of nations and of the Constitution. I shall never forget his manner and appearance as he assured me that he was old; that the influence of Mr. Webster was great; that the contest would occupy years of severe labor; that he could not expect to live long enough to get the public attention turned to it.

I drew up a series of resolutions on the subject, stating what I believed to be the established law of nations, and the constitutional duty resting upon Congress to abstain from all support of this slave trade. They were prepared with much caution and study. They were submitted to Mr. Adams for his consideration. He approved them. I presented them to this House. They may be found at length on the Journal of this body for the 21st March, 1842. They denied, in the most emphatic language, the right of the Executive, or of Congress, or of this Government, to involve the people of the free States in a war to maintain a commerce in human flesh. To that doctrine I still adhere; I reiterate the sentiment; I tell the President and the Senate that a war in support of the slave trade, either African or American, will not be sanctioned by the people, nor by any civilized or Christian nation.

The scenes which followed the presentation of my resolutions called public attention to the subject. The press spoke out; the people reflected and discussed the subject, and for a time the Senate became silent in regard to it. The British Minister ceased for a time to be cajoled or misled to the support of this "American slave trade,"* and for a time I believed the downward tendency of our Government toward its present position was stayed. Great Britain pursued a steady and Christian course, using her best efforts to suppress this commerce. She induced France and Russia and Austria and Prussia to unite with her in granting to the armed vessels of each nation, while cruising within certain degrees of latitude, near the African coast, leave to search the suspected ships of the others, for the purpose of detecting those engaged in this piratical slave trade. Lord Aberdeen appropriately styled it "a holy alliance," but our Government refused to become a party to this arrangement, and thereby brought upon itself the well-founded suspicion of encouraging the slave trade. It was notorious among the nations of the earth that we were maintaining an American slave trade. Both were founded on a denial of the law of nature, the rights of humanity; both rested upon the same infidelity to God and to mankind. All men saw, and all men now feel, that it is most inconsistent for us to maintain and encourage this slave trade upon our own coast, and condemn as pirates those engaged in the same trade upon the African coast.

Our present Secretary of State was then Minister at Paris, and he, as a representative of our Government, wrote and spoke, and used his entire influence, against the quintuple treaty referred to; and as it became more generally known that we favored the African as well as the American slave trade, pirates frequenting the African coast adopted our flag; as it would protect them from search when near the African coast.

In July, 1842, Lord Ashburton arrived in this city, as Minister Plenipotentiary of the British Crown, specially appointed and authorized to treat with our Government on pending difficulties. Mr. Webster, Secretary of State, in his first official communication with his lordship, dated August 1, 1842, before alluding to any other matters, entered into a long and elaborate argument to induce his lordship to enter into some treaty regulations for securing those engaged in our American slave trade from sustaining loss when their ships happen to be wrecked on British islands, or driven by stress of weather into British ports. He mentioned the two cases of the Creole and Enterprise, to which I have referred, and urged the propriety of making provision for securing slave-dealers when thus unfortunate. The proposition, if adopted, would have been a repeal of the tenth article of the treaty of Ghent, by which both Governments had bound themselves to "use their best endeavors to entirely abolish the traffic in slaves." It would have reversed that covenant, and bound them to use their best endeavors to support the "traffic in slaves."

Thus, sir, our own records, the records of Great Britain, bear proof to the efforts of our nation, in favor of this traffic in slaves; in favor of providing, by treaty stipulation, for its permanent protection and encouragement. Would, sir, that this record were expunged from existence; that this disgrace of our nation could be blotted from the moral universe. But, thanks to Lord Ashburton, thanks to the British nation for their adherence to Christianity, and their resistance of this heathenish, this barbarous commerce in the bodies of women and children. Lord Ashburton refused to enter upon such a negotiation, and thereby saved our nation from the proposed disgrace, and bringing the power of truth and of Christianity to bear upon Mr. Webster, he obtained a further stipulation from our Government against this commerce, and covenant to carry out the objects avowed in the treaty of Ghent.

But no sooner had this solemn covenant been entered into, than all other and collateral influences of the Executive were exerted for the protection and encouragement of this African as well as American commerce.

All now present recollect the case of the Amistad, a Spanish slave ship. Her cargo had been imported from Africa in June, 1840, for the Cuban market. The Amistad took fifty-three of these people on board at Havana, with the intention of carrying them to Principe, on the south side of that island. Those ignorant Africans spurned the doctrines of our Senate, our Secretary of State, our Executive, and of those Spanish pirates; and, obeying the divinity which prompted each heart, they stood forth in the dignity with which God had clothed them. By the physical power with which they were endowed, they asserted their God-given prerogatives of liberty. The captain and cook endeavored to carry out the doctrines of our Senate; but the negroes, by the dim light of their own moral natures, pronounced the men who attempted to enforce such doctrines, pirates; and the captain and cook were tried, condemned, and executed, in less time than I have occupied in relating the incident. They then took possession of the ship, sent the crew on shore, and directing the two slave-dealers whom they retained to navigate the ship to Africa, were betrayed, the pirates directing the ship's course to our own shores.

As soon as they came within the jurisdiction of the United States, they were arrested by authority of our Government. Instead of being hospitably entertained, they were placed on trial, and the Spanish pirates set free. The Executive, with all these facts before him, sent a national ship of war to the coast of Connecticut, with orders to take these victims of the African slave trade on board at the earliest possible moment after the court should refuse to give them their liberty, and to transport them back to Cuba at the expense of our people, and deliver them over to the pirates who claimed them.

But thanks to our judiciary, it had not then become so corrupt as to declare that "Africans have no rights that white men are bound to respect." They ordered the Africans set free; and the Executive was defeated. But Mr. Polk, Mr. Pierce, and Mr. Buchanan have had the consummate effrontery repeatedly to advise Congress to compensate those Spanish pirates from the pockets of the laborers of our nation; and I will not disguise the fact, the Senate have almost as often attempted to carry out the Executive recommendation, by passing bills to pay these Spanish slave-dealers, and render the African slave trade honorable. But this body has, in every instance, defeated such attempts.

By the treaty of Washington of 1842, we covenanted to supply a naval force of eighty guns to be stationed along the African coast, with orders to use their efforts to arrest all pirates engaged in the slave trade. This treaty was published to the world, but the manner of executing it is not so well understood by our people. It is said, by men who possess intelligence on the subject, that we have never sent to that coast a ship or vessel worthy to be employed in that service. On this point we have no record evidence; but the prominent fact that our ships thus employed have entirely failed to accomplish the object contemplated, is known and read of all men. It is said they have captured some three or four slave ships, while the British ships of equal force have captured as many scores. We know the zeal and ability and ambition of our officers and seamen; and if the Executive had given them ships adapted to the service, and expressed to them his desire to see this slave trade abolished, they would never have fallen behind the British in this duty. No stronger evidence of bad faith in pretending to carry out this treaty could have been placed on record.

At that period of our history the Executive began a system of efforts to relieve African slave-dealers from the odium of piracy, which our enactments and those of other nations had placed upon them.

In 1841, our Minister at London remonstrated with Lord Palmerston against the practice of armed ships engaged in suppressing the slave trade visiting vessels sailing under the flag of the United States, to ascertain their nationality. I repeat, that in all past time this practice had been followed by the armed ships of all civilized nations, when cruising for pirates. As shown at the opening of my remarks, it was conceded by all nations, it was practiced by all nations. It was then, is now, and ever will be, the law of nations. Our Minister attempted to confound this right, however, with the right of search.

By this use of terms he was enabled to prolong the discussion. Senate document No. 377, First Session Twenty-Ninth Congress, gives incontestable proof of the ability of our Minister to misunderstand the clearest definition of rights and terms. Mr. Stevenson declared the visitation of a cruiser to a ship, for the purpose of learning whether it was a pirate at war with all mankind, or an American vessel entitled to protection under the United States flag, was nothing less than the right of search, so odious to the American people. To this, the Earl of Aberdeen replied, in somewhat emphatic language:

"The undersigned again renounces, as he has already done, in the most explicit terms, any right on the part of the British Government to search American vessels in time of peace. The sole purpose of the British cruisers is to ascertain whether the vessels they meet are really American or not. The right asserted has in truth no resemblance to the right of search, either in principle or in practice. It is simply a right to satisfy the party, who has a legitimate interest in knowing the truth, that the vessel is actually what her colors announce. This right we concede as freely as we exercise." "It is possible that this right may be wantonly and vexatiously used; and if, in spite of the utmost caution, any American vessel should suffer loss and injury, it would be followed by prompt and ample reparation."

Yet our Federal Executive, through our Minister at London, has continued to protest against the interruption of vessels sailing under the American flag, to ascertain whether they be pirates or not; and the influence, the moral power, of the

* For fourteen years the claims of our Government in behalf of the slave dealers on board the Enterprise and Creole were resisted by the British Ministry. But Mr. Pierce, while President, induced them to submit the question of indemnity to an umpire, who is said once to have been a citizen of Boston. He adopted the doctrine of the Senate and of Mr. Webster, and in 1854 decreed full indemnity to these men, so richly deserving the gallows.

Administration, has been exerted for the protection of the very traffic which we profess to hold in utter abhorrence.

Slave ships are, and for many years have been, built in our own ports, under the very eye of the Administration. Indeed, it is said, and I believe with perfect truth, that more ships, now employed in the African slave trade, were built in the United States than in all other portions of the world. We know that in every sea-port there are many officers of Government who would be vigilant and ambitious to learn the character of every vessel built in such port, if conscious that the President desired such information; and the fact that he permits slave ships to be built, and furnished, and sent out, is conclusive evidence that he is in favor of the practice.

Again: the Democratic press of the South—those friendly to the Administration—proclaim the restoration of the African slave trade a favorite political measure. Southern Senators have urged the withdrawal of our naval force from the African coast, in order that we should not appear to hold the African slave trade in abhorrence; and Democratic members of both Houses of Congress urge its restoration.

Within the past year, we were informed by the southern press that slaves direct from Africa were landed upon our southern coast. Southern conventions for years have publicly discussed the propriety of restoring this slave trade. They propose to carry our Government back to the position occupied a century since by the British King—to restore the barbarous practices of a darker age; and their only hesitation in making this doctrine a test of Democracy appears to arise from the fact that it would be unpopular in the free States.

Our present controversy arises from a disposition on the part of our Government to respect the slave trade—to render it honorable, instead of treating it as piracy, and those engaged in it as pirates; and strange to say, the entire Senate appears converted to his doctrine. As a nation, as a Government, we have declared its character, and proclaimed an exterminating war upon all who are engaged in it. We have declared them enemies to mankind, outlaws worthy of death. They are so regarded and treated by other nations. To carry on this war, we are bound to contribute all reasonable aid and assistance. Every citizen of this Union is bound to aid in this war for the rights of our common nature. And I declare it the duty of every captain, every officer and sailor, who holds our flag sacred, to aid in preserving it from the dishonor to which the present Administration is seeking to prostitute it. It is their duty, when suspected of piracy, to cheerfully relieve themselves of such suspicion by making their true character understood; and I assert that it is the right of every British, French, Russian, Austrian, or Prussian cruiser, or the cruiser of any other nation, while seeking to destroy these outlaws, to demand of any American ship, or the ship of any other nation, her true character, whether she be a pirate, or entitled to protection under the flag she bears; while our own cruisers hold the same indisputable right to learn the character of any, and of all, suspected ships sailing under the flag of any other nation. If our Administration be determined to modify this law of nature and of nations, this principle of justice, of evident propriety, they will find insurmountable difficulties. I trust, I hope, the British Ministry will not recede from its position. They are acting for humanity. The feelings and sympathies of the Christian world are with them in their efforts to eradicate this piracy from the earth. Truth and justice are with them. That higher law of eternal righteousness which sways the destinies of nations and of the world is with them. I would not place our Government in opposition to these attributes of the Creator. I would bring it into harmony with those principles of justice, those laws which govern the moral world.

I know the vastness of our cause. We are constrained to meet the machinations of the slave power at every step of our progress. Let us meet them boldly, candidly, truthfully. Let us consecrate ourselves to this holy work of separating and purifying our Government and people from this piracy, this moral contagion which now poisons all the veins and arteries of this mighty nation, and must, if not soon stayed in its progress, produce political and moral death to the body corporate.

THE EXPENDITURES AND REVENUES OF THE NATION.

SPEECH OF HON. H. M. PHILLIPS, OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 12, 1858.

The House being in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. PHILLIPS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: Much has been said against the party of which I am a member that, in my judgment, ought not to go unanswered: error, not corrected, is often accepted as truth; and, at this late period, I avail myself of the indulgence granted me of thus addressing the Committee for the purpose of repelling from the Democratic party some of the charges that several Republican members have sought to fasten upon it. The proclaimed principles of the two branches of the Opposition prevent their uniting on any real platform; reform (artificial and pretended reform only) is therefore attempted to be declared as the doctrine in the broad and unmeaning principles of which their differences may be concealed.

Mr. Chairman, the key-note of opposition to the Democratic party has been loudly sounded by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN:] his purpose could not be misunderstood; his speech was carefully and elaborately prepared; it was doubtless intended as a campaign speech, and as proclaiming the doctrines of the Opposition, nominally to the Democratic Administration, but really to the Democratic party. Believing, as I do, that the harmony of the Union, its prosperity, and its permanency, depend upon the Democratic party, and that without the one there cannot be the other, I deem it a fitting subject on which to address this Committee of the Whole that has under its consideration the Union generally.

The adoption of the Federal Constitution was followed by the administration of George Washington for eight years. The unanimity with which he was called to the executive chair, the confidence felt in his patriotism and sagacity, prevented the formation of parties, which, however, soon ensued in the successorship of John Adams. Then, for the first time, was the germ of the Democratic party; but it was reserved for Thomas Jefferson to give it shape and name, and to put upon a permanent basis that Democratic party of the nation which still lives. The perils that environed it at its formation, in the infamous attempt to elevate Aaron Burr to the presidency, but served to strengthen it at its birth, and it then came into action, and began its mission with the strength of a full grown and not an infant party. It was the Democracy of that day that called forth and obtained the extension of territory in the purchase of the Louisiana Territory, as it was reserved for the Democracy of the next Administration to admit into the Union one of the States formed out of it—Louisiana. These acts were violently opposed by the opponents of the Democracy; the same epithets were used, were lavishly applied; the same denunciations were heaped; the same menaces made; but the Democratic party pursued the even tenor of its way; felt itself right; was reckless of temporary consequences; and strengthened the Union by these glorious accessions.

A more severe trial awaited it in the days of James Madison. It had made war upon the greatest Power in the world—Great Britain; it had sent forth its hundreds to fight the myriads of England; its straggling ships to contend with mighty navies, a work of danger and of doubt; but national honor had been invaded, and the Democratic party recognized the patriotic doctrine of "death before dishonor," and pushed forward the contest. Then, as now, its enemies stopped to calculate the cost, to proclaim the danger, and to denounce those who had done these things; and for a time gloom did pervade the nation; but the glorious successes of our arms, the brilliant victories of our soldiers and our sailors, and a treaty which, for the first time, recognized the United States as an equal in the rank of nations with its haughty foe, established the correctness of the course pursued by the Democratic party. I have not the time, within the hour to which the rules limit me, to dilate upon these things, nor even to notice many of them; but, coming down to more recent times, the recollection is fresh of the opposition to the election of Andrew Jackson, to the removal of the deposits from the United States Bank, to the downfall of that institution, to the establishment of an independent Treasury, to the war with Mexico, and to the revenue reforms, all under Democratic Administrations. Each of these measures it was solemnly and seriously declared would ruin the country; yet who dares now to assert the impropriety of any one of them?

The men who now oppose the Democratic party were in opposition then, and the people frightened by the terrific exaggerations and persuaded by the specious promises more than once yielded—deserted the Democratic standard, suffered the party to be defeated, yet on every occasion its downfall was but momentary, the flash of opposition serving to show sufficiently plainly the perils of its power and the people never failed at the earliest moment to preserve the country from its impending danger, and to rescue the Democratic party by most signal victory. There have been Opposition Administrations, but as the policy of the country has been Democratic, and must continue to be Democratic, these interjected Oppositions have but served to retard the progress and growth which follow the Democratic rule. Will any one deny that the increase of the nation from thirteen weak and puny colonies, to thirty-two strong and giant States is the work of the Democratic party? or that the present elevated position of the country throughout the world has the same origin? If any one be so disposed, let him, at least, in denying this, ascribe it to some other source which he shall name and describe. The mission of the Democratic party, Mr. Chairman, has been to make this country and to preserve it. The history of its three fourths of a century of existence is significant of the means of perpetuating the Union, and by its example spread throughout a continent, at least, its free institutions. I appeal, then, to my Democratic friends to allow no present discontent or disaffection to induce them to desert the Democratic standard or rally round any other; and if they find subject of complaint, let them

"rather bear the ills they have Than fly to others that they know not of."

It is said of Henry Clay, that, in a canvass for reelection to Congress, he encountered an old huntsman, with whom he had been brought up, who told him that he could not again vote for him, because he had advocated a measure to which the hunter was opposed. Mr. Clay reasoned with him, in that good-humored and winning way which so characterized him, but in vain; in vain he recapitulated the many things which he had done that were acceptable. The hunter recognized all these, but was inexorable. Mr. Clay passed from the subject, and, walking on some time, he began talking about his companion's family; then he inquired about his hunting; asking him if he was as good a shot as ever, and what rifle he had. The huntsman told him he still had old Joe, which he had so long used. "But," said Mr. Clay, "does it never miss fire?" "Yes, of course it does, sometimes," was the reply. "Then," said Mr. Clay, "if it ever missed fire you threw it away did you not—eh? or what did you do?" at the same time looking him fixedly in the eye. The old man understood the point of the inquiry, burst into tears, and seized Mr. Clay's hands, exclaiming, "Why, I picked the flint and tried it again; and, by Harry, I'll try you again!" Now, if there are any who think that the Democratic gun has missed fire, let them pick its flint and try it again. They can do no better with a change. They will have plenty of cause of complaint with new allies, and will have self-reproaches hereafter, as many of them probably have serious doubts and misgivings now.

But, Mr. Chairman, I accept the challenge of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and I will endeavor to show that his objections are not well founded. He appears as a prosecutor; he arraigns the Democratic party; he undertakes to put it upon trial; he presents such evidence as he pleases; and withal, he must fail to convince any reflecting man of the justice of his accusations. Were his charges true, they ought not to suffice, because he has artfully concealed the alternative which Democratic defeat would bring, and the remedy which might be found to be worse than the disease. "Kill or cure" is a dangerous prescription; and our country is not in so critical a condition as to require this desperate remedy, even if prescribed by so skillful a practitioner. While I might concede the correctness of all that he said, I would dissent from his deductions, and I would even then declare that these known errors or evils were far more tolerable than the unknown upon which we might rush, and which we would probably experience from this indescribable reform party which the gentleman seems fondly to hope shall supersede the party now in power. I will take the bull by the horns, Mr. Chairman, and I will deal boldly with the doctrines advanced, while I must do so under protest, because the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] has shown—incontestably proved—that the estimates and figures of the gentleman from Ohio are entirely mistaken; prominent error throughout has been shown to exist.

The charge made by the gentleman from Ohio is, in a word, extravagance; and the watchwords that he recommends to the Opposition party for the next campaign are, retrenchment and reform. The charge is not new, while retrenchment and reform have been often promised by the same party that seeks to use them now.

I deny the charge in toto: I assert that the Administrations of the country have been conducted with a spirit of proper economy, having regard to the condition of the nation. If I am asked whether less money might not have been expended, I will answer affirmatively; if the means of Government were not adequate to its expenditures, of course the necessary expenses could have been lessened; but with the bountiful revenue of the country, less could not have been used without a display of niggardiness and parsimony, unworthy the name of economy and unbecoming the great and glorious nation, of which we are all so proud. Does the gentleman not know that the country's expenditures must keep pace with the country's growth? Will he advocate before his constituents that nothing is due to its station and position? Will he put his country upon pauper or prison allowance? It will not do to answer that the money comes from the people; for it must be borne in mind, in connection therewith, that it goes back to, and is expended among, the people, and the people are willing to sanction any expenditure which contributes to the welfare, honor, character, interest, or permanency of the Union. The best way of establishing wrong is, by contrast in showing the right, and if the gentleman had shown the extravagant items and his mode of reform in something like detail, the wrong might have been better discovered; if there has been error, it is his duty to correct it, and if he does not attempt it, he does less than his constituents have a right to demand.

The Utah war is a prominent subject for complaint; and sorry was I to hear an American legislator, on the floor of the House of Representatives, in finding fault with the Executive, say:

"Instead of sending peace commissioners to reason with a rebellious people, and negotiate terms of peace, he posted this army in the mountains, and compelled them to be supported there with flour at fifty dollars a barrel, and other provisions at an equally enormous rate."

No greater encouragement could be given to the treasonable purposes of Brigham Young and his followers than was found in that sentence. Will an American constituency indorse the doctrine that the American Government must submit to treason and rebellion? must send peace commissioners to treat with a rebellious people? must sue and beg that parrietal hands may be stayed? coax and persuade into obedience and submission to laws? When the United States must do such things as these, then let her forego her claim to be considered in the front rank of nations! Then, too, any expenditures will be too much; and herein the gentleman is most consistent. But such a course will not be tolerated; where there exists rebellion, mutiny, or treason; where the law is trampled under foot; where a power is set up as sovereign in opposition to, and in defiance of the authority, of the United States, every American, having a spark of patriotic feeling, will insist on maintaining the dignity of his country and the majesty of her laws; upon crushing out the rebellion; upon putting down the treason, and bringing to condign punishment the traitors, without regard to the sacrifice, inconvenience, or cost. Yet the gentleman thinks otherwise; perhaps he would send peace commissioners to Great Britain to solicit that she will direct her officers not to continue their visits and searches of our ships. Certainly, consistency will require him to advocate this doctrine; for the crime of treason at home is greater, far greater, than hostility or aggression abroad. That there was rebellion in Utah, one of our organized Territories; that the former Governor had refused to surrender to the authority of his successor; that the laws of the United States had been disregarded, and that there was armed resistance to Federal troops; in short, that war was waged by this rebellious Territory, is not doubted nor denied by the gentleman; but he prefers to procure peace cheaply, as he thinks, but dearly-bought as it would be, with national dishonor.

The expenditures for the Army constitute the greatest increase; and, with the nation at war, with the spread of territory, with the exposed frontier, and with hostile Indians yet among our people, let any one point out what item of expense could have been spared or diminished. As the settlements of our country progress there must be increased protection; and with so small an Army—for there seems to be a jealousy of a large standing Army—the expenses of transportation of men and supplies from place to place as wanted are necessarily large. Our extended frontier and coasts require augmented defenses; and these things, especially in distant regions, are prolific of expense. What, too, is our Navy compared with that of any of the other large Powers of the world? Yet this, too, is a cause of largely-increased expenditure; and certainly no one would object that it shall be placed in a condition which will insure protection to our commerce, and enable it to be ready for service at any time that war may arise. It must be such as shall be respected in peace and feared in war; it must be effective, and, growing with the growth of the country, it must be in like manner strengthened. The Army and Navy of the United States are themes on which much might be said; the glory and honor of the country are in their protection; and where is the legislator so miserly as to refuse supplies for these Departments, because, forsooth, the nation is in a state of profound peace?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOVEJOY] some days since inveighed against the appropriations for the Army service, and said "men in time of peace did not go about armed to the teeth, and that there was as little occasion for nations to do so." The gentleman's allusion was strikingly unfortunate; for while no individual need arm himself here for either protection or defense, it is simply because the law furnishes arms, armed men, police, for those purposes at home, and our seamen and soldiers for a like object abroad. It is because of the public protection and defense that individuals need not "go armed to the teeth," as the gentleman from Illinois expresses it. Our Army, our Navy, and our fortifications afford to every one the exemption which, without these public auxiliaries, no one could claim. Yet these things have produced the greatest increase of public expenditure, and therefore it is against them that the odium is to be directed. The spirit of economy which would cut down the Army and Navy, the fortifications and defenses of the country, is one of which the new party may, when they have the power, claim the paternity; the Democratic party repudiates it, and does not fear the responsibility connected with these things. So, too, with the augmented expenses of our diplomatic intercourse, of our Indian departments, and of our civil list for Territories, judiciary, &c.

No allowance is made for the increase of the country or of its population or of its wants; nor is there any recollection of the fact that every dollar expended goes into the pockets of the people. Away, then, with this deceptive cry of extravagance. Practice before you preach, or your sincerity will be doubted. Show that you, or any of your allies, have suggested or attempted to effect a single reform in any one of the things which you hold up to public odium; and if there is a temporary deficiency arising from miscalculation or from untoward events, such as could not be foreseen, instead of reviling those who are not to blame for it, aid to repair it by replenishing the Treasury, so that, at all hazards, the public faith shall be kept and the public creditors shall be paid. A loan is not a matter of choice—it is of inevitable necessity; and while the gentleman from Ohio admits the deficiency and the necessity for supply, he declares he will not vote for a loan, and he will not even suggest any other mode of enabling the obligations of Government to be met.

It must not be forgotten that many of the debts now to be paid were incurred by the authority of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, in which the Democratic party was in a sorrowful minority; but it matters not by whom or how they were authorized, honor and honesty demand their payment, and hence the necessity for the use of the public credit to such as are willing, in preference to subjecting the unwilling, to grant a coerced credit which they can but poorly afford.

The gentleman from Ohio, speaking of the miscellaneous list, says:

"In this vast mausoleum are buried your secret contracts, your jobs, your custom-houses, your marine hospitals, your post office deficiency and post offices, your coast survey, your court-houses."

Are not all these things necessary and useful in our country? The sneering manner in which he speaks of "your custom-houses, your marine hospitals, your post office deficiency and post offices, your coast survey, your court-houses," will not depreciate them in public opinion. Custom-houses, post offices, and court-houses are necessary; marine hospitals and coast surveys are useful and benevolent; yet, in the fury of his party wrath, they come in for indiscriminate denunciation: the post office deficiency is a tax that should be cheerfully paid, because it is the necessary result of cheap postage, of the benefits of which the people of the free States have a full and plentiful share. What shall be the country when the demands for these reforms are satisfied? with no Army, no Navy, no custom-houses, no marine hospitals, no coast survey, no cheap postage, no post offices, and no court-houses, or only such as stunted expenditures will maintain, the honor and glory of the country will be at a discount.

My friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] who sits close by me, said that there are some persons who seem to think that patriotism consists in spending money. I know none such, and have heard nothing said here which justifies that assumption. But I can truly retort on him that there are some persons who seem to think that patriotism consists in saving money. One of his colleagues has avowed nearly as much, and, in a violent opposition to proposed expenditures, he actually referred to the Democratic platform and Virginia resolutions of 1798 as not justifying the measure. This gentleman, I believe, has voted against nearly all the appropriations proposed or made, though when an appropriation was proposed for the navy-yard in Virginia, both of these economical gentlemen, together with all the other rigid economists from that State, walked between the tellers in favor of it. The application by the facetious gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. DAVIDSON,] of Esop's fable, "The Bull and the Ox," to one of these gentlemen, [Mr. CLEMENS,] was strikingly appropriate. There are other gentlemen from the South who have preached up the sternest and strongest economy. One gentleman was terrified at the expense attending the National Observatory; another treated the gradual increase of expense in a manner most awfully prophetic, reminding me of the easy descent mentioned by Virgil, the escape from which is so dreadful and difficult. The anxiety of our southern friends is less about the credit side of the account than it is about the debit side. They advocate stinted expenditures because they do not like the probable mode of increase of the revenue; but the same sincerity does not mark the course of the Opposition, who have advanced the charge of extravagance, and have adopted a theory of reform merely for political and partisan purposes. I earnestly hope that the people will not be deceived nor misled by this halcyon cry of reform! They have been deceived more than once by it. They yielded to it in 1840, and the promised reforms were an attempt to fasten upon them another bank of the United States, and the passage of a bankrupt law which privileged reckless speculators from paying their debts—a law so odious that in two years it was repealed, yet not before hundreds of millions of dollars of indebtedness had been cleared out by it. They yielded to it in 1848, yet no reform can be shown, for none was made or attempted; and the history of our country shows that no reform has ever been made except by the Democratic party. Hence, too, its troubles! Its members are not always prepared for the changes which progress requires; and some with the best intentions, yet timid, are not at all times ready to march with its advancing column.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Expenditures and Revenues of the Nation—Mr. Phillips.

HO. OF REPS.

It is a fact, a melancholy truth, that the Treasury is exhausted; and this, too, at a time when a surplus was predicted and expected. During the last session of Congress this surplus was the source of constant trouble and anxiety. Scheme after scheme was devised to deplete the Treasury and prevent this accumulation. The public were alarmingly told that the collection of more revenue than was necessary would accumulate so large a portion of the circulating coin that business and trade would be interrupted and embarrassed. No one seemed to anticipate that the sunshine might be followed by storm-clouds, or that the present prosperity would ever be diminished. A plan was hit upon for the purpose of diminishing the revenues, and certainly it was most successful in accomplishing the object for which it was designed. Mr. Robert J. Walker, the able and distinguished Secretary of the Treasury under President Polk, had arranged the details of the tariff of 1846, which, while it reduced the duties, largely increased the revenue. It was adjusted with discriminations in favor of such articles as were produced here; and, until 1857, it was found to be so well adjusted and proportioned that no interference had been attempted with its details. It had supplied, nay, it had filled to overflowing, the national Treasury; but in March, 1857, a headlong and heedless change was made; a further and ill-digested reduction of duties was effected, intended to diminish the revenue from six to ten million dollars; and this, too, when the national debt was still in existence. To this cause may be partly ascribed the deficiency which has arisen; while the financial revulsion which pervaded the whole moneyed world was a valuable auxiliary in making and keeping the Treasury empty. The great revenue of the country must be derived from duties on imports, and these must be so arranged as to produce the revenue required. I shall make no deceptive promises, no professions, on this subject, but will show that there is no other source from which the Treasury can be supplied. If I succeed in this, our duty is plain, and it must be performed at every sacrifice.

The public lands have yielded large amounts, but it can hardly be contended that they ought to be relied upon for revenue. They are held by the Government for higher and better purposes than mere speculation; and while it may be politic to dispose of them by sale, the present stagnation of business of every kind forbids the idea that they can be made the available means of supply at this time. The very decided vote in this House yesterday against the increase of the postage rates—121 against it to 37 in its favor—shows that the post offices of the Government are considered as institutions maintained for a nobler object than money. The postal facilities accommodate all the people, and a reduction of facility in this Department would be a gross violation of the popular will. We have the power to levy a direct tax—the Constitution gives that power—but it is not wise to exercise it while other and easier means are at hand. A direct tax will be paid by the people whenever the necessities of Government require it to be levied; but, however equal in name, it is unequal in operation, and it would be most odious. We are already payers of direct taxes. We pay them for the support of our city and our State governments; and to add a national tax is to increase to every man the burdens which already are onerous. There can be no parallel between this country and any other in this particular. The people of other places have but one Government to recognize, and to which the tributary taxes must be paid; but it is not so with us. We have State as well as national governments. We owe separate allegiance, we perform separate duties as citizens, and we already pay enough of direct taxes.

If, then, Mr. Chairman, I am right in assuming that it is neither wise nor just to look to direct taxation, post office receipts, or sales of public lands, for obtaining the national revenue, or even for material contribution to that object, there seems to be but one source from which the supply can be maintained, and that is from duties on imports. Whatever amount is required for the support of Government must be obtained; and the Constitution, in authorizing Congress, virtually directs it "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;" and I am ready and willing to act in accordance with this direction. A repeal of the act of March, 1857, a substitution of a proper and honest mode of valuation of the goods upon which duties are paid, and an attentive body of public officers, in my opinion, will effect much, if not all the improvements required. Our laws should be sufficient to require that the true and accurate value of the imported article should be ascertained, and the duty should be levied upon that value; the honest importer would not then, as he is now, be injured and undersold by the conduct of the less scrupulous.

These are views that I have long entertained. At the time of the passage of the act of 1857, I expressed my disapproval; and I then foretold what has since happened; for, in my opinion, the deficiency would have existed without the financial revulsion, which has helped to conceal the real cause.

I do not choose, Mr. Chairman, to be misunderstood. I am not in favor of extravagance, nor useless lavish expenditures; I well know that extravagance gives rise to corruption, and that corruption is the sure forerunner of decay. Neither do I favor an increased or unnecessary number of office-holders; they should be considered necessary evils; there should be no sinecures, no one should reap who does not sow, and I would limit their number to the absolute wants of Government. I profess to be a practical and not a theoretical economist. I am in favor of an economical but not a cheap government: cheap articles are not always the best, nor do they last the longest; things in this country are worth full pay. The liberty and protection of the citizen, the honor and glory of the nation, are fully worth all they cost, and any other system would be pernicious and short-lived. Perhaps the administration of Government could be cheapened, if given out to the lowest bidder; but the people would pay very dearly for such economy. My purpose, Mr. Chairman, was to vindicate the Democratic party from the charge of extravagance, so boldly made against it. I have deferred until now, within a few hours of the sessions' close, in the hope that some more able and experienced member would undertake the task, and I attempt it somewhat reluctantly, and at the instance of what I consider to be an imperative duty.

I have not attempted to examine or to correct the figures and calculations of the gentleman from Ohio. His speech was characterized by industry, talent, and elaboration; but it was founded on mistake in facts, as the gentleman from Virginia has shown, and in argument as, I trust, I have been somewhat instrumental in exposing.

That there may have been instances of extravagance or imposition cannot be doubted; that such are incident to a vast Government like ours is undeniable; and that no laws will prevent them effectually seems but too probable; but the annual expenditures of this Government, large as they seem to be, have never equaled a half year's interest on the national debt of Great Britain, (even at its diminished rate of interest;) a country, too, diminutive in territory and extent when compared with the measureless domain of the United States.

Whatever our country properly requires it can afford, and whatever it can afford it must have; its public edifices and its institutions, its Navy and its Army, are but monuments of its greatness and power; and while in the hands of those who have so long and so well governed it, "onward" shall be its progress.

LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES.

PUBLIC ACTS OF THE THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS

OF THE

UNITED STATES,

Passed at the First Session, which was begun and holden at the City of Washington, in the District of Columbia, on Monday, the 7th day of December, 1857, and ended Monday, the 14th day of June, 1858.

JAMES BUCHANAN, President. JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, Vice President, and President of the Senate. BENJAMIN FITZPATRICK was appointed President of the Senate, pro tempore, March 29, 1858. JAMES L. ORR, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

CHAPTER I.—An Act to authorize the issue of Treasury notes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause Treasury notes for such sum or sums as the exigencies of the public service may require, but not to exceed, at any time, the amount of twenty millions of dollars, and of denominations not less than one hundred dollars for any such note, to be prepared, signed, and issued in the manner hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That such Treasury notes shall be paid and redeemed by the United States, at the Treasury thereof, after the expiration of one year from the dates of said notes, from which dates, until they shall be respectively paid and redeemed, they shall bear such rate of interest as shall be expressed in said notes, which rate of interest, upon the first issue, which shall not exceed six millions of dollars of such notes, shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approbation of the President, but shall in no case exceed the rate of six per centum per annum. The residue shall be issued, in whole or in part, after public advertisement of not less than thirty days, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, by exchanging them at their par value for specie to the bidder or bidders who shall agree to make such exchange at the lowest rate of interest, not exceeding six per centum, upon the said notes: Provided, That, after the maturity of any of said notes, interest thereon shall cease at the expiration of sixty days' notice of readiness to pay and redeem the same, which may at any time or times be given by the Secretary of the Treasury in one or more newspapers published at the seat of Government. The payment or redemption of said notes herein provided shall be made to the lawful holders thereof, respectively, upon presentment at the Treasury, and shall include the principal of each note and the interest which shall be due thereon. And for such payment and redemption, at the time or times herein specified, the faith of the United States is hereby solemnly pledged.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That such Treasury notes shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be signed in behalf of the United States by the Treasurer thereof, and countersigned by the Register of the Treasury. Each of these officers shall keep, in a book or books provided for that purpose, separate, full, and accurate accounts, showing the number, date, amount, and rate of interest of each Treasury note signed and countersigned by them, respectively; and also similar accounts, showing all such notes as may be paid, redeemed, and canceled, as the same may be returned, all which accounts shall be carefully preserved in the Treasury Department. And the Treasurer shall account quarterly for all such Treasury notes as shall have been countersigned by the Register and delivered to the Treasurer for issue.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approbation of the President, to cause such portion of said Treasury notes as may be deemed expedient to be issued by the Treasurer in payment of warrants in favor of public creditors or other persons lawfully entitled to such payment, who may choose to receive such notes in payment at par. And the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized, with the approbation of the President, to borrow, from time to time, such sums of money upon the credit of such notes as the President may deem expedient: Provided, That no Treasury notes shall be pledged, hypothecated, sold, or disposed of, in any way, for any purpose whatever, either directly or indirectly, for any sum less than the amount of such notes, including the principal and interest thereof.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That said Treasury notes shall be transferable, by assignment indorsed thereon, by the person to whose order the same shall be made payable, accompanied together with the delivery of the notes so assigned.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That said Treasury notes shall be received by the proper officers in payment of all duties and taxes laid by the authority of the United States, of all public lands sold by said authority, and of all debts to the United States of any character whatever, which may be due and payable at the time when said Treasury notes may be offered in payment thereof; and upon every such payment credit shall be given for the amount of principal and interest due on the note or notes received in payment on the day when the same shall have been received by such officer.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That every collector of the customs, receiver of public moneys, or other officer or agent of the United States, who shall receive any Treasury note or notes in payment on account of the United States, shall take from the holder of such note or notes a receipt, upon the back of each, stating distinctly the date of such payment and the amount allowed upon such note; and every such officer or agent shall keep regular and specific entries of all Treasury notes received in payment, showing the person from whom received, the number, date, and amount of principal and interest allowed on each and every Treasury note received in payment; which entries shall be delivered to the Treasury, with the Treasury note or notes mentioned therein, and, if found correct, such officer or agent shall receive credit for the amount, as provided in the last section of this act.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to make and issue, from time to time, such instructions, rules, and regulations to the several collectors, receivers, depositaries, and all others who may be required to receive such Treasury notes in behalf of, and as agents in any capacity for, the United States, as to the custody, disposal, canceling, and return of any such notes as may be paid to and received by them, respectively, and as to the accounts and returns to be made to the Treasury Department of such receipts as he shall deem best calculated to promote the public convenience and security, and to protect the United States as well as individuals from fraud and loss.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be paid the principal and interest of such Treasury notes as may be issued under this act at the time and times when, according to its provisions, the same should be paid. And the said Secretary is further authorized to purchase said notes at par for the amount of principal and interest due at the time of the purchase on such notes. And so much of any unappropriated money in the Treasury as may be necessary for the purpose is hereby appropriated to the payment of the principal and interest of said notes.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That, in place of such Treasury notes as may have been paid and redeemed, other Treasury notes to the same amount may be issued: Provided, That the aggregate sum outstanding, under the authority of this act, shall at no time exceed twenty millions of dollars: And provided further, That the power to issue and reissue Treasury notes, conferred on the President of the United States by this act, shall cease and determine on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That to defray the expenses of engraving, printing, preparing, and issuing the Treasury notes herein authorized, the sum of twenty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any unappropriated money in the Treasury: Provided, That no compensation shall be made to any officer whose salary is fixed by law, for preparing, signing, or issuing Treasury notes.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting, any note in imitation of or purporting to be a Treasury note, issued as aforesaid, or shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any false, forged, or counterfeited note, purporting to be a Treasury note as aforesaid, knowing the same to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be falsely altered, or willingly aid or assist in falsely altering any Treasury note issued as aforesaid, or shall pass, utter, or publish, or attempt to pass, utter, or publish as true, any falsely altered Treasury note, issued as aforesaid, knowing the same to be falsely altered, every such person shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of felony; and being thereof convicted by due course of law, shall be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for a period not less than three years nor more than ten years, and to be fined in a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall make or engrave, or cause or procure to be made or engraved, or shall have in his custody and possession any metallic plate engraved after the similitude of any plate from which any notes issued as aforesaid shall have been printed, with intent to use such plate, or cause or suffer the same to be used in forging or counterfeiting any of the notes issued as aforesaid, or shall have in his custody or possession any blank note or notes engraved and printed after the similitude of any notes issued as aforesaid, with intent to use such blanks, or cause or suffer the same to be used in forging or counterfeiting any of the notes issued as aforesaid, or shall have in his custody or possession any paper adapted to the making of such notes, and similar to the paper upon which any such notes shall have been issued, with intent to use such paper, or cause or suffer the same to be used, in forging or counterfeiting any of the notes issued as aforesaid, every such person, being thereof convicted by due course of law, shall be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for a term not less than three nor more than ten years, and fined in a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause a statement to be published monthly of the amount of Treasury notes issued, and paid and redeemed, under the provisions of this act, showing the balance outstanding each month.

APPROVED, December 23, 1837.

CHAP. III.—An Act to detach Selma, in the State of Alabama, from the Collection District of New Orleans, and make it a Port of Delivery within the Collection District of Mobile.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Selma, in the State of Alabama, which was constituted a port of delivery within the collection district of New Orleans by the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, chapter one hundred and two, be detached from that district, and be made a port of delivery within the collection district of Mobile.

APPROVED, January 27, 1858.

CHAP. IV.—An Act to supply an omission in the enrollment of a certain act therein named.

Whereas, the following clause of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the thirtieth

June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight," approved March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, to wit: "For the manufacture of arms at the national armories, three hundred and sixty thousand dollars," was omitted in the enrollment of the said act: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of three hundred and sixty thousand dollars, for the manufacture of arms at the national armories, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, February 4, 1858.

CHAP. V.—An Act to alter the time of holding the Courts of the United States for the State of South Carolina.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passing of this act, the terms of the district court of the United States for South Carolina, at its sitting in Charleston, shall be held on the first Monday in January, May, July, and October, in each and every year, instead of at the times heretofore appointed.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this act, the term of the circuit court of the United States for South Carolina, at its sitting in Charleston, shall be held on the first Monday in April, in each and every year, instead of at the time heretofore appointed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all writs, recognizances, and process of all kinds, already issued, taken or made returnable to the time hitherto appointed for the terms of the said courts, shall be considered and taken as made for the time herein provided for the said courts.

APPROVED, February 10, 1858.

CHAP. VI.—An Act making Appropriations for the payment of Invalid and other Pensions of the United States, for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For invalid pensions, under various acts, three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

For pensions under acts of the eighteenth March, eighteen hundred and eighteen, fifteenth May, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, and seventh June, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, eighteen thousand dollars.

For pensions to widows of those who served in the revolutionary war, under the third section of the act of fourth July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, the acts of seventh July, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, third March, eighteen hundred and forty-three, seventeenth June, eighteen hundred and forty-four, second February, and twenty-ninth July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and second section act of third February, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For pensions to widows and orphans, under act of twenty-first of July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, first section act of third February, eighteen hundred and fifty three, and under special acts, eighty-six thousand dollars.

For privateer invalids, five hundred dollars.

For Navy pensions to widows and orphans, under act of eleventh August, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, ninety thousand dollars.

APPROVED, February 10, 1858.

CHAP. VIII.—An Act to enable the President of the United States to fulfill the Stipulations contained in the third and sixth Articles of the Treaty between the United States and the King of Denmark, of the eleventh April, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, for the discontinuance of the Sound Dues.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President of the United States to fulfill the stipulations contained in the third and sixth articles of the treaty between the United States and the King of Denmark, of the eleventh April, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, viz:

To carry out the stipulation contained in the third article of said treaty, three hundred and ninety-three thousand and eleven dollars.

To carry out the stipulation contained in the sixth article of said treaty, fifteen thousand seven hundred and twenty dollars and forty-four cents, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the interest provided for in said article.

APPROVED, March 4, 1858.

CHAP. IX.—An Act to appropriate Money to supply Deficiencies in the Appropriations for Paper, Printing, Binding, and Engraving, ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and which has been executed.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purpose of defraying the deficiencies in the appropriations for the paper for the printing, for the printing and for the binding, engraving and lithographing, ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, the following sums of money are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

To pay for paper, one hundred and four thousand dollars.

To pay for the printing ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, fifty-seven thousand six hundred and nineteen dollars and ninety-four cents.

To pay for the binding, lithographing, and engraving, ordered by the Senate during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, one hundred and seventy-nine thousand five hundred and sixty-nine dollars and sixty-four cents.

APPROVED, March 11, 1858.

CHAP. XII.—An Act to create additional Land Districts in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish additional land districts, in his discretion, not exceeding three, in the State of California, and to fix, from time to time, the boundaries thereof, as the public interest may require; which districts shall, respectively, be named after the places at which the offices shall first be established; and the President shall be authorized hereafter, from time to time, as circumstances may require, to adjust the boundaries of any and all of the land districts in said State, and remove the offices when the same shall be expedient.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess thereof, and until the end of the next ensuing session, a register and a receiver for each of said additional districts, who shall, respectively, be required to reside at the site of the offices, shall be subject to the same laws and responsibilities, and whose compensation shall be the same as is now prescribed by law for other land offices in that State.

APPROVED, March 29, 1858.

CHAP. XIII.—An Act to provide for the organization of a Regiment of Mounted Volunteers for the Defense of the Frontier of Texas, and to authorize the President to call into the service of the United States two additional Regiments of Volunteers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be authorized to receive into the service of the United States one regiment of Texas mounted volunteers, to be raised and organized by the

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

State of Texas for the defense and protection of the frontier thereof, to continue in service from the time that the whole regiment shall be mustered into service, for the term of eighteen months, unless sooner discharged by the President. Said regiment shall be composed of one colonel, one lieutenant colonel, one major, one adjutant with the rank of first lieutenant, one quartermaster and commissary with similar rank, one surgeon and two assistant surgeons, one sergeant major, one quartermaster and commissary sergeant, and ten companies, each of which shall be composed of one captain, one first lieutenant, one second lieutenant, four sergeants, four corporals, two buglers, one farrier, and seventy-four privates. Each of said officers below the rank of major—non-commissioned officers, musicians, farrier, and privates—shall furnish and keep himself supplied with a good, serviceable horse and horse equipments, for the use and risk of which, in addition to the pay and allowances herein provided, he shall receive forty cents a day while in service with his horse; and if any non-commissioned officer, musician, farrier, or private shall, from carelessness or neglect, injure, or render his horse unfit for service, and shall fail to supply a serviceable horse within the period of ten days from the loss, such soldier shall, from such time until he shall furnish himself with a horse, be entitled only to the pay of a private of infantry.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, farrier, and privates, of said regiment shall, when mustered into the service of the United States, be subject to the rules and articles of war. They shall be armed at the expense of the United States, as the President shall direct. They shall be allowed the same pay, rations, and allowances in kind, including clothing, and be subject to the same rules and regulations, as are provided for the regiments of cavalry now in the service; but no field officer shall receive forage for a greater number of horses than he may from time to time actually have in service. No pay or allowances shall be due until said regiment shall be received into the service; but each officer and man shall then be entitled to one day's pay and allowance for every twenty miles he may have been required to travel from his residence to the place of muster.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, for the purpose of quelling disturbances in the Territory of Utah, for the protection of supply and emigrant trains, and the suppression of Indian hostilities on the frontiers, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to call for and accept the services of any number of volunteers, not to exceed in all two regiments, of seven hundred and forty privates each; the same, or any portion thereof, to be organized into mounted regiments or infantry, as the President may deem proper, to serve for the term of eighteen months from the time of their being received into service, unless sooner discharged by the President. Said volunteers, if called for and received as mounted men, shall be constituted in the same manner as is provided in the first section of this bill for the Texas regiment of mounted volunteers, and shall receive the same pay and allowances, shall be subject to the same rules and regulations as are provided in this bill for said corps; and if called for, and if received as infantry, they shall be placed on the same footing in every respect with the infantry regiments now in the service, shall receive the same pay and allowances, and be governed by the same rules and regulations; and the said regiments, whether organized as mounted men or infantry, shall be subject to the rules and articles of war.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the volunteers provided for by this act shall not be accepted in bodies of less than one regiment, whose officers shall be appointed in the manner prescribed by law in the several States or Territories to which said regiments shall respectively belong, except the quartermasters and commissaries, who shall be detailed from their respective departments of the regular Army of the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the pay of said volunteers shall not be due until received into the service, but each officer and man shall then be entitled to one day's pay for every twenty miles he may have been required to travel from his residence to the place of muster.

APPROVED, April 7, 1858.

CHAP. XIV.—An Act to acquire certain Lands needed for the Washington Aqueduct, in the District of Columbia.

Whereas it is represented that the works of the Washington aqueduct, in the District of Columbia, are delayed in consequence of the proprietors' refusal, in some cases, to sell lands required for its construction at reasonable prices, and because, in other cases, the title to the said land is imperfect, or is vested in minors, or persons non compos mentis, or in a feme covert, or [in persons] out of the District of Columbia; and whereas it is necessary for the making of the said aqueduct, reservoirs, dams, ponds, feeders, and other works, that a provision should be made for condemning a quantity of land for the purpose: Therefore, bridges, or works of any other description whatsoever appurtenant thereto, it shall be necessary to use earth, timber, stone, or gravel, or any other material to be found on any of the lands adjacent or near thereto, and the said United States or their agent cannot procure the same for the works aforesaid by private contract of the proprietor or owner; or in case the owner should be a feme covert, or non compos, or under age, or out of the District, the same proceedings, in all respects, shall be had as in the case before mentioned of the assessment and condemnation of the lands required for the said aqueduct or the work appurtenant thereto: Provided, That the work shall not be delayed pending any such proceeding in court, but the same shall be continued without obstruction thereby, after the inquisition shall be returned to the court.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall and may be lawful for the United States, or its approved agent, to agree with the owners of any land in the District of Columbia, through which said aqueduct is intended to pass, for the purchase or use and occupation thereof; and in case of disagreement, or in case the owner thereof shall be a feme covert, under age, non compos, or out of the District of Columbia, on application to a judge of the circuit court of said District, the said judge shall issue his warrant, under his hand, to the marshal of the said District to summon a jury of eighteen inhabitants of said District not related to the parties, nor in any manner interested, to meet on the land to be valued, at a day to be expressed in the warrant, not less than ten nor more than twenty days thereafter; notice of the time and place of said meeting being first given to the owners of such land or to their legal representatives, in person if that be practicable, and, if not, by publication in some Washington city newspaper daily for two weeks; and the marshal, upon receiving the said warrant, shall forthwith summon the said jury, and, when met, shall administer an oath or affirmation to every jurymen who shall appear, being not less than twelve in number, that he will faithfully, justly, and impartially value the land, and all damages the owner thereof shall sustain by cutting the aqueduct through such land, or the partial, or temporary, or permanent appropriation, use, or occupation of such land, according to the best of his skill and judgment; and that in such valuation he will not spare any person for favor or affection, nor any person grieve for malice, hatred, or ill will; and the inquisition thereupon taken shall be signed by the marshal and four fifths of the said jury, and [be] returned by the marshal to the circuit court for the District of Columbia; and, unless good cause be shown against the said inquisition, it shall be affirmed by the court at its first term after said return, and [be] recorded; but if, from any cause, no inquisition shall be returned to such court within one month after the commencement of the next ensuing term, the said court, [shall,] at its discretion, as often as may be necessary, direct another inquisition to be taken in the manner above prescribed; and upon every such valuation the jury is hereby directed to describe and ascertain the bounds of the land by them valued, and the quality and duration of the interest and estate in the same required by the said United States for the use of the aqueduct, and their valuation shall be conclusive on all persons, and shall be paid for by the said United States, or its authorized agent, to the owner of the land, or his, or her, or their legal representative; and on payment thereof, the said United States shall be seized of such land as of an absolute estate in perpetuity, or with such less quantity and duration of interest or estate in the same, or subject to such partial or temporary appropriation, use, or occupation, as shall be required and desired as aforesaid, as if conveyed by the owner to the said United States; and whenever, in the construction of the said aqueduct, or any of the works thereof, reservoirs, dams, ponds, feeders, tunnels, aqueducts, culverts,

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the United States or its agent, in case of any dispute of difficulty arising as to the ownership of the land condemned as above for the use of said aqueduct, or in case the owner should be a feme covert, under age, non compos, or out of the said District of Columbia, and no person duly authorized to receive the same, that the United States or its agent be authorized, by petition to the circuit court for the District of Columbia, and upon said court's order, to deposit the money for which the said land was condemned in the place directed by said court, and the certificate of the proper officer of said deposit shall be considered as a full payment for said land, and thereby vest in the United States an absolute estate in perpetuity, or with such less quantity and duration of interest in the same, as subject to such partial, or temporary, or permanent use or occupation as shall be required and described as aforesaid, if conveyed by the owner or owners of said land.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of said circuit court to hear and determine to whom the said money does belong, and, upon being satisfied as to whom the land did belong, to pass their decree directing the clerk of said court to pay over to the owner the same money deposited as above, after deducting expenses. The court is further authorized to direct the mode for trying the case, and the litigants have the right of appeal, provided the appeal is taken within sixty days from the decree of the said court.

APPROVED, April 8, 1858.

CHAP. XXIII.—An Act to incorporate Gonzaga College, in the City of Washington and District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Burcard Villiger, Charles H. Stonestreet, Daniel Lynch, Edward X. Hand, and Charles Jenkins, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, made a body-politic and corporate forever, by the name of the President and Directors of Gonzaga College, for purposes of charity and education; and by that name may sue and be sued, prosecute and defend; may have and use a common seal, and the same alter and renew at pleasure; may adopt rules, regulations, and by-laws, not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, for properly conducting the affairs of said corporation; may take, receive, purchase, and hold estate, real, personal, and mixed, not exceeding in value the sum of two hundred thousand dollars at any one time, and may manage and dispose of the same at pleasure, and apply the same, or the proceeds of the sales thereof, to the uses and purposes of the said corporation, according to the rules and regulations which now are, or may hereafter be, established.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said corporation shall have and enjoy the power and faculty to confer and confirm upon such pupils in the institution or others, who, by their proficiency in learning or other meritorious distinctions, they shall think entitled to them, such degrees in the liberal arts and sciences as are usually granted in colleges.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the president and directors of Georgetown College be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to convey to the said president and directors of Gonzaga College and their successors forever, who are hereby authorized and empowered to receive the same, such lands and property, and such estate, real, personal, or mixed, as the said president and directors of Georgetown College may receive, or may have received, for the use or benefit of said president and directors of Gonzaga College.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize this said corporation to issue any note, token, device, scrip, or other evidence of debt, to be used as a currency.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That each of the corporators in said corporation shall be held liable, in his individual capacity, for all the debts and liabilities of said corporation, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit, as other debts or liabilities, before any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time hereafter alter, amend, or repeal the foregoing act.

APPROVED, May 4, 1858.

CHAP. XXIV.—An Act to incorporate the Benevolent Christian Association of Washington City.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That each of the Christian churches in the city of Washington, without distinction of sect or creed, be, and they are hereby, authorized, on or before the last day of August of each and every year, to appoint one person, and that the person so appointed, and their successors be, and they are hereby, made a body-politic and corporate, under the name and style of "The Benevolent Christian Association of Washington City," and, as such, may purchase, have, hold, use, and acquire, by donation or any lawful means, estate, real and personal, not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars in value, and the same may lease, let, sell, transfer, and convey, and otherwise dispose of; and may sue and be sued, and plead and be impleaded; and may have a common seal, and the same may change at pleasure; and may make by-laws, rules, and regulations for the management of their affairs.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the purpose of the said association shall be to relieve the wants of the destitute poor of Washington city; and that the persons named as aforesaid by the several Christian churches, shall be directors of the said association, and continue in office until the first day of October in each year, and until their successors be appointed, and as such shall have power to appoint appropriate officers, and to employ and compensate such agents as they deem expedient, and to appropriate the funds and property of the association to such use as in their discretion they deem best suited to promote the purpose of their incorporation, and with this view they may associate with them as auxiliaries, under such rules and regulations as they may prescribe, any other and all such benevolent associations or societies as now exist, or may hereafter be organized in the city of Washington for the purpose of aiding or contributing to the relief of the poor and destitute persons in said city.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize the said corporation to issue any note, token, device, scrip, or any other evidence of debt, to be used as a currency.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That each of the corporators in said corporation shall be held liable, in his individual capacity, for all the debts and liabilities of said corporation, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit, as other debts or liabilities, before any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time hereafter alter, amend, or repeal the foregoing act.

APPROVED, May 4, 1858

CHAP. XXV.—An Act to supply Deficiencies in the Appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary, in the service of the House of Representatives, viz: Six messengers, by resolution of the House of Representatives twenty-third December, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, three thousand nine hundred and thirteen dollars.

For folding documents, including pay of folders, wrapping paper, twine, and paste, twenty thousand dollars.

For furniture for Speaker's room, and committee rooms, Clerk's offices, Sergeant-at-Arms' office, Doorkeeper's room, and carpenters work, thirty thousand dollars.

For newspapers, three thousand dollars.

For laborers, by resolution of the House of Representatives, twenty-third December, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, two thousand dollars.

For stationery, four thousand dollars.

For horses, carriages, and saddle horses, one thousand five hundred dollars.

To enable John C. Rives to pay to the reporters of the House for reporting the debates of the present session of Congress, the usual additional compensation of eight hundred dollars each, four thousand dollars.

Army.—for the regular supplies of the quartermaster's department, consisting of fuel for the officers, enlisted men, guard, hospitals, storehouses, and offices; forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the quartermaster's department at the several posts and stations, and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, the companies of light artillery, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses when serving in the field and at the outposts; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including company and other blank books for the Army, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the pay and quartermaster's departments; and for the printing of division and department orders, Army regulations, and reports, seven hundred and seventy-eight thousand dollars.

For the purchase of horses for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, the companies of light artillery, and such infantry as it may be found necessary to mount at the frontier posts, two hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars.

For the incidental expenses of the quartermaster's department, consisting of postage on letters and packages received and sent by officers of the Army on public service, expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, including the additional compensation to judge advocates, recorders, members, and witnesses, while on that service, under the act of March sixteenth, eighteen hundred and two; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the quartermaster's department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, storehouses, and hospitals; the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, under the acts of March second, eighteen hundred and nineteen, and August fourth, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, including those employed as clerks at division and department headquarters; expenses of expresses to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters, other disbursing officers, and trains, when military escorts cannot be furnished; expenses of the interment of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the quartermaster's department, including hire of interpreters, spies, and guides for the Army; compensation of clerk[s] to officers of the quartermaster's department; compensation of forage and wagon masters, authorized by the act of July fifth, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight; for the apprehension of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; the following expenditures required for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, viz: the purchase of traveling forges, blacksmiths' and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes and nails, iron and steel for shoeing, hire of veterinary surgeons, medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, and shoeing the horses of those corps, one hundred and ninety thousand dollars.

For constructing barracks and other buildings at posts which it may be necessary to occupy during the year; and for repairing, altering, and enlarging buildings at the established posts, including hire or commutation of quarters for officers on military duty; hire of quarters for troops, of storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, and of grounds for summer cantonments; for encampments and temporary frontier stations, eighty thousand dollars.

For transportation of the Army, including the baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp, and garrison equipment from the depot at Philadelphia to the several posts and Army depots; horse equipments, and of subsistence from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require it to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms, from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for the purchase and hire of horses, mules, and oxen, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, drays, ships, and other sea-going vessels and boats for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; and for procuring water at such posts as from their situation require that it be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads and removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops on the frontier, five million four hundred thousand dollars.

For subsistence in kind, one million two hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

For surveys for military defenses, geographical explorations and reconnoissances for military purposes, five thousand dollars.

Miscellaneous.—For contingent expenses of the northeast Executive building, viz: for fuel, light, and repairs, one thousand dollars.

For the erection of stables and conservatory at the President's House to replace those about to be taken down to make room for the extension of the Treasury building, three thousand nine hundred and five dollars.

For surveying the public lands and private land claims in California, including office expenses incident to the survey of claims, and to be disbursed at the rates prescribed by law for the different kinds of work, being the amount of surveying liabilities incurred by the surveyor general during the fiscal year ending thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, over and above that authorized under the appropriation of fifty thousand dollars for that period, two hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

For payment to clerks temporarily employed in the Post Office Department on account of the extraordinary labors connected with the lettings of new contracts for the term commencing on the first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and the increase of business in the inspection and deprecation office of said Department, five thousand two hundred and eighteen dollars and eighty-nine cents.

For lighting the President's House and Capitol, the public grounds around them, and around the executive offices, and Pennsylvania avenue, and Bridge and High streets, in Georgetown, five thousand dollars.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Utah Territory, from first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For purchase of the "Masonic Temple" in the city of Boston, for the accommodation of the United States courts, upon the terms agreed on by the Secretary of the Interior and the proprietors thereof, in addition to the sum of one hundred thousand dollars appropriated by the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, for the erection of a building for said purpose, five thousand dollars.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sum of one million four hundred and sixty-nine thousand one hundred and seventy-three dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post Office Department for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and directed to allow credit to the Clerk of the House of Representatives for such payments out of its contingent fund as have been or may be made under allowances authorized by the House of Representatives during the last Congress: Provided, That said allowances shall have been duly approved by the Committee of Accounts: And be it further provided, That the said allowances be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That, whenever hereafter contracts shall be made by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy by virtue of the sixth section of the act approved the first of May, eighteen hundred and twenty, entitled "An act in addition to the several acts for the establishment and regulation of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments," he shall, if Congress be in session at the time, promptly report to both Houses thereof the reasons for making such contract, stating fully all the facts and circumstances which, in his judgment, rendered such contract necessary; if Congress be not in session at the time of making such contract, he shall, at the commencement of their next session, make such report to both Houses; and no such contracts shall be made hereafter, except in cases of pressing exigency.

APPROVED, May 4, 1858.

CHAP. XXVI.—An Act for the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union.

Whereas, the people of the Territory of Kansas did, by a convention of delegates assembled at Lecompton on the seventh day of November, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven, for that purpose, form for themselves a constitution and State government, which constitution is republican; and whereas, at the same time and place, said convention did adopt an ordinance, which said ordinance asserts that Kansas, when admitted as a State, will have an undoubted right to tax the lands within her limits belonging to the United States, and proposes to relinquish said asserted right if certain conditions set forth in said ordinance be accepted and agreed to by the Congress of the United States; and whereas, the said constitution and ordinance have been presented to Congress by order of said convention, and admission of said Territory into the Union thereon as a State requested; and whereas, said ordinance is not acceptable to Congress, and it is desirable to ascertain whether the people of Kansas concur in the changes in said ordinance, hereinafter stated, and desire admission into the Union as a State as herein proposed: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the State of Kansas be, and is hereby, admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, but upon this fundamental condition precedent, namely: that the question of admission with the following proposition, in lieu of the ordinance framed at Lecompton, be submitted to a vote of the people of Kansas, and assented to by them, or a majority of the voters voting at an election to be held for that purpose, namely: that the following propositions be, and the same are hereby, offered to the people of Kansas for acceptance or rejection, which, if accepted, shall be obligatory on the United States and upon the said State of Kansas, to wit: First. That sections number sixteen and thirty-six in every township of public lands in said State, or where either of said sections or any part thereof has been sold or otherwise disposed of, other lands equivalent thereto and as contiguous as may be, shall be granted to said State for the use of schools. Second. That seventy-two sections of land shall be set apart and reserved for the support of a State University, to be selected by the Governor of said State, subject to the approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to be appropriated and applied in such manner as the Legislature of said State may prescribe for the purpose aforesaid, but for no other purpose. Third. That ten entire sections of land, to be selected by the Governor of said State, in legal subdivisions, shall be granted to said State for the purpose of completing the public buildings, or for the erection of others at the seat of government, under the direction of the Legislature thereof. Fourth. That all salt springs within said State, not exceeding twelve in number, with six sections of land adjoining, or as contiguous as may be to each, shall be granted to said State for its use, the same to be selected by the Governor thereof, within one year after the admission of said State; and, when so selected, to be used or disposed of on such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Legislature may direct; Provided, That no salt spring or land the right whereof is now vested in any individual or individuals, or which may hereafter be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall by this article be granted to said State. Fifth. That five per centum of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands lying within said State which shall be sold by Congress after the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to said State for the purpose of making public roads and internal improvements, as the Legislature shall direct: Provided, The foregoing propositions herein offered are on the condition that said State of Kansas shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the lands of the United States, or with any regulations which Congress may find necessary for securing the title in said soil to bona fide purchasers thereof, and that no tax shall be imposed on lands belonging to the United States, and that in no case shall non-resident proprietors be taxed higher than residents. Sixth. And that said State shall never tax the lands or property of the United States in that State. At the said election the voting shall be by ballot, and by indorsing on his ballot, as each voter may be pleased, "Proposition accepted," or "Proposition rejected." Should a majority of the votes cast be for "Proposition accepted," the President of the United States, as soon as the fact is duly made known to him, shall announce the same by proclamation; and thereafter, and without any further proceedings on the part of Congress, the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, shall be complete and absolute; and said State shall be entitled to one member in the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States until the next census be taken by the Federal Government. But should a majority of the votes cast be for "Proposition rejected," it shall be deemed and held that the people of Kansas do not desire admission into the Union with said constitution under the conditions set forth in said proposition; and in that event the people of said Territory are hereby authorized and empowered to form for themselves a constitution and State government, by the name of the State of Kansas, according to the Federal Constitution, and may elect delegates for that purpose whenever, and not before, it is ascertained by a census duly and legally taken that the population of said Territory equals or exceeds the ratio of representation required for a member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; and whenever thereafter such delegates shall assemble in convention, they shall first determine by a vote whether it is the wish of the people of the proposed State to be admitted into the Union at that time; and, if so, shall proceed to form a constitution, and take all necessary steps for the establishment of a State government, in conformity with the Federal Constitution, subject to such limitations and restrictions as to the mode and manner of its approval or ratification by the people of the proposed State as they may have prescribed by law, and shall be entitled to admission into the Union as a State under such constitution, thus fairly and legally made, with or without slavery, as said constitution may prescribe.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of insuring, as far as possible, that the elections authorized by this act may be fair and free, the Governor, United States District Attorney, and secretary of the Territory of Kansas, and the presiding officers of the two branches of its Legislature, namely, the President of the Council and Speaker of the House of Representatives, are hereby constituted a board of commissioners to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and to use all the means necessary and proper to that end. And three of them shall constitute a board; and the board shall have power and authority to designate and establish precincts for voting, or to adopt those already established; to cause polls to be opened at such places as it may deem proper in the respective counties and election precincts of said Territory; to appoint as judges of election, at each of the several places of voting, three discreet and respectable persons, any two of whom shall be competent to act; to require the sheriffs of the several counties, by themselves or deputies, to attend the judges at each of the places of voting for the purpose of preserving peace and good order; or the said board may, instead of said sheriffs and their deputies, appoint at their discretion, and in such instances as they may choose, other fit persons for the same purpose. The election hereby authorized shall continue one day only, and shall not be continued later than sundown on that day. The said board shall appoint the day for holding said election, and the said Governor shall announce the same by proclamation; and the day shall be as early a one as is consistent with due notice thereof to the people of said Territory, subject to the provisions of this act. The said board shall have full power to prescribe the time, manner, and places of said election, and to direct the time [within] which returns shall be made to the said board, whose duty it shall be to announce the result by proclamation, and the said Governor shall certify the same to the President of the United States, without delay.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in the election hereby authorized, all white male inhabitants of said Territory, over the age of twenty-one years, who possess the qualifications which were required by the laws of said Territory for a legal voter, at the last general election for the members of the Territorial Legislature, and none others, shall be allowed to vote; and this shall be the only qualification required to entitle the voter to the right of suffrage in said election. And if any person not so qualified shall vote or offer to vote, or if any person shall vote more than once at said election, or shall make or cause to be made any false, fictitious, or fraudulent returns, or shall alter or change any returns of said election, such person shall, upon conviction thereof before any court of competent jurisdiction, be kept at hard labor not less than six months and not more than three years.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the members of the aforesaid board of commissioners, and all persons appointed by them to carry into effect the provisions of this act, shall, before entering upon their duties, take an oath to perform faithfully the duties of their respective offices; and, on failure thereof, they shall be liable and subject to the same charges and penalties as are provided in like cases under the territorial laws.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the officers mentioned in the preceding section shall receive for their services the same compensation as is given for like services under the territorial laws.

APPROVED, May 4, 1858.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

CHAP. XXVII.—An Act to provide for the Issuing, Service, and Return of original and final Process in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States in certain Cases.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all suits, not of a local nature, hereafter to be brought in the circuit and district courts of the United States, in a district in any State containing more than one district, against a single defendant, shall be brought in the district in which the defendant resides; but if there be two or more defendants, residing in different districts in the same State, the plaintiff may sue in either district and issue a duplicate writ against the defendants, directed to the marshal of any other district within the State in which any of the defendants reside, on which duplicate writ the clerk issuing the same shall indorse that it is a true copy of a writ sued out of the court of the proper district, and such original and duplicate writs, so issued, shall, when executed and returned into the office from which they issued, constitute one suit and be proceeded on accordingly, and upon any judgment rendered in a suit so brought, process of execution may be issued, directed to the marshal of any district in the same State. And in suits of a local nature, where the defendant resides in a different district in the same State than the one in which the suit is brought, the plaintiff may have original and final process against such defendant, directed to the marshal of the district in which he resides.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in all cases of a local nature at law or in equity, where the land or other subject-matter of a fixed character lies partly in one district and partly in another district, within the same State, the plaintiff may bring his action or suit in the circuit or district court of either district, and the court in which any such action or suit shall have been commenced, as aforesaid, shall have jurisdiction to hear and decide the same, and to cause meane or final process to be issued and executed as fully as if the land or other subject-matter were wholly within the district for which such court is constituted.

APPROVED, May 4, 1858.

CHAP. XXVIII.—An Act to alter the Times of holding the Circuit and District Courts of the United States for the District of Vermont.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the circuit court of the United States now directed to be holden at Windsor, in and for the district of Vermont, on the twenty-first day of May, shall, after the first day of July next, be holden on the fourth Tuesday of July annually at said place, and the district court of the United States, within and for said district, instead of the twenty-seventh day of May, shall, after the first day of July next, be holden on the Monday next after the fourth Tuesday in July annually.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all indictments, informations, suits, or actions, and proceedings of any kind, whether civil or criminal, now pending in said courts respectively, shall have day in court and be proceeded in, heard, tried, and determined on the days herein appointed for the holding of said courts respectively, in the same manner that might and ought to have been done had the said courts respectively been holden on the twenty-first and twenty-seventh days of May.

APPROVED, May 4, 1858.

CHAP. XXIX.—An Act making Appropriations for the Current and Contingent Expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling Treaty Stipulations with various Indian Tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and they are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes.

For the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, viz:

For the pay of superintendents of Indian affairs, and of the several Indian agents, per acts of fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty, twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty, twenty-seventh February, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, and third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, eighty-six thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

For the pay of the several Indian sub-agents, per act of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, ten thousand five hundred dollars.

For the pay of clerk to superintendent at St. Louis, Missouri, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six, one thousand two hundred dollars.

For the pay of clerk to superintendent in California, per act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For the pay of interpreters, per acts of thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and thirty-four, twenty-seventh February, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, thirty-one thousand nine hundred dollars.

For presents to Indians, five thousand dollars.

For provisions for Indians, eleven thousand eight hundred dollars.

For buildings at agencies, and repairs thereof, ten thousand dollars.

For insurance, transportation, and necessary expenses of delivery of annuities, goods, and provisions to the Indian tribes in Minnesota, Michigan, and Wisconsin, thirty thousand dollars.

For contingencies of the Indian department, thirty-six thousand five hundred dollars.

For the employment of temporary clerks by superintendent of Indian affairs, on such occasions and for such periods of time as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary to the public service, five thousand dollars.

Blackfoot Nation.—For third of ten installments as annuity, to be expended in the purchase of such goods, provisions, and other useful articles as the President, at his discretion, may from time to time determine, per ninth article of the treaty of seventeenth October, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, twenty thousand dollars.

For third of ten installments as annuity, to be expended in establishing and instructing them in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, and in educating their children, and promoting civilization and Christianity, at the discretion of the President, per tenth article of the treaty of seventeenth October, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, fifteen thousand dollars.

For expenses of transportation and delivery of annuities in goods and provisions, seventeen thousand dollars.

Calapooias, Molalla, and Clackamas Indians of Willanette Valley.—For fourth of five installments of annuity for beneficial objects, per second article of treaty twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, ten thousand dollars.

For fourth of five installments for pay of physician, teacher, blacksmith, and farmer, per third article treaty twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, two thousand two hundred and sixty dollars.

Chasta, Scoton, and Umpqua Indians.—For fourth of fifteen installments of annuity, to be expended as directed by the President, per third article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand dollars.

For fourth of fifteen installments for the pay of a farmer, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

For fourth of five installments for support of two smiths' and smiths' shops, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand one hundred and twenty dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for pay of physician, medicines, and expense of care of the sick, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand and sixty dollars.

For fourth of fifteen installments for pay of teachers, and purchase of books and stationery, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand two hundred dollars.

For this amount to be expended when the united bands shall be required to remove to the Table Rock reserve, or elsewhere, for provisions to aid in their subsistence during the first year they shall reside thereon, as the President may direct, per fourth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six thousand five hundred dollars.

Chippewas of Lake Superior.—Fulfilling the treaty of thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.

For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments in money, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, eight thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents.

For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the pay of two carpenters, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, eight hundred dollars.

For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments in goods, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, seven thousand dollars.

For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the support of schools, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents.

For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the pay of two farmers, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-seven cents.

For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the purchase of provisions and tobacco, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand three hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents.

For fourth of twenty installments in coin, goods, household furniture, and cooking utensils, agricultural implements and cattle, carpenters' and other tools and building materials, and for moral and educational purposes, per fourth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, nineteen thousand dollars.

For fourth of five installments in blankets, cloths, nets, guns, ammunition, and such other articles of necessity as they may require, to the Bois Forte band, per twelfth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand dollars.

For fourth of twenty installments for six smiths and assistants, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, five thousand and forty dollars.

For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths' shops, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand three hundred and twenty dollars.

For second of twenty installments for the seventh smith and assistant, and support of shop, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand and sixty dollars.

For support of a smith, assistant, and shop for the Bois Forte band, during the pleasure of the President, per twelfth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand and sixty dollars.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

For support of two farmers for the Bois Forte band, during the pleasure of the President, per twelfth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand two hundred dollars.

Chippewas of the Mississippi.—Fulfilling the treaty of twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments in money, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, four thousand one hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-seven cents.

For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the pay of two carpenters, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, four hundred dollars.

For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments in goods, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, three thousand five hundred dollars.

For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the support of schools, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-seven cents.

For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the purchase of provisions and tobacco, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-seven cents.

For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the support of two smiths' shops, including the pay of two smiths and assistants, and furnishing iron and steel, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-seven cents.

For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for pay of two farmers, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, three hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirty-three cents.

For fourth of twenty installments of annuity in money, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, twenty thousand dollars.

Chippewas, Pillager, and Lake Winnibigoshish bands.—For fourth of thirty installments of annuity in money, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, ten thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents.

For fourth of thirty installments of annuity in goods, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, eight thousand dollars.

For fourth of thirty installments for purposes of utility, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, four thousand dollars.

For fourth of twenty installments for purposes of education, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, three thousand dollars.

For fourth of five annual installments for the purchase of powder, shot, lead, twine, and tobacco, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, six hundred dollars.

For fourth of five annual installments for the hire of six laborers, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, three thousand dollars.

For fourth of fifteen annual installments for support of two smiths and smiths' shops, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, two thousand one hundred and twenty dollars.

Chippewas of Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River.—For third of five equal annual installments for educational purposes, under the direction of the President, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, four thousand dollars.

For third of five equal annual installments for agricultural implements and carpenters' tools, household furniture and building materials, cattle, labor, and necessary useful articles, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, five thousand dollars.

For third of ten equal annual installments in coin, to be distributed per capita, in the usual manner of paying annuities, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, ten thousand dollars.

For third installment for the support of one blacksmith shop for ten years, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, twelve hundred and forty dollars.

Chippewas, Menomonees, Winnebagoes, and New York Indians.—For education, during the pleasure of Congress, per fifth article treaty eleventh August, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven, one thousand five hundred dollars.

Chickasaws.—For permanent annuity in goods, per act of twenty-fifth February, seventeen hundred and ninety-nine, three thousand dollars.

Choctaws.—For permanent annuity, per second article treaty sixteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty, and thirteenth article treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, three thousand dollars.

For permanent annuity for support of light-horsemen, per thirteenth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and twenty, and thirteenth article treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, six hundred dollars.

For permanent provision for education, per second article treaty twentieth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-five, and thirteenth article treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, six thousand dollars.

For permanent provision for blacksmith, per sixth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and twenty, and thirteenth article treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, six hundred dollars.

For permanent provision for iron and steel, per ninth article treaty twentieth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-five, and thirteenth article of treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, three hundred and twenty dollars.

For interest on five hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, for education and other beneficial purposes, to be applied under the direction of the general council of the Choctaws, in conformity with the provisions contained in the tenth and thirteenth articles of the treaty of twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes:

Comanches, Kiowas, and Apaches of Arkansas river.—For fifth of ten installments for the purchase of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, per sixth article treaty twenty-seventh July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, eighteen thousand dollars.

For expenses of transportation of the fifth of ten installments of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, per sixth article treaty twenty-seventh July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, seven thousand dollars.

Creeks.—For permanent annuity in money, per fourth article treaty seventh August, seventeen hundred and ninety, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For permanent annuity in money, per second article treaty sixteenth June, eighteen hundred and two, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, three thousand dollars.

For permanent annuity in money, per fourth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, twenty thousand dollars.

For permanent provision for blacksmith and assistant, and for shop and tools, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, eight hundred and forty dollars.

For permanent provision for iron and steel for shop, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, two hundred and seventy dollars.

For permanent provision for the pay of a wheelwright, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, six hundred dollars.

For blacksmith and assistant, and shop and tools, during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, eight hundred and forty dollars.

For iron and steel for shop during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, two hundred and seventy dollars.

For wagon maker during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, six hundred dollars.

For assistance in agricultural operations during the pleasure of the President, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, two thousand dollars.

For education during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, one thousand dollars.

For the second of seven additional installments for two blacksmiths, assistants, shop, and tools, per thirteenth article treaty twenty-fourth March, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, one thousand six hundred and eighty dollars.

For the second of seven additional installments for iron and steel for shops, per thirteenth article treaty twenty-fourth March, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, five hundred and forty dollars.

For twenty-eighth of thirty-three installments for education, per fourth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, three thousand dollars.

For fifteenth of twenty installments for education, per fourth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, three thousand dollars.

For five per centum interest on two hundred thousand dollars, for purposes of education, per sixth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, ten thousand dollars.

Delawares.—For life annuity to chief, per private article to supplemental treaty twenty-fourth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, to treaty of third October, eighteen hundred and eighteen, one hundred dollars.

For interest on forty-six thousand and eighty dollars, at five per centum, being the value of thirty-six sections of land set apart by treaty of eighteen hundred and twenty-nine for education, per resolution of Senate nineteenth January, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, and fifth article treaty sixth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand three hundred and four dollars.

For fifth of eight equal installments for payment of five chiefs, per sixth article treaty sixth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

Florida Indians, or Seminoles.—For the last of fifteen installments in goods, per sixth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, two thousand dollars.

For the last of fifteen installments in money, per sixth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, and fourth article treaty ninth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, three thousand dollars.

Iowas.—For interest in lieu of investment on fifty-seven thousand five hundred dollars to the first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, at five per centum, for education or other beneficial purposes, under the direction of the President, per second article treaty nineteenth October, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, and ninth article treaty seventeenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars.

Kansas.—For interest in lieu of investment on two hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty fourteenth January, eighteen hundred and forty-six, ten thousand dollars.

Kaskaskias, Peorias, Weas, and Piankeshaws.—For second of three installments of nine thousand dollars for the years eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, per sixth article treaty thirtieth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, nine thousand dollars.

For the last of five installments for support of blacksmith and assistant, per sixth article treaty thirtieth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, seven hundred and twenty dollars.

For the last of five installments for purchase of iron and steel, per sixth article treaty thirtieth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two hundred and twenty dollars.

Kickapoos.—For fifth installment of interest, at five per centum, on one hundred thousand dollars for education, per second article treaty eighteenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, five thousand dollars.

For the payment of this sum as the fifth installment upon two hundred thousand dollars, to be paid in eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, per second article treaty eighteenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, fourteen thousand dollars.

Menomonees.—For third of twelve installments for continuing and keeping up a blacksmith shop and providing the usual quantity of iron and steel, per fourth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and third article treaty twelfth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, nine hundred and sixteen dollars and sixty-six cents.

For third of ten installments of annuity upon two hundred thousand dollars, balance of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, for cession of lands, per fourth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and third article treaty twelfth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, twenty thousand dollars.

Miamies of Kansas.—For permanent provision for blacksmith and assistant, and iron and steel for shop, per fifth article treaty sixth October, eighteen hundred and eighteen, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, nine hundred and forty dollars.

For permanent provision for miller, in lieu of gunsmith, per fifth article treaty sixth October, eighteen hundred and eighteen, fifth article treaty twenty-third October, eighteen hundred and thirty-four, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

For their proportion of eighteenth of twenty installments in money, per second article treaty twenty-eighth November, eighteen hundred and forty, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, five thousand six hundred and thirty-six dollars and thirty-six cents.

For interest on fifty thousand dollars, at five per centum, for educational purposes, per third article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For fifth of six equal annual installments to Miamies residing on ceded lands, for purchase of former perpetual and other annuities and relinquishments of claims, per fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, thirty-one thousand seven hundred and thirty-nine dollars and eleven cents.

Miamies of Indiana.—For their proportion of eighteenth of twenty installments in money, per second article treaty twenty-eighth November, eighteen hundred and forty, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six thousand eight hundred and sixty-three dollars and sixty-four cents.

For interest on investment of two hundred and twenty-one thousand two hundred and fifty-seven dollars and eighty-six cents, at five per centum, for Miami Indians of Indiana, per Senate's amendment to fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, eleven thousand and sixty-two dollars and eighty-nine cents.

Miamies, Eel River.—For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per fourth article treaty third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, five hundred dollars.

For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per third article treaty twenty-first August, eighteen hundred and five, two hundred and fifty dollars.

For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per third and separate article to treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and nine, three hundred and fifty dollars.

Navajoes.—For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Navajoes, pursuant to the requirements of the tenth article treaty ninth September, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, five thousand dollars.

Nisqually, Puyallup, and other tribes and bands of Indians.—For fulfilling the articles negotiated twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, with certain bands of Indians of Puget sound, Washington Territory.

For fourth installment, in part payment for relinquishment of title to lands to be applied to beneficial objects, per fourth article treaty twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand dollars.

For fourth of twenty installments for pay of instructor, smith, physician, carpenter, farmer, and assistant if necessary, per tenth article treaty twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, four thousand five hundred dollars.

Omahas.—For the first of ten installments of this amount, being second of the series, in money or otherwise, per fourth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, thirty thousand dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for support of a miller, per eighth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for support of blacksmith and assistant, and iron and steel for shop, per eighth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, nine hundred and forty dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for support of farmer, per eighth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

Osages.—For interest on sixty-nine thousand one hundred and twenty dollars, at five per centum, being the value of fifty-four sections of land set apart second June, eighteen hundred and twenty-five, for educational purposes, per Senate resolution eighteenth January, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, three thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars.

Ottos and Missourias.—For the first of ten installments of this amount, being the second series, in money or otherwise, per fourth article treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, thirteen thousand dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for pay of miller, per seventh article treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for blacksmith and assistant, and iron and steel for shop, per seventh article treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, nine hundred and forty dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for farmer, per seventh article treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan.—For third of ten equal annual installments for educational purposes, to be extended [expended] under the direction of the President, according to the wishes of the Indians, so far as may be reasonable and just, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, eight thousand dollars.

For third of five equal annual installments in agricultural implements and carpenters' tools, household furniture, and building materials, cattle, labor, and necessary useful articles, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, fifteen thousand dollars.

For third installment for the support of four blacksmith shops for ten years, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, four thousand two hundred and forty dollars.

For third installment of principal payable annually for ten years, to be distributed per capita, in the usual manner of paying annuities, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, ten thousand dollars.

For interest on two hundred and seventy-six thousand dollars, unpaid part of the principal sum of three hundred and six thousand dollars, for one year, at five per centum per annum, to be distributed per capita, in the usual manner of paying annuities, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, thirteen thousand eight hundred dollars.

For third of ten equal annual installments, in lieu of former treaty stipulations, to be paid per capita to the Grand River Ottawas, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, three thousand five hundred dollars.

Ottawas of Kansas.—For their proportion of the permanent annuities in money, goods, or otherwise, payable under the fourth article of the treaty of third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, second article of the treaty of seventeenth November, eighteen hundred and seven, fourth article of the treaty of seventeenth September, eighteen hundred and eighteen, and fourth article of the treaty of twenty-ninth August, eighteen hundred and twenty-one, two thousand six hundred dollars.

Pawnees.—For agricultural implements, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty ninth October, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, one thousand dollars.

Pottawatomies.—For permanent annuity in silver, per fourth article treaty third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, one thousand dollars.

For permanent annuity in silver, per third article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and nine, five hundred dollars.

For permanent annuity in silver, per third article treaty second October, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For permanent annuity in money, per second article treaty twentieth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, two thousand dollars.

For permanent annuity in specie, per second article treaty twenty-ninth July, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, sixteen thousand dollars.

For life annuity to chief, per third article treaty twentieth October, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, two hundred dollars.

For life annuity to chiefs, per third article treaty twenty-sixth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, seven hundred dollars.

For education, during the pleasure of Congress, per third article treaty sixteenth October, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, second article treaty twentieth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, and fourth article treaty twenty-seventh October, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, five thousand dollars.

For permanent provision for the payment of money, in lieu of tobacco, iron, and steel, per second article treaty twentieth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, and tenth article of the treaty of the fifth and seventeenth June, eighteen hundred and forty-six, three hundred dollars.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

For permanent provision for fifty barrels of salt, per second article of treaty twenty-ninth July, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, two hundred and fifty dollars.

For interest on six hundred and forty-three thousand dollars, at five per centum, per seventh article of the treaty of the fifth and seventeenth June, eighteen hundred and forty-six, thirty-two thousand one hundred and fifty dollars.

Pottawatomies of Huron.—For permanent annuity in money or otherwise, per second article treaty seventeenth November, eighteen hundred and seven, four hundred dollars.

Quapaws.—For education, during the pleasure of the President, per third article treaty thirteenth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, one thousand dollars.

For blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, and iron and steel for shop, during the pleasure of the President, per third article treaty thirteenth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, one thousand and sixty dollars.

For farmer, during the pleasure of the President, per third article treaty thirteenth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, six hundred dollars.

Rogue Rivers.—For fifth of sixteen installments in blankets, clothing, farming utensils, and stock, per third article treaty tenth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, two thousand five hundred dollars.

Sacs and Foxes of Mississippi.—For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per third article treaty third November, eighteen hundred and four, one thousand dollars.

For twenty-seventh of thirty installments as annuity in specie, per third article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, twenty thousand dollars.

For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for gunsmith, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, six hundred dollars.

For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for iron and steel for shop, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, two hundred and twenty dollars.

For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, eight hundred and forty dollars.

For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for iron and steel for shop, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, two hundred and twenty dollars.

For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for forty barrels of salt and forty kegs of tobacco, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, one thousand dollars.

For interest on two hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty twenty-first October, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, ten thousand dollars.

For interest on eight hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty eleventh October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, forty thousand dollars.

Sacs and Foxes of Missouri.—For interest on one hundred and fifty-seven thousand four hundred dollars, at five per centum, under the direction of the President, per second article treaty twenty-first October, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, seven thousand eight hundred and seventy dollars.

Seminoles.—For the second of ten installments for the support of schools, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, three thousand dollars.

For the second of ten installments for agricultural assistance, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, two thousand dollars.

For the second of ten installments for the support of smiths and smiths' shops, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, two thousand two hundred dollars.

For five per centum interest on two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to be paid as annuity, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

Senecas.—For permanent annuity in specie, per fourth article treaty twenty-ninth September, eighteen hundred and seventeen, five hundred dollars.

For permanent annuity in specie, per fourth article treaty seventh [seventeenth] September, eighteen hundred and eighteen, five hundred dollars.

For blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, and iron and steel, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty twenty-eighth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, one thousand and sixty dollars.

For miller, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty twenty-eighth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, six hundred dollars.

Senecas of New York.—For permanent annuity, in lieu of interest on stock, per act of nineteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, six thousand dollars.

For interest, in lieu of investment, on seventy-five thousand dollars, at five per centum, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six, three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For interest, at five per centum, on forty-three thousand and fifty dollars, transferred from Ontario Bank to the United States Treasury, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six, two thousand one hundred and fifty-two dollars and fifty cents.

Senecas and Shawnees.—For permanent annuity in specie, per fourth article treaty seventeenth September, eighteen hundred and eighteen, one thousand dollars.

For blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, and iron and steel for shop, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty twentieth July, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, one thousand and sixty dollars.

Shawnees.—For permanent annuity for educational purposes, per fourth article treaty third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, and third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand dollars.

For fifth of seven annual installments of money, in payment for lands, per third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand dollars.

For fifth installment of interest, at five per centum, on forty thousand dollars, for education, per third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand dollars.

For permanent annuity for educational purposes, per fourth article treaty twenty-ninth September, eighteen hundred and seventeen, and third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand dollars.

Six Nations of New York.—For permanent annuity in clothing and other useful articles, per sixth article treaty eleventh November, seventeen hundred and ninety-four, four thousand five hundred dollars.

Sioux of Mississippi.—For interest on three hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty twenty-ninth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, fifteen thousand dollars.

For eighth of fifty installments of interest, at five per centum, on one million three hundred and sixty thousand dollars, per fourth article treaty twenty-third July, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, sixty-eight thousand dollars.

For eighth of fifty installments of interest, at five per centum, on one hundred and twelve thousand dollars, being the amount in lieu of the reservations set apart in the third article of Senate's amendment of twenty-third June, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to treaty twenty-third July, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, five thousand six hundred dollars.

For eighth of fifty installments of interest, at five per centum, on one million one hundred and sixty thousand dollars, per fourth article treaty fifth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, fifty-eight thousand dollars.

For eighth of fifty installments of interest, at five per centum, on sixty-nine thousand dollars, being the amount allowed in lieu of the reservation of lands set apart by the third article of Senate's amendment of twenty-third June, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to treaty fifth August eighteen hundred and fifty-one, three thousand four hundred and fifty dollars.

Treaty of Fort Laramie.—For eighth of ten installments in provisions and merchandise, for payment of annuities and transportation of the same to certain tribes of Indians, per seventh article treaty seventeenth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and Senate's amendment thereto, seventy thousand dollars.

Umpquas, (Crow Creek band.)—For fifth of twenty installments in blankets, clothing, provisions, and stock, per third article treaty nineteenth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, five hundred and fifty dollars.

Fulfilling the articles of twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, with the Umpquas and Calapooias, of Umpqua Valley, Oregon.—For fourth of five installments of annuity for beneficial objects, to be expended as directed by the President, per third article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, three thousand dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a blacksmith, and furnishing shop, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand and sixty dollars.

For fourth of fifteen installments for the pay of a physician and purchase of medicines, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a farmer, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

For fourth of twenty installments for the pay of a teacher and purchase of books and stationery, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, seven hundred dollars.

Utahs.—For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Utahs, pursuant to the requirements of eighth article treaty thirtieth December, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, five thousand dollars.

Winnebagoes.—For the last of thirty installments as annuity in specie, per second article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, eighteen thousand dollars.

For the last of twenty-seven installments as annuity in specie, per third article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, ten thousand dollars.

For the last of thirty installments for fifty barrels of salt, per second article treaty first August, eighteen hundred twenty-nine, two hundred and fifty dollars.

For the last of thirty installments for three thousand pounds of tobacco, per second article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, six hundred dollars.

For the last of twenty-seven installments for one thousand five hundred pounds of tobacco, per fifth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, three hundred dollars.

For the last of thirty installments for three smiths and assistants, per third article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars.

For the last of thirty installments for iron and steel for shop, per third article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, six hundred and sixty dollars.

For the last of thirty installments for laborer and oxen, per third article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, three hundred and sixty-five dollars.

For the last of twenty-seven installments for education, per fourth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, three thousand dollars.

For the last of twenty-seven installments for six agriculturists, purchase of oxen, plows, and other implements, per fifth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, two thousand five hundred dollars.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

For the last of twenty-seven installments for the pay of two physicians, per fifth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, four hundred dollars.

For interest on one million one hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per fourth article treaty first November, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, fifty-five thousand dollars.

For twelfth of thirty installments of interest on eighty-five thousand dollars, at five per centum, per fourth article treaty thirteenth October, eighteen hundred and forty-six, four thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

Miscellaneous.—For carrying into effect the act of third March, eighteen hundred and nineteen, making provisions for the civilization of the Indian tribes, in addition to the sum specified in said act, five thousand dollars.

For continuing the compilation and completion of a map of the Indian territory, two thousand dollars.

APPROVED, May 5, 1858.

CHAP. XXXI.—An Act for the Admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union.

Whereas an act of Congress was passed February twenty-six, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, entitled "An act to authorize the people of the Territory of Minnesota to form a constitution and State government preparatory to their admission into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" and whereas the people of said Territory did, on the twenty-ninth day of August, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, by delegates elected for that purpose, form for themselves a constitution and State government, which is republican in form, and was ratified and adopted by the people at an election held on the thirtieth day of October, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, for that purpose: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the State of Minnesota shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one, of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That said State shall be entitled to two Representatives in Congress until the next apportionment of Representatives amongst the several States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the admission of the State of Minnesota, as hereinbefore provided, all the laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within that State as in other States of the Union; and the said State is hereby constituted a judicial district of the United States, within which a district court, with the like powers and jurisdiction as the district court of the United States for the district of Iowa, shall be established; the judge, attorney, and marshal of the United States for the said district of Minnesota shall reside within the same, and shall be entitled to the same compensation as the judge, attorney, and marshal of the district of Iowa; and in all cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon any record from the supreme court of Minnesota Territory, the mandate of execution or order of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the district court of the United States for the district of Minnesota, or to the supreme court of the State of Minnesota, as the nature of such appeal or writ of error may require; and each of those courts shall be the successor of the supreme court of Minnesota Territory, as to all such cases, with full power to hear and determine the same, and to award mesne or final process therein.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

CHAP. XXXII.—An Act amendatory of an Act entitled "An Act to establish two additional Land Districts in the Territory of Minnesota," approved July eighth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of an act entitled "An act to establish two additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota," approved July eighth, anno Domini eighteen hundred and fifty-six, as defines the southern boundary of the northwestern land district, on the west side of the Mississippi river, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and in lieu thereof the following boundaries are established, to wit: Commencing at the point of the eastern side of the Mississippi river where the present south line touches the river; thence down said river to the point opposite the intersection with the river of the eighth standard parallel; thence along said parallel to the point of intersection of guide meridian number four; thence along said guide meridian to the seventh standard parallel; thence west along said seventh parallel to the Sioux Wood river; thence north to the line heretofore established.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the line dividing ranges twenty-three and twenty-four be the boundary line between the northwestern and northeastern land districts in lieu of the range line between eighteen and nineteen, as heretofore established in the above-recited act.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

CHAP. XXXIII.—An Act to enlarge the Detroit and Saginaw Land Districts in Michigan.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all that part of the present Cheboygan district, in the State of Michigan, which lies south of the line dividing townships twenty-eight and twenty-nine north, and east of the line dividing ranges two and three west, shall be attached to and form a part of the present Saginaw district, and all that part of the said Cheboygan district which lies north of the line dividing townships twenty-eight and twenty-nine north, and east of the line dividing ranges one and two west, including the Island of Mackinac, be attached to and form a part of the Detroit district, in said State.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That this act take effect from and after the first day of July next.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

CHAP. XXXIV.—An Act making Appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Military Academy, for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine:

For pay of officers, instructors, cadets, and musicians, one hundred and twelve thousand eight hundred and six dollars.

For commutation of subsistence, three thousand and sixty-six dollars.

For forage for officers' horses, eight hundred and sixty-four dollars.

For current and ordinary expenses, as follows: repairs and improvements, fuel and apparatus, forage, postage, stationery, transportation, printing, clerks, miscellaneous and incidental expenses, and departments of instruction, thirty-five thousand six hundred and ten dollars.

For gradual increase and expense of library, one thousand dollars.

For expenses of the Board of Visitors, three thousand dollars.

For forage for artillery and cavalry horses, eight thousand six hundred and forty dollars.

For supplying horses for cavalry and artillery practice, one thousand dollars.

For barracks for dragoon detachment, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For barracks for artillery detachment, six thousand five hundred dollars.

For purchase of a bell, and mounting the same with the clock on one of the public buildings, four hundred and fifty dollars.

For repairs to officers' quarters, five hundred dollars.

For models for the department of cavalry, two hundred and fifty dollars.

For extension of water-pipes and increase of reservoir, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For targets and batteries for artillery exercise, one hundred and fifty dollars.

For gas-pipes and retorts, extension to cadets' mess-hall, academic hall, and other public buildings, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For stables for dragoon and artillery horses, two thousand four hundred and sixty-eight dollars.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

CHAP. XXXV.—An Act to amend the Act entitled "An Act to ascertain and settle the private Land Claims in the State of California," passed March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-one.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in cases pending in the district courts of the United States in California, on appeal from the decree of the commissioners to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California, under the act of Congress passed March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, if either party shall desire to examine any witness residing in any other district within said State, or shall require the production of any paper, written instrument, book, or document, supposed to be in the possession or power of a witness residing in another district, the court wherein the case is pending, or any judge thereof, being satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, of the materiality of such witness, or of the production of such paper, written instrument, book, or document, as evidence of the case, may order the clerk of said court to issue a subpoena, or a subpoena duces tecum for such witness and for such paper, written instrument, book or document; which subpoena or subpoena duces tecum shall run into any other district in said State, and be served by the marshal of either district, as the court or judge may direct: And the court or judge ordering said writ shall have power to enforce obedience to said process, and punish disobedience by attachment, and in like manner as if said witness resided within the district where the cause may be pending, and all attachments and process necessary to enforce obedience or punish disobedience to the aforesaid writs of subpoena and subpoena duces tecum may be served and executed by the marshal of either district, as the court or judge may direct: Provided, That a witness attending the court under a subpoena issued under the provisions of this act, in a district in which he does not reside, shall be entitled to the same fees for attendance as are allowed by the laws of the State of California to witnesses in similar cases.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

CHAP. XXXVI.—An Act for the Relief of the Hungarian Settlers upon certain tracts of land in Iowa, hitherto reserved from Sale by order of the President, dated January twenty-two, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the right of preemption be, and the same hereby is, extended to all Hungarian settlers on that body of land reserved from sale or location by order of the President of the United States, dated January twenty-second, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, said lands being known and described as follows: northeast quarter of northwest quarter of section ten, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; east half of southeast quarter of section eleven, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; east half of northeast quarter of section fourteen, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; southwest quarter of southeast quarter of section fourteen, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; east half of northeast quarter of section twenty-two, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; southeast quarter of northeast quarter of section twenty-three, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; west half of northeast quarter of section twenty-three, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; west half of northwest quarter of section twenty-three, township sixty-seven, range twenty-six; north half of northeast

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

quarter of section five, township sixty-eight, range twenty-six; east half of northwest quarter of section five, township sixty-eight, range twenty-six; east half of northeast quarter of section six, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; northeast quarter of northwest quarter of section six, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; southwest quarter of northwest quarter of section six, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; southeast quarter of section six, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; west half of southwest quarter of section six, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; northeast quarter of section seven, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; northwest quarter of section seven, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; southwest quarter of southeast quarter of section thirty-two, township sixty-nine, range twenty-six; northeast quarter of section one, township sixty-eight, range twenty-seven; northeast quarter of section two, township sixty-eight, range twenty-seven; northwest quarter of northeast quarter of section one, township sixty-nine, range twenty-seven; northeast quarter of southeast quarter of section one, township sixty-nine, range twenty-seven; northeast quarter of northeast quarter of section twelve, township sixty-nine, range twenty-seven; northeast quarter of northeast quarter of section thirty-six, township seventy, range twenty-seven; northwest quarter of section thirty-six, township seventy, range twenty-seven; west half of southeast quarter of section thirty-six, township seventy, range twenty-seven; north half of southwest quarter of section thirty-six, township seventy, range twenty-seven.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all such Hungarians entitled to the right of preemption to the above-described lands by this act, who may have gone on to said lands prior to January twenty-second, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, or since that time, and have continued to inhabit and improve the same, shall hold their claims, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to each preëmptor, against any other subsequent claimants whatever: Provided further, That said claimants under settlement and cultivation made prior to January twenty-second, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, or prior to the passage of this act, shall make known their claims in writing to the Register at Chariton within three months from the date of publication in said district, of notice to said claimants, of the privileges granted hereby, to be given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in all cases proof and payment must be made at the land office aforesaid, within twelve months from the date of publication of notice aforesaid.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

CHAP. XXXVII.—An Act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the old Custom-House and Site in Bath, Maine, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell at public auction, after first fixing a minimum price therefore, the old custom-house and site at Bath, Maine, when the new custom-house shall be completed and fit for occupation; and he is hereby authorized to use all or so much of the money arising from the sale of said old custom-house and site as shall be necessary to furnish the new custom-house.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

CHAP. XXXVIII.—An Act to authorize the Vestry of Washington Parish to take and inclose certain parts of Streets in the City of Washington, for the purpose of extending the Washington Cemetery, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the vestry of Washington parish shall be, and are hereby, authorized, with the consent of the corporation of the city of Washington, to take, inclose, and use forever, those parts of Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets east, which lie between the north side of G street south and the north side of Water street; and also those parts of south G and south H streets which lie between Seventeenth and Twentieth streets east, for the purpose of enlarging the Washington cemetery: Provided, That the power hereby conferred shall not be exercised as regards such particular portion of either of the aforesaid streets as may pass in front of any lot of ground not owned by the said vestry, until the said vestry shall become the owners of such lot of ground: And provided further, That the said vestry shall not sell, for any purpose whatever, any of the aforesaid parts of streets, but the United States shall retain and hold such parts thereof as may be laid out for burial purposes for the interment of members of Congress, or such officers of the Government as may die in Washington.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That no canal, railroad, street, or alley shall ever be laid out or opened into or through the Washington cemetery, except such avenues or walks as may be laid out by the vestry of Washington parish, for the use and purposes of the said cemetery.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Washington cemetery shall be forever free from taxation.

APPROVED, May 18, 1858.

CHAP. XXXIX.—An act to provide for the Collection and Safe-keeping of Public Archives in the State of California.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be collected and deposited in the surveyor general's office in California, all official books, papers, instruments of writing, documents, archives, official seals, stamps, or dies, that may be found in the unauthorized possession of any individual, relating to and used in the administration of government and public affairs in the department of Upper California, and which belonged to the Government during the existence of Spanish or Mexican authority in Upper California; and the same, when deposited in his office, shall be safely and securely kept by the surveyor general in the archives of his office; and copies thereof, authenticated by the surveyor general under the seal of his office, shall be evidence in all cases where the originals would be evidence: Provided, That, at the time of depositing said books, papers, writings, and documents in said archives, a schedule and accurate description thereof shall be made by the surveyor general, with a statement of the time and place where the same were found, and when they were deposited in the archives, which shall be certified under the seal of the surveyor general and filed in his office; and a certified copy of said schedule shall be transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and also to the Attorney General.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if the surveyor general shall have cause to suspect a concealment of any such official books, papers, writings, documents, archives, or officials seals, stamps, or dies aforesaid, in any particular dwelling-house, building, or place, any judge or commissioner of the United States may, on affidavit showing the facts and circumstances upon which such suspicions are founded, grant to the surveyor general, or to any marshal of the United States, a warrant to enter such house, building, or place, and there to search for such official books, papers, writings, documents, archives, seals, stamps, or dies, and to take possession thereof and deposit them in the archives of the surveyor general's office as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall, without lawful authority, willfully take from the archives of the said surveyor general's office any expediente, map, diseño, book, paper, writing, record, document, seal, stamp, or die; or shall willfully alter, deface, mutilate, injure, or destroy any expediente, book, paper, map, diseño, instrument of writing, document, record, seal, stamp, or die, deposited in said archives; or shall conceal or unlawfully withhold from the possession of the surveyor general, or on demand refuse to deliver to him any expediente, map, diseño, official book, paper, writing, document, archive, record, seal, stamp, or die, relating to or used in the administration of government in the department of Upper California, and belonging to the Government during the existence of Spanish or Mexican authority in said department; or shall willfully alter, deface, mutilate, make away with, or destroy any such official book, expediente, map, diseño, paper, writing, document, archive, record, seal, stamp, or die, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall forfeit and pay a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars, at the discretion of the court, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding ten years, at a like discretion.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall willfully, secretly, and fraudulently place or cause to be placed in or among the archives of the surveyor general's office, any expediente, book, paper, diseño, map, draught, record, or any instrument of writing purporting to be a petition, decree, order, report, concession, grant, confirmation, map, diseño, expediente, or part of an expediente, denouncement, title-paper, or evidence of right, title, or claim to any land, mine, or mineral, or any book, writing, paper, or document whatever, the person so offending shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof by any court of competent jurisdiction, shall forfeit and pay a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three years; or be both fined and imprisoned within said limits, at the discretion of the court.

APPROVED, May 18, 1858.

CHAP. XL.—An Act for the Prevention and Punishment of Frauds in Land Titles in California.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if any person shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited; or willingly aid and assist in the false making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting any petition, certificate, order, report, decree, concession, denouncement, deed, patent, confirmation, diseño, map, expediente, or part of an expediente, or any title-paper, or evidence of right, title, or claim to lands, mines, or minerals in California, or any instrument of writing whatever in relation to lands or mines or minerals in the State of California, for the purpose of setting up or establishing against the United States any claim, right, or title to lands, mines, or minerals within the State of California, or for the purpose of enabling any person to set up or establish any such claim; or if any person, for the purposes aforesaid, or either of them, shall utter or publish as true and genuine, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited petition, certificate, order, report, decree, concession, denouncement, deed, patent, confirmation, diseño, map, expediente, or part of an expediente, title-paper, evidence of right, title, or claim to lands or mines or minerals in the State of California, or any instrument of writing whatever in relation to lands or mines or minerals in the State of California, the person so offending shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor; and, being thereof duly convicted, shall be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for a period not less than three years, and not more than ten years, and shall be fined not exceeding ten thousand dollars.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or shall willingly aid and assist in making, any falsely-dated petition, certificate, order, report, decree, concession, denouncement, deed, patent, confirmation, diseño, map, expediente or part of an expediente, or any title-paper, or written evidence of right, title, or claim, under Mexican authority, to any lands, mines, or minerals in the State of California, or any instrument of writing in relation to lands or mines or minerals in the State of California, having a false date, or falsely purporting to be made by any Mexican officer or authority prior to the seventh day of July,

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

A. D. eighteen hundred and forty-six, for the purpose of setting up or establishing any claim against the United States to lands or mines or minerals within the State of California, or of enabling any person to set up or establish any such claim; or if any person shall sign his name as governor, secretary, or other public officer acting under Mexican authority, to any instrument of writing falsely purporting to be a grant, concession, or denouncement under Mexican authority, and during its existence in California, of lands, mines, or minerals, or falsely purporting to be an informe, report, record, confirmation, or other proceeding on an application for a grant, concession, or denouncement under Mexican authority, during its existence in California, of lands, mines, or minerals, the person so offending shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor; and, being thereof duly convicted, shall be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for a period not less than three years, nor more than ten years, and shall be fined not exceeding ten thousand dollars.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That if any person, for the purpose of setting up or establishing any claim against the United States to lands, mines, or minerals within the State of California, shall present, or cause or procure to be presented, before any court, judge, commission, or commissioner, or other officer of the United States, any false, forged, altered, or counterfeited petition, certificate, order, report, decree, concession, denouncement, deed, patent, diseño, map, espediente or part of an expediente, title-paper, or written evidence of right, title, or claim to lands, minerals, or mines in the State of California, knowing the same to be false, forged, altered, or counterfeited, or any falsely-dated petition, certificate, order, report, decree, concession, denouncement, deed, patent, confirmation, diseño, map, espediente or part of an expediente, title-paper, or written evidence of right, title, or claim to lands, mines, or minerals in California, knowing the same to be falsely dated; or if any person shall prosecute in any court of the United States, by appeal or otherwise, any claim against the United States for lands, mines, or minerals in California, or shall, after the passage of this act, continue to prosecute any claim now pending in said courts against the United States for lands, mines, or minerals in California, which claim is founded upon, or evidenced by, any petition, certificate, order, report, decree, concession, denouncement, deed, patent, confirmation, diseño, map, espediente or part of an expediente, title-paper, or written evidence of right, title, or claim, which has been forged, altered, counterfeited, or falsely dated, knowing the same to be forged, altered, or counterfeited, or falsely dated, the person so offending shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor; and, on conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for a period not less than three years, nor more than ten years, and shall be fined not exceeding ten thousand dollars.

APPROVED, May 18, 1858.

CHAP. XLIII.—An Act to amend an Act entitled "An Act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the Tract of Land in the Territory of Minnesota, belonging to the Half-Breeds or Mixed Bloods of the Dacotah or Sioux Nation of Indians, and for other purposes," approved seventeenth July, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act approved the seventeenth July, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, above referred to, chapter eighty-three, be, and the same is hereby amended, so that the body of land known as the half-breed tract, lying on the west side of Lake Pepin and the Mississippi river, in the Territory of Minnesota, and which is authorized to be surveyed by the said act of eighteen hundred and fifty-four, shall be subject to the operation of the laws regulating the sale and disposition of the public lands; and settlements heretofore made thereon are declared valid so far as they do not conflict with settlements made by half-breeds, and that the settlers shall have the benefit of the pre-

emption laws of the United States, any location of half-breed scrip thereon, after the date of the settlement, notwithstanding: Provided, The declaration of preemption be filed within three months after public notice is given of the passage of this act in the proper land district: And provided, That when two or more persons have settled on the same quarter section, prior to the passage of this act, they shall be permitted to enter the same, and the rights of each shall be determined according to the provisions of the act relating to preemptions, passed March third, eighteen hundred and forty-three.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tract or subdivision, within the body of land aforesaid, which shall have been settled upon in good faith by, and is in the occupancy of, any of the said half-breeds or mixed bloods; which lands, so settled upon and occupied by the half-breeds, are hereby expressly declared to be subject to no other disposition than location by the "certificates" or "scrip" authorized to be issued by the said act of eighteen hundred and fifty-four, for the benefit of said Indians. Nor shall the provisions of this act extend to any lands which may have been located prior to its passage with half-breed scrip, with the consent of the settlers thereon.

APPROVED, May 19, 1858.

CHAP. XLIV.—An Act to create a Land District in the Territory of New Mexico.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the public lands in the Territory of New Mexico, to which the Indian title shall have been extinguished, shall constitute a land district, to be called the "district of New Mexico," the office for which shall be established at such place within said district as the President of the United States may from time to time direct.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, for the purpose of carrying this act into effect, the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess thereof, a register and receiver for the district hereby created, who shall be required to reside at the site of the office, and whose powers, duties, obligations, and responsibilities shall be the same as are now prescribed by law for other land officers, (so far as they apply to these officers.)

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not take effect in less than six months after its passage.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. XLV.—An Act for the Relief of Isaac Drew and other settlers upon the Public Lands in the State of Wisconsin.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Isaac Drew, and such other persons as may have settled, in good faith, in the State of Wisconsin, since the first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty, upon any portion of the lands that were erroneously selected by said State as a part of the five hundred thousand acre grant, which selections were not confirmed, and who were at that date, or since that time have become, an actual settler and housekeeper, and made improvements on any tract embraced among said erroneous selections, are hereby entitled to the same right of preemption, and upon the same terms and conditions, as are prescribed by an act entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and grant preemption rights," approved September fourteenth, [fourth,] eighteen hundred and forty-one: Provided, Such lands shall be paid for by such settlers at the minimum price.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That where persons have erroneously entered any of the lands named in the first section of this act, and shall satisfactorily show to the register and receiver that, prior to, or within three months after, the passage of this act, they have made an actual settlement on the lands mentioned in the first section, the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to issue patents therefor: Provided, That it shall be satisfactorily made to appear to him that the entry of the tract or tracts sought to be patented does not interfere with the rights or occupancy of any actual settler.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. XLVI.—An Act to prevent the inconvenient accumulation in the Post Office Department of Postmasters' Quarterly Returns.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General may, from time to time, in his discretion, dispose of any quarterly returns of mails sent or received, preserving the accounts current, and all vouchers accompanying such accounts, and use such portions of the proceeds thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of separating and disposing of the same: Provided, That the accounts shall be preserved entire at least two years.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LVIII.—An Act for extending the Land Laws east of the Cascade Mountains, in Oregon and Washington Territories.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the existing laws relating to the survey and disposal of the public lands in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, west of the Cascade Mountains, be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable also to the lands lying east of said mountains within said Territories.

APPROVED, May 29, 1858.

CHAP. LIX.—An Act to amend the "Act to incorporate the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind," approved February sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in addition to the provision made in the above-recited act for the maintenance and tuition of pupils in the said institution, the sum of three thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly, shall be allowed, for five years, for the payment of salaries and incidental expenses of said institution, and that three thousand dollars be, and is hereby, appropriated for the present fiscal year, payable out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the deaf and dumb and the blind children of all persons in the military and naval service of the United States, while such persons are actually in such service, shall be entitled to instruction in said institution, on the same terms as deaf and dumb and blind children belonging to the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all receipts and disbursements under this act shall be reported to the Secretary of the Interior, as required in the sixth section of the act to which this is an amendment.

APPROVED, May 29, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXI.—An Act to provide for the Location of certain confirmed Private Land Claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the decisions in favor of certain land claimants herein made by the recorder of land titles in the State of Missouri and the two commissioners associated with him, by virtue of an act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in Missouri," approved July nine, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, and an act supplemental thereto, approved second March, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, as entered in the transcript of decisions transmitted by the said recorder and commissioners to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which said claims are named and numbered as follows: Manuel de Liza, number thirty-three; John Coontz and Hempstead number forty-four; Matthew Saucier, number fifty-seven; Charles Tayon, number sixty-seven; the sons of Joseph M. Pepin, number

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

seventy-four; Louis Lorimier, number eighty-seven; Bartholomew Cousin, number eighty-nine; Manuel Gonzales Moro, number ninety-five; Seneca Rawlins, number one hundred and four; William L. Long, number one hundred and six; Joachim Liza, number one hundred and thirty-three; Francis Lacombe, number thirty-four; Israel Dodge, number three hundred and thirty-eight; Joseph Silvain, number two hundred and ninety-three; John P. Cabanis, number two hundred and ninety-eight; William Hartley, number three hundred and one; Andrew Chevalier, number two hundred and ninety-two; William Morrison, number three hundred and seven; Solomon Belieu, number three hundred and eight; Paschal Detchemendez, number three hundred and nine; Baptiste Amure, number three hundred and ten; Alexander Maurice, number three hundred and twenty-three; John Baptiste Vallee, number three hundred and thirty-four; said decisions above named being in the first class of claims, acted upon by said board; also the claim of Regis Loisel, number six, in the second class, acted on by said board be, and the same are hereby confirmed to the respective claimants or their legal representatives.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the decisions in favor of land claimants made by P. Grimes, Joshua Lewis, and Thomas B. Robertson, commissioners appointed to adjust private land claims in the eastern district of the Territory of Orleans, communicated to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury, on the ninth day of January, one thousand eight hundred and twelve, and which is [are] found in the American State Papers, Public Lands, (Duff Green's edition,) volume two, from page two hundred and twenty-four to three hundred and sixty-seven, inclusive, be, and the same are hereby confirmed, saving and reserving, however, to all adverse claimants the right to assert the validity of their claims in a court or courts of justice: Provided, however, That any claim so recommended for confirmation, but which may have been rejected, in whole or in part, by any subsequent board of commissioners, be, and the same is hereby, specially excepted from confirmation.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the locations authorized by the preceding section shall be entered with the register of the proper land office, who shall, on application for that purpose, make out for such claimant, or his legal representatives, (as the case may be,) a certificate of location, which shall be transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the said commissioner that said certificate has been fairly obtained, according to the true intent and meaning of this act, then, and in that case, patents shall be issued for the land so located as in other cases; and for each and every certificate as aforesaid, issued by the register of any land office, he shall receive the sum of one dollar; that in all cases of confirmation by this act, or where any private land claim has been confirmed by Congress, and the same, in whole or in part, has not been located or satisfied, either for want of a specific location prior to such confirmation, or for any reason whatsoever, other than a discovery of fraud in such claim subsequent to such confirmation, it shall be the duty of the surveyor general of the district in which such claim was situated, upon satisfactory proof that such claim has been so confirmed, and that the same, in whole or in part, remains unsatisfied, to issue to the claimant, or his legal representatives, a certificate of location for a quantity of land equal to that so confirmed and unsatisfied; which certificate may be located upon any of the public lands of the United States subject to sale at private entry, at a price not exceeding one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre: Provided, That such location shall conform to legal divisions and subdivisions.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the register of the proper land office, upon the location of such certificate, shall issue to the person entitled thereto a certificate of entry, upon which, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that such certificate has been fairly obtained, according to the true intent and meaning of this act, a patent shall issue as in other cases.

APPROVED, June 2, 1858.

NEW SERIES—No. 36.

CHAP. LXXXII.—An Act making Appropriations for the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Expenses of Government for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, namely:

Legislative.—For compensation and mileage of Senators, one hundred and sixty-two thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate, viz: Secretary of the Senate, three thousand six hundred dollars; officer charged with disbursements of the Senate, four hundred and eighty dollars; chief clerk, two thousand five hundred dollars; principal clerk, and principal executive clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars each; eight clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at one thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars each; keeper of the stationery, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two dollars; two messengers, at one thousand and eighty dollars each; one page, at five hundred dollars; Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, two thousand dollars; assistant-doorkeeper, one thousand seven hundred dollars; postmaster to the Senate, one thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars; assistant postmaster and mail carrier, one thousand four hundred and forty dollars; two mail boys, at nine hundred dollars each; superintendent of the document room, one thousand five hundred dollars; two assistants in document room, at one thousand two hundred dollars each; superintendent of the folding room, one thousand five hundred dollars; two messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, at one thousand five hundred dollars each; sixteen messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each; superintendent in charge of Senate furnaces, one thousand two hundred dollars; assistant in charge of furnaces, six hundred dollars; laborer in private passage, six hundred dollars; two laborers, at four hundred and eighty dollars each; clerk or secretary to the President of the Senate, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two dollars; draughtsman, one thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars; clerk to the Committee on Finance, one thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars; clerk to the Committee on Claims, one thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars; clerk of printing records, one thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars—making seventy-eight thousand nine hundred and fourteen dollars.

For the additional compensation allowed by the resolution of the Senate of the eleventh of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, to a messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, for the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, three hundred and thirty dollars.

For the contingent expenses of the Senate, viz:

For binding, fifty thousand dollars.

For lithographing and engraving, forty-five thousand dollars.

For stationery, twelve thousand dollars.

For newspapers, three thousand dollars.

For Congressional Globe and binding the same, twenty-four thousand two hundred and seventeen dollars and twenty cents.

For reporting proceedings, ten thousand four hundred dollars.

For clerks to committees, pages, police, horses, and carryalls, twenty-six thousand five hundred and eighty dollars and fifty cents.

For miscellaneous items, twenty-thousand dollars.

For stationery for fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, five thousand dollars for the Senate; and for stationery for fiscal year ending thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, five thousand dollars for the House of Representatives.

For compensation and mileage of members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories, five hundred and eighty thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the House of Representatives, viz: Clerk of the House of Representatives, three thousand six hundred dollars; two clerks, at two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars each; seven clerks, at one thousand eight hundred dollars; clerk in charge of books for members, one thousand eight hundred dollars; reading clerk, one thousand eight hundred dollars; librarian, one thousand eight hundred dollars; clerk in charge of the stationery, one thousand eight hundred dollars; principal messenger in the office, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two dollars; three messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each; Sergeant-at-Arms, two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars; clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, one thousand eight hundred dollars; messenger to the Sergeant-at-Arms, one thousand two hundred dollars; postmaster, two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars; one messenger in the office, one thousand seven hundred and forty dollars; four messengers, at one thousand four hundred and forty dollars each; Doorkeeper, two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars; superintendent of the folding room, one thousand eight hundred dollars; superintendent and assistant in the document room, at one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two dollars each; messenger in charge of the Hall, seventeen hundred and forty dollars; five messengers, at one thousand five hundred dollars each; eight messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each; six messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each; messenger to the Speaker, one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two dollars; clerk to the Committee of Claims, one thousand eight hundred dollars; clerk to the Committee of Ways and Means, one thousand eight hundred dollars—making eighty-six thousand seven hundred and forty-eight dollars.

For contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, viz:

For binding documents, one hundred thousand dollars

For furniture, repairs, and boxes for members, ten thousand dollars.

For stationery, fifteen thousand dollars.

For horses, carriages, and saddle horses, six thousand dollars.

For fuel, oil, and candles, three thousand six hundred dollars.

For newspapers, twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

For engraving, electrotyping, and lithographing, one hundred thousand dollars.

For Capitol police, five thousand eight hundred and ninety dollars.

For laborers, six thousand two hundred and eighty-five dollars.

For pages and temporary mail boys, four thousand two hundred dollars.

For folding documents, including pay of folders, wrapping paper, twine, and paste, thirty thousand dollars.

For cartage, two thousand dollars.

For miscellaneous items, thirty thousand dollars.

For twenty-four copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each member and Delegate of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, seventeen thousand three hundred and fifty-two dollars.

For binding twenty-four copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each member and Delegate of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight thousand and ninety-seven dollars and sixty cents: Provided, That no greater price shall be paid for the same than sixty cents for each volume or part, actually bound and delivered.

For reporting the debates of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight thousand dollars.

For the usual additional compensation to the reporters for the Congressional Globe for reporting the proceedings of the House of Representatives for the next regular session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight hundred dollars to each reporter, four thousand dollars.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

To pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the third session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, eight hundred dollars each, three thousand two hundred dollars.

To pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight hundred dollars each, three thousand two hundred dollars.

To pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight hundred dollars each, three thousand two hundred dollars.

For one hundred copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, and for binding the same, for the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, for the use of the Library of the House of Representatives, four hundred and forty dollars.

For the compensation of the draughtsman and clerks employed upon the land maps, clerks to committees, and temporary clerks in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, seventeen thousand and eight hundred dollars.

For two mail boys, at nine hundred dollars each, and the messenger in charge of the south extension, three thousand three hundred dollars.

For furnishing the committee rooms, retiring rooms, and offices in the south wing of the Capitol extension with gas-fixtures, chandeliers, iron safes, and other furniture, forty thousand dollars.

Library of Congress.

For compensation of Librarian, three Assistant Librarians, and messenger, nine thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses of said Library, one thousand dollars.

For coal, and fireman for furnaces to warm the Library, six hundred dollars.

For purchase of books for said Library, five thousand dollars.

For purchase of law books for said Library, two thousand dollars.

Botanic Garden.

For procuring manure, tools, fuel, repairs, purchasing trees and shrubs for Botanic Garden, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, twenty-three hundred dollars.

For pay of horticulturist and assistants in the Botanic Garden and green houses, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, five thousand one hundred and twenty-one dollars and fifty cents.

For reglazing and repairing damages to the green-houses by the hail storm of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, one thousand and forty four dollars and sixteen cents.

Public Printing.

For compensation of the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office, eleven thousand five hundred and four-tenths dollars.

For contingent expenses of his office, viz: For blank books, stationery, postage, advertising for proposals for paper, furniture, traveling expenses, cartage and labor in storing and transportation of paper, and miscellaneous items, two thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars.

For rent of wareroom, two hundred and fifty dollars.

For paper required for the printing of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, one hundred thousand dollars.

For printing required for the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, seventy thousand dollars.

Court of Claims.

For salaries of three judges of the Court of Claims, the solicitor, assistant solicitor, deputy solicitor, clerk and assistant clerk, and messenger thereof, twenty-seven thousand three hundred dollars.

For stationery, fuel, gas or other lights, printing, labor, and miscellaneous items for the Court of Claims, four thousand dollars.

For commissioners' fees for taking testimony in behalf of the Government, fees of witnesses and of agents or attorneys to be appointed by the solicitor to attend to the taking of depositions, five thousand dollars.

Executive.

For compensation of the President of the United States, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For compensation of the Vice President of the United States, eight thousand dollars.

For compensation to secretary to sign patents for lands, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation to the private secretary, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States, four thousand six hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of the executive office, including stationery therefor, three hundred and fifty dollars.

Department of State.

For compensation of the Secretary of State and Assistant Secretary of State, clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office, fifty-seven thousand eight hundred dollars.

For the Incidental and Contingent Expenses of said Department.

For proof-reading, packing, and distributing laws and documents, including cases and transportation, and miscellaneous expenses, five thousand dollars.

For stationery, blank books, binding, furniture, fixtures, repairs, painting and glazing, six thousand five hundred dollars.

For newspapers, six hundred dollars.

For miscellaneous items, two thousand dollars.

To enable the Secretary of State to purchase fifty copies, each, of volumes twenty-two and twenty-three of Howard's Reports of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, five hundred dollars.

To enable the Secretary of State to carry into effect the act entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union," ten thousand dollars.

Northeast Executive Building.

For compensation of four watchmen and two laborers of the northeast executive building, three thousand six hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said building, viz: for fuel, lights, repairs, and miscellaneous expenses, four thousand three hundred dollars.

Treasury Department.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office, forty-eight thousand six hundred dollars.

For compensation of the First Comptroller, and the clerks, messenger, and laborers in his office, twenty-eight thousand three hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Second Comptroller, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office, twenty-six thousand eight hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the First Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer in his office, thirty-five thousand nine hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Second Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer in his office, thirty-five thousand five hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation to the Third Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office, one hundred and sixty-two thousand six hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Fourth Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Fifth Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office, seventeen thousand eight hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department; and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office, one hundred and seventy-two thousand three hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office, twenty-five thousand seven hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office, fifty thousand three hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office, seventeen thousand one hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Commissioner of the Customs, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office, twenty thousand four hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer of the Light-House Board, nine thousand two hundred and forty dollars.

Contingent Expenses of the Treasury Department.

In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury: For copying, blank-books, stationery, binding, sealing ships' registers, translating foreign languages, advertising, and extra clerk hire for preparing and collecting information to be laid before Congress—said clerks to be employed only during the session of Congress or when indispensably necessary to enable the Department to answer some call made by either House of Congress at one session to be answered at another; and no such extra clerk shall receive more than three dollars and thirty-three and one third cents per day for the time actually and necessarily employed—and for miscellaneous items, thirteen thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.

In the office of the First Comptroller:

For furniture, blank-books, binding, stationery, public documents, State and territorial statutes, and miscellaneous items, and the Union and National Intelligencer newspapers, two thousand two hundred dollars.

In the office of the Second Comptroller:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, pay for the National Intelligencer and Union, to be filed and preserved for the use of the office, office furniture, and miscellaneous items, one thousand five hundred dollars.

In the office of the First Auditor:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, cases for records and official papers, and miscellaneous items, including subscription for the Union and National Intelligencer, to be filed for the use of the office, one thousand eight hundred dollars.

In the office of the Second Auditor:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office, one thousand two hundred dollars.

In the office of the Third Auditor:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, carpeting, two newspapers, the Union and Intelligencer, preserving files and papers, bounty-land service, miscellaneous items and arrearages, three thousand five hundred and forty dollars.

In the office of the Fourth Auditor:

For stationery, books, binding, labor, and miscellaneous items, one thousand one hundred dollars.

In the office of the Fifth Auditor:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, carpeting, and miscellaneous expenses, in which are included two daily newspapers, one thousand dollars.

In the office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department:

For stationery, blank-books, binding, ruling, miscellaneous items, for file-boards, repairs, cases and desks for safe-keeping of papers, furniture, lights, washing towels, ice, horse for messenger, telegraphic dispatches, and stoves, twelve thousand five hundred and fifty dollars.

In the office of the Treasurer:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, one thousand dollars.

In the office of the Register:

For ruling and full-binding books for recording collectors' quarterly abstracts of commerce and navigation, and blank abstracts for their use, blank-books, binding, and stationery, arranging and binding canceled marine papers, and records, and miscellaneous items, including office furniture and carpeting, copper-plate printed certificates of registers of vessels, and crew lists, ten thousand dollars:

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

In the office of the Solicitor:

For blank-books, binding, labor, and miscellaneous items, and for statutes and reports, two thousand two hundred dollars.

In the office of the Commissioner of Customs:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, two thousand dollars.

Light-House Board:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, miscellaneous expenses, and postage, seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For the general purposes of the Southeast Executive Building.

For compensation of eight watchmen and nine laborers of the southeast executive building, ten thousand two hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said building, viz: Fuel, lights, repairs, and miscellaneous, eight thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation of four watchmen and two laborers for the south extension of the southeast executive building; three thousand six hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said building, fuel, and miscellaneous items, three thousand dollars.

Department of the Interior.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, and the clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, and laborers in his office, thirty-six thousand nine hundred dollars.

For compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the recorder, draughtsman, assistant draughtsman, clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, packers, watchmen, and laborers in his office, one hundred and seventy-two thousand six hundred and ninety dollars; and the authority conferred upon the principal clerk of public lands, of Acting Commissioner ad interim, in the absence, and so forth, of the Commissioner, by the second section of the act reorganizing the General Land Office, approved the fourth of July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, shall be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the chief clerk of said General Land Office.

For additional clerks in the General Land Office, under the act of third March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, granting bounty lands, and for laborers employed therein, fifty-eight thousand four hundred dollars: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, at his discretion, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any portion of said appropriation for piece work, or by the day, week, month, or year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair.

For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, watchmen, and laborer, in his office, thirty-one thousand nine hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office, one hundred and nine thousand three hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and the clerk in his office, three thousand two hundred dollars.

Contingent Expenses—Department of the Interior.

Office of the Secretary of the Interior:

For books, stationery, furniture, fuel, lights, and other contingencies, and for books and maps for the library, seven thousand two hundred dollars.

For expense of packing and distributing the congressional journals and documents, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the joint resolution of Congress approved twenty-eighth January, eighteen hundred and fifty seven, six thousand dollars.

For the preservation of the collections of the exploring and surveying expeditions of the Government, four thousand dollars.

For the transfer to, and new arrangement of those collections in, the Smithsonian Institution, one thousand dollars.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the superintendent of the building occupied by said Secretary and his Department, from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, to the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, the allowance to be made to such superintendent, with his salary as clerk, not to exceed two thousand dollars per annum, the sum of seven hundred dollars.

General Land Office:

For cash system and military patents, under laws prior to twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty; patent and other records; tract books and blank-books for this and the district land offices; binding plats and field notes; stationery, furniture, and repairs of same, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office, thirty-three thousand five hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses, in addition, under swamp land act of twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty, military bounty acts of twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty, and twenty-second March, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and act thirty-first August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, for the satisfaction of Virginia land warrants, twenty-six thousand one hundred dollars.

For fuel, lights, and incidental expenses attending the same, including pay of furnace keepers, four thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses under the act of third March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, granting bounty lands, and amendatory act of fourteenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to wit: For patents, patent and other records, stationery, and miscellaneous items on account of bounty lands under said acts, thirteen thousand dollars.

Office of Indian Affairs:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, fuel, and lights, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office, five thousand dollars.

Pension Office:

For stationery, binding books, furniture, and repairing the same, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office, and for books for the library, ten thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses in the said office under the bounty land act of third March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five:

For engraving and retouching plates for bounty land warrants, printing and binding the same, stationery, blank-books for register's office, furniture, and miscellaneous items, fifteen thousand dollars: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior, at his discretion, shall be authorized to use any portion of said appropriation for clerical services by the day, week, month, or year, at such rates as he may deem just and fair.

Surveyors General and their Clerks.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Illinois and Missouri, and the clerks in his office, five thousand eight hundred and twenty dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Louisiana, and the clerks in his office, four thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Florida, and the clerks in his office, five thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Wisconsin and Iowa, and the clerks in his office, eight thousand three hundred dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Arkansas, and the clerks in his office, eight thousand three hundred dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Oregon, and the clerks in his office, seven thousand five hundred dollars.

For rent of surveyor general's office in Oregon, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of California and the clerks in his office, fifteen thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Washington Territory and the clerks in his office, seven thousand dollars.

For office rent for the surveyor general of Washington Territory, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, three thousand dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of New Mexico, and the clerks in his office, seven thousand dollars.

For compensation of translators in the office of the surveyor general of New Mexico, two thousand dollars.

For rent of the surveyor general's office in New Mexico, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, three thousand dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Kansas and Nebraska, and the clerks in his office, eight thousand three hundred dollars.

For compensation of the surveyor general of Minnesota, and the clerks in his office, eight thousand three hundred dollars.

For compensation of clerks in the offices of the surveyors general, to be apportioned to them according to the exigencies of the public service, and to be employed in transcribing field notes of surveys, for the purpose of preserving them at the seat of Government, forty-one thousand dollars.

For salary of the recorder of land titles in Missouri, five hundred dollars.

War Department.

For compensation of the Secretary of War, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer in his office, twenty-two thousand dollars.

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Adjutant General, thirteen thousand six hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Quartermaster General, sixteen thousand four hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Paymaster General, twelve thousand four hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer in the office of the Commissary General, ten thousand and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Surgeon General, five thousand two hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer in the office of Topographical Engineers, ten thousand six hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Chief Engineer, eight thousand two hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Colonel of Ordnance, twelve thousand two hundred and forty dollars.

Contingent Expenses of the War Department.

Office of the Secretary of War:

For blank-books, stationery, books, maps, extra clerk hire, and miscellaneous items, five thousand five hundred dollars.

Office of the Adjutant General:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, two thousand dollars.

Office of the Quartermaster General:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, one thousand two hundred dollars.

Office of the Paymaster General:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, five hundred dollars.

Office of the Chief Engineer:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, including two daily Washington papers, nine hundred dollars.

Office of the Surgeon General:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, four hundred dollars.

Office of Colonel of Ordnance:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, nine hundred and fifty dollars.

Office of the Colonel of Topographical Engineers:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, one thousand two hundred dollars.

For the General Purposes of the Northwest Executive Building.

For compensation of four watchmen and two laborers of the northwest executive building, three thousand six hundred dollars.

For fuel, light, and miscellaneous items, four thousand dollars.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

For the General Purposes of the Building corner of F and Seventeenth Streets.

For compensation of the superintendent, four watchmen, and two laborers, for said building, three thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars. And the compensation of superintendent may be allowed to the clerk who has performed, or may hereafter perform, the duties of that office; the allowance to be made to such superintendent, with his salary as clerk, not to exceed two thousand dollars.

For fuel, compensation of firemen, and miscellaneous items, four thousand eight hundred dollars.

Navy Department.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer, in his office, twenty-nine thousand six hundred dollars.

For compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Navy-Yards and Docks, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office, fourteen thousand one hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office, twelve thousand three hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repairs, and of the engineer-in-chief, and the clerks, messenger, and laborers in his office, twenty-one thousand three hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, eight thousand eight hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office, nine thousand five hundred and forty dollars.

Contingent Expenses of the Navy Department.Office Secretary of the Navy:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, newspapers, periodicals, and miscellaneous items, two thousand eight hundred and forty dollars.

Bureau of Yards and Docks:

For stationery, books, plans, and drawings, eight hundred dollars.

Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography:

For blank-books, stationery, and miscellaneous items, seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repairs:

For blank-books, binding, stationery, printing, and miscellaneous items, eight hundred dollars.

Bureau of Provisions and Clothing:

For blank-books, stationery, and miscellaneous items, seven hundred dollars.

Bureau of Medicine and Surgery:

For blank-books, stationery, and miscellaneous items, four hundred and fifty dollars.

For the General Purposes of the Southwest Executive Building.

For compensation of four watchmen of the southwest executive building, two thousand four hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said building, viz:

For labor, fuel, lights, and miscellaneous items, three thousand nine hundred and thirteen dollars.

Post Office Department.

For compensation of the Postmaster General, three Assistant Postmasters General, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messengers, watchmen, and laborers of said Department, one hundred and fifty-seven thousand eight hundred dollars.

Contingent Expenses of said Department.

For blank-books, binding, and stationery, fuel for the General Post Office building, including the Auditor's Office, oil, gas, and candles, printing, day watchman, and for miscellaneous items, eleven thousand dollars.

For repairs of the General Post Office building, for office furniture, glazing, painting, whitewashing, and for keeping the fire-places and furnaces in order, four thousand dollars.

To meet the expenses incident to the completion of a large portion of the General Post Office extension, viz:

For furnishing partially eighty-one rooms, incidental expenses in all other portions of the new building, fuel, gas, candles, day watchman, miscellaneous items, and ten laborers at six hundred dollars each, twenty-eight thousand dollars.

Printing for Executive Departments.

For paper and printing for the Executive Departments, including the paper, printing, and binding of the annual statement of commerce and navigation of the United States, and the paper and printing of the annual estimates of appropriations, fifty-five thousand dollars.

Mint of the United States at Philadelphia.

For salaries of the director, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, chief coiner and engraver, assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and seven clerks, twenty-seven thousand nine hundred dollars.

For wages of workmen and adjusters, seventy-four thousand eight hundred dollars.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage, in addition to other available funds, seventy-five thousand dollars.

For specimens of ores and coins to be reserved at the Mint, three hundred dollars.

For transportation of bullion from New York assay office to the United States Mint for coinage, ten thousand dollars.

At San Francisco, California.

For salaries of superintendent, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, coiner, and five clerks, twenty-six thousand four hundred and fifty-five dollars.

For wages of workmen and adjusters, one hundred and sixty-six thousand eight hundred and ninety-four dollars.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage, in addition to other available funds, twenty-two thousand six hundred and six dollars.

At New Orleans.

For salaries of superintendent, treasurer, assayer, coiner, melter and refiner, and three clerks, eighteen thousand three hundred dollars.

For wages of workmen, twenty-two thousand dollars.

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage, in addition to other available funds, twenty thousand nine hundred dollars.

At Charlotte, North Carolina.

For salaries of superintendent, coiner, assayer, and clerk, four thousand five hundred dollars.

At Dahlonega, Georgia.

For salaries of superintendent, coiner, assayer, and clerk, five thousand three hundred dollars.

For wages of workmen, one thousand two hundred dollars.

Assay Office, New York.

For salaries of officers and clerks, twenty-one thousand one hundred dollars.

Government in the Territories.

TERRITORY OF OREGON.

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and Secretary, twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said Territory, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, twenty thousand dollars.

TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO.

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary, twelve thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses of said Territory, one thousand dollars.

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, twenty thousand dollars.

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary, twelve thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses of said Territory, one thousand five hundred dollars.

TERRITORY OF WASHINGTON.

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary, twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said Territory, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, twenty thousand dollars.

TERRITORY OF NEBRASKA.

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary, ten thousand five hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said Territory, one thousand dollars.

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, twenty thousand dollars.

TERRITORY OF KANSAS.

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary, ten thousand five hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of said Territory, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly, twenty thousand dollars.

TERRITORY OF MINNESOTA.

For defraying the expenses incurred in taking the census of the Territory of Minnesota, under the act approved twenty-sixth February, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, twenty thousand dollars: Provided, The compensation to the officers taking the same shall not exceed that allowed by the acts of twenty-third May, eighteen hundred and fifty, and thirtieth August, eighteen hundred and fifty, to those who took the census in California, Oregon, Utah, and New Mexico.

Judiciary.

For salaries of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and eight associate justices, fifty-four thousand five hundred dollars.

For salaries of the district judges, one hundred and eight thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For salary of the circuit judge of California, six thousand dollars.

For salaries of the chief justice of the District of Columbia, the associate judges, and the judges of the criminal court and the orphans' court, fifteen thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Office of the Attorney General.

For salaries of the Attorney General, and the clerks and messenger in his office, eighteen thousand one hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of the office of the Attorney General, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For purchase of law and necessary books, and binding, for the office of the Attorney General, one thousand dollars.

For the purchase of deficient State reports and statutes for the office of the Attorney General, one thousand dollars.

For fuel and labor for the office of the Attorney General, one thousand dollars.

For furniture and book-cases for office of the Attorney General, one thousand dollars.

For legal assistance and other necessary expenditures in the disposal of private land claims in California, twelve thousand dollars.

For services of special counsel and other extraordinary expenses, in defending the title of the United States to public property in California, forty thousand dollars.

For the employment of such number of clerks, not exceeding three, by the district attorney of the northern district of California, as may be necessary to transcribe the records of the district court in land cases upon which appeals have been or may be taken to the Supreme Court, such sum as may be necessary is hereby appropriated, provided the compensation shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars a month for each; and that such clerks shall not be employed under the authority of this act after the third day of March, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For salary of the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court, one thousand three hundred dollars.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

For compensation of the district attorneys, eleven thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.
For compensation of the marshals, ten thousand four hundred dollars.

Independent Treasury.

For salaries of the assistant treasurers of the United States at New York, Boston, Charleston, and St. Louis, sixteen thousand five hundred dollars.

For additional salaries of the treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia of one thousand dollars, and of the treasurer of the branch mint at New Orleans of five hundred dollars, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For salaries of five of the additional clerks authorized by the acts of sixth August, eighteen hundred and forty-six, and paid under acts of twelfth August, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, five thousand seven hundred dollars.

For salary of additional clerk in office of assistant treasurer at Boston, one thousand two hundred dollars.

For salaries of clerks, messengers, and watchmen, in the office of the assistant treasurer at New York, thirteen thousand nine hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses under the act for the safe-keeping, collecting, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue, of sixth August, eighteen hundred and forty-six, ten thousand dollars, in addition to premium received on transfer drafts: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for clerical services.

For salaries of nine supervising and fifty local inspectors, appointed under act thirtieth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, for the better protection of the lives of passengers by steamboats, with travelling and other expenses incurred by them, eighty thousand dollars.

Expenses of the Collection of Revenue from Lands.

To meet the expenses of collecting the revenue from the sale of public lands in the several States and Territories:

For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys, one hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

For defraying the expenses of the Supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; also for jurors and witnesses, in aid of the funds arising from fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred in the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, and previous years; and likewise for defraying the expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, and of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States, and for the safe-keeping of prisoners, one million dollars.

Penitentiary.

For compensation of the warden, clerk, physician, chaplain, assistant keepers, guards, and matron of the penitentiary of the District of Columbia, twelve thousand five hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of three inspectors of said penitentiary, seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For the support and maintenance of said penitentiary, seven thousand nine hundred and twenty dollars and twenty-five cents.

For compensation of two additional guards, hereby authorized, thirteen hundred and twenty dollars.

For compensation, in part, for the messenger in charge of the main furnace in the Capitol, four hundred and twenty dollars.

For stationery, blank-books, plans, drawings, and other contingent expenses of the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, two hundred and fifty dollars.

For compensation to the laborer in charge of the water-closets in the Capitol, four hundred and thirty-eight dollars.

For compensation to the public gardener, one thousand four hundred and forty dollars.

For compensation of twenty-two laborers employed in the public grounds and President's garden, thirteen thousand two hundred dollars.

For compensation of the keeper of the western gate, Capitol square, eight hundred and seventy-six dollars.

For compensation of two day watchmen employed in the Capitol square, one thousand two hundred dollars.

For compensation of two night watchmen employed at the President's house, one thousand two hundred dollars.

For compensation of the doorkeeper at the President's house, six hundred dollars.

For compensation of the assistant doorkeeper at the President's house, six hundred dollars.

For compensation of one night watchman employed for the better protection of the buildings lying south of the Capitol, and used as public stables and carpenters' shops, six hundred dollars.

For compensation of four draw-keepers at the Potomac bridge, and for fuel, oil, and lamps, five thousand five hundred and eighty-four dollars and forty cents.

For compensation of two draw-keepers at the two bridges across the eastern branch of the Potomac, and for fuel, oil, and lamps, one thousand one hundred and eighty dollars.

For compensation of the auxiliary guard, and for fuel and oil for lamps, nineteen thousand four hundred dollars.

For furnace-keeper at the President's house, six hundred dollars.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the estimates for the various Executive Departments shall designate not only the amount required to be appropriated for the next fiscal year, but also the amount of the outstanding appropriation, if there be any, which will probably be required to be used for each particular item of expenditure.

APPROVED, June 2, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXIV.—An Act declaring the Title to Land Warrants in certain Cases.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when proof has been, or shall hereafter be, filed in the Pension Office, during the lifetime of a claimant, establishing, to the satisfaction of that office, his or her right to a warrant for military services, and such warrant has not been, or may not hereafter be, issued until after the death of the claimant, and all such warrants as have been heretofore issued subsequent to the death of the claimant, the title to such warrants shall vest in the widow, if there be one, and if there be no widow, then in the heirs or legatees of the claimant; and all such warrants, and all other warrants issued pursuant to existing laws, shall be treated as personal chattels, and may be conveyed by assignment of such widow, heirs, or legatees, or by the legal representatives of the deceased claimant, for the use of such heirs or legatees only.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the first section of the act approved March twenty-two, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes, shall be so extended as to embrace land warrants issued under the act of the third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXV.—An Act to extend an act entitled "An act to continue Half Pay to certain Widows and Orphans," approved February three, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all those surviving widows and minor children who have been, or may be, granted and allowed five years' half pay under the provisions of any law or laws of the United States, be, and they are hereby, granted a continuance of such half pay, under the following terms and limitations, viz: to such widows during life, and to such child or children, where there is no widow, whilst under the age of sixteen years, to commence from the expiration of the half pay provided for by the first section of the act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February three, eight-

teen hundred and fifty-three: Provided, however, That in case of the marriage or death of any such widow, the half pay shall go to the child or children of the deceased officer or soldier whilst under the age of sixteen years; and, in like manner, the child or children of such deceased officer or soldier, when there is no widow, shall be paid no longer than while there are children or a child under the age aforesaid: And provided further, That the half pay of such widows and orphans shall be half the monthly pay of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the infantry of the regular Army of the United States, and no more, and that no greater sum shall be allowed to any such widow or minor children than the half pay of a lieutenant colonel: And provided also, That this act shall not be construed to apply to or embrace the case of any person or persons now receiving a pension for life; and, further, that wherever half pay shall have been granted by any special act of Congress, and is renewed or continued under the provisions of this act, the same shall commence from the date hereof.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions renewed and continued by this act, shall be payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXVI.—An Act Confirming Locations of Land Warrants under certain circumstances.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases in which locations have been made with bounty land warrants on lands which were subject to entry at private sale, but upon individual competition were put up to the highest bidder, and the excess paid for in cash, such locations shall be, and they are hereby confirmed, if in all other respects regular; and authority is hereby given to issue patents accordingly: Provided, That such confirmation shall only extend to cases existing prior to the passage of this act.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

CHAP. XCI.—An Act making an Appropriation for the Payment of Clerks employed in the offices of the Registers of the Land Offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of seven thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon, for expenses incurred by them in the employment of clerks actually required for the transaction of the business of their respective offices, growing out of an act entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of the said public lands," approved September the twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and fifty.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. XCII.—An Act to authorize the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to run and mark the Boundary Lines between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to appoint a suitable person or persons, who, in conjunction with such person or persons as may be appointed by and on behalf of the State of Texas for the same purpose, shall run and mark the boundary lines between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas; beginning at the point where the one hundredth degree of longitude west from Greenwich crosses Red river, and running thence north to the point where said

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

one hundredth degree of longitude intersects the parallel of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes north latitude; and thence west with the said parallel of thirty-six degrees and thirty minutes north latitude to the point where it intersects the one hundred and third degree of longitude west from Greenwich; and thence south with the said one hundred and third degree of longitude to the thirty-second parallel of north latitude; and thence west with the said thirty-second degree of north latitude to the Rio Grande.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That such landmarks shall be established at the said point of beginning on Red river, and at the other corners, and on the said several lines of said boundary, as may be agreed on by the President of the United States, or those acting under his authority, and the said State of Texas, or those acting under its authority.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That the sum of eighty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the person or persons appointed and employed on the part and behalf of Texas are to be paid by the said State: Provided further, That no persons, except a superintendent or commissioner, shall be appointed or employed in this service by the United States but such as are required to make the necessary observations and surveys to ascertain such line and erect suitable monuments thereon and make return of the same.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. XCIII.—An Act making Appropriations for the Consular and Diplomatic Expenses of the Government for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, namely:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary, ministers, and commissioners of the United States at Great Britain, France, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Austria, Brazil, Mexico, China, Chili, Peru, Portugal, Switzerland, Rome, Naples, Sardinia, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Turkey, Buenos Ayres, New Grenada, Bolivia, Ecuador, Venezuela, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Sandwich Islands, two hundred and seventy-four thousand dollars.

For salaries of the secretaries of legation of the United States, twelve thousand dollars.

For salaries of assistant secretaries of legation at London and Paris, three thousand dollars.

For salary of the secretary of legation to China, acting as interpreter, five thousand dollars.

For salary of the secretary of legation to Turkey, acting as dragoman, three thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses of all the missions abroad, fifty thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, sixty thousand dollars.

For expenses of intercourse with the Barbary Powers, three thousand dollars.

For expenses of the consulates in the Turkish dominions, viz: interpreters, guards, and other expenses of the consulates at Constantinople, Smyrna, Candia, Alexandria, and Beirout, two thousand five hundred dollars.

For the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For expenses which may be incurred in acknowledging the services of the masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing citizens and vessels of the United States from shipwreck, ten thousand dollars—to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.

For the purchase of blank-books, stationery, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, and for the payment of postages and miscellaneous expenses of the consuls of the United States, forty thousand dollars.

For office rent for those consuls-general, consuls, and commercial agents who are not allowed to trade, including loss by exchange thereon, twenty-seven thousand three hundred and seventy dollars.

For salaries of consuls-general at Quebec, Calcutta, Alexandria, Simoda, Havana, Constantinople, Frankfort-on-the-Main; consuls at Liverpool, London, Melbourne, Hong Kong, Glasgow, Mauritius, Singapore, Belfast, Cork, Dundee, Demarara, Halifax, Kingston, (Jamaica), Leeds, Manchester, Nassau, (New Providence,) Southampton, Turk's Island, Prince Edward's Island, Havre, Paris, Marseilles, Bordeaux, La Rochelle, Lyons, Moscow, Odessa, Revel, Saint Petersburg, Matanzas, Trinidad de Cuba, Santiago de Cuba, San Juan, (Porto Rico,) Cadiz, Malaga, Ponce, (Porto Rico,) Trieste, Vienna, Aix-la-Chapelle, Canton, Shanghai, Fouchou, Amoy, Ningpo, Beirout, Smyrna, Jerusalem, Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Antwerp, Funchal, Oporto, St. Thomas, Elsinore, Genoa, Basle, Geneva, Messina, Naples, Palermo, Leipsic, Munich, Leghorn, Stuttgart, Bremen, Hamburg, Tangiers, Tripoli, Tunis, Rio de Janeiro, Pernambuco, Vera Cruz, Acapulco, Callao, Valparaiso, Buenos Ayres, San Juan del Sur, Aspinwall, Panama, Lagayra, Honolulu, Lahaina, Capetown, Falkland Islands, Venice, Stettin, Candia, Cyprus, Batavia, Payal, Santiago, (Cape de Verdes,) Saint Croix, Spezzia, Athens, Zanzibar, Bahia, Maranh Island, Para, Rio Grande, Matamoras, Mexico, (city,) Tampico, Paso del Norte, Tabasco, Paita, Tumbes, Talcahuano, Carthagena, Sabanillo, Omoa, Guayaquil, Cobija, Montevideo, Tahiti, Bay of Islands, Apia, Lanthala; commercial agents at San Juan del Norte, Port-au-Prince, San Domingo, (city,) St. Paul de Loanda, (Angola,) Monrovia, Gaboon, Cape Haytien, Aux Cayes, and Amor river, one hundred and seventy-three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For interpreters to the consulates in China, four thousand five hundred dollars.

For compensation to the commissioner, chief astronomer and surveyor, assistant astronomer and surveyor, clerk, and for provisions, transportation, and contingencies of the commission to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions bounding on Washington Territory, seventy-one thousand dollars.

For compensation and per diem of the commissioner, compensation of the surveyor, and for the payment of all expenses of the commissioner under the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain, twenty-three thousand dollars.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CXXII.—An Act to Confirm the Sale of the Reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians.

Whereas, by the thirteenth article of a treaty made and concluded at Washington on the sixth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, between the United States of America and the Delaware Indians, a grant of four sections of land was made to the Christian Indians, for which a patent was to be issued to the said Indians, "subject to such restrictions as Congress may provide;" and whereas, a patent was so issued to them on the twenty-first day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven; and whereas, it fully appears, by the evidence and papers on file before the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the four sections of land set apart by said treaty was, on the twenty-ninth day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty seven, sold and conveyed by said Christian Indians to one A. J. Isacks for the consideration of forty-three thousand four hundred dollars, which sum was a fair consideration for said lands: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That upon the payment of the said sum of forty-three thousand four hundred dollars by the said A. J. Isacks to the Secretary of the Interior, for the use and benefit of said Christian Indians, within ninety days from the passage of this act, it shall then be the duty of the President of the United States to confirm said sale.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to receive the proceeds of the sale of the said four sections of land, and apply the same as follows: that is to say, so much thereof as may be necessary to the purchase of a suitable tract of land for a permanent home for the Christian Indians, the erection of the necessary buildings for their accommodation, and the purchase of stock, agricultural implements, and whatever else may be necessary to establish them thereon; the balance of the said fund to be invested by the Secretary of the Interior in safe and profitable stocks, the interest whereof shall be applied to the support of a school among the said Christian Indians.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, whenever the Christian Indians desire it, the tract purchased under the provisions of the preceding section shall be divided among them, under the direction of the President of the United States, to be held in severalty, and with all the rights incident to a fee-simple estate: Provided, That the said tracts, when so divided, shall be forever inalienable by the grantees or their heirs, except with the consent and approval of the President of the United States.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXIII.—An Act for the Relief of certain Settlers on the Public Lands in the State of Wisconsin.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the even-numbered sections of land selected by the State of Wisconsin in the month of June, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-nine, to satisfy the quantity of land due said State under the act of Congress of August eighth, eighteen hundred and forty-six, granting land in aid of the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, as have been sold, or contracted to be sold, by said State or its assigns, under the laws thereof, are hereby confirmed to said State, as parts of said grant, and the title of the purchasers declared to be valid as though the said selections had been made in conformity with law: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to increase the quantity of land to which the State is entitled under the grant aforesaid: And provided further, That a schedule, duly certified [certified] by the Governor, of the lands sold and contracted for to be sold, prior to the passage of this act, shall be filed in the General Land Office within six months from the date of this act.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That every person being the head of a family, widow, or single man over the age of twenty-one years, who, on the eleventh day of June, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-nine, was, or since that time has become, an actual settler and house-keeper, and has made other improvements on any tract embraced in said even-numbered section selection, which the State of Wisconsin or its assigns has not sold or contracted to sell, is hereby entitled to the same right of preemption, and upon the same terms and conditions, as is prescribed by an act entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and to grant preemption rights," approved September fourth, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-one: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to convey to Wisconsin any parts or portions of said even-numbered section selections which said State or its assigns have not actually sold or contracted to sell, and the title to which is not confirmed by the first section of this act.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXLV.—An Act to repeal the fifth section of an act entitled "An act to authorize the Register or Enrollment and License to be issued in the name of the President or Secretary of any incorporated Company owning a Steamboat or Vessel," approved March third, eighteen hundred and twenty-five.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the fifth section of "An act to authorize the register or enrollment and license to be issued in the name of the president or secretary of any incorporated company owning a steamboat or vessel," approved March third, eighteen hundred and twenty-five, be, and the same is hereby repealed.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

CHAP. CXLVI.—An Act for the Relief of Settlers on certain Lands in the State of Illinois.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That every settler on any of the public lands heretofore selected by [the] State of Illinois, but which have not been confirmed to said State, under the provisions of the act of fourth September, eighteen hundred and forty-one, who settled thereon in good faith prior to the passage of this act, shall be entitled to preempt their respective claims by legal subdivisions, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres in a compact body, at the ordinary minimum of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, unless within the six-mile limits of any railroad grant, and in that case at the usual double minimum of two dollars and fifty cents per acre: Provided, Such settlers shall establish their rights according to the rules and regulations prescribed under the provisions of the act of fourth September, eighteen hundred and forty-one, and pay for the same within three months from the date of the publication of this act by the register of the proper district: Provided, That no declaratory statement shall be required to be filed by such settlers.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

CHAP. CXLVII.—An Act to change the Time of holding the Spring Term of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of the State of Texas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act the term of the district court of the United States for the western district of the State of Texas, held at Tyler, in said district, on the first Monday in March of each year, be, and the same is hereby, changed to the fourth Monday in April of each year.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all writs, recognizances, and process of all kinds already issued, taken, or made, or that may be issued, taken, or made returnable at the time hitherto appointed for the term of the said court, shall be considered, taken, and held as made returnable to the term of said court, as herein provided.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

CHAP. CXLVIII.—An Act for the Relief of certain Purchasers of Lands within the limits of the Choctaw Cession of eighteen hundred and thirty.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be authorized, and he is hereby required, to cause patents to be issued on all certificates for entries made within the limits of the Choctaw cession of eighteen hundred and thirty, at less than the true graduation price, which were issued prior to the reception, by the local land officers, of the true graduation lists, where such certificates and entries are regular in all other respects; any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

CHAP. CLIII.—An Act making Appropriations for the Naval Service for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine:

For pay of commission, warrant, and petty officers and seamen, including the engineer corps of the Navy, three million eight hundred and five thousand four hundred and five dollars.

For provisions for commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including engineers and marines attached to vessels for sea service, nine hundred and forty-one thousand seven hundred dollars.

For surgeons' necessities and appliances for the sick and hurt of the Navy, including the engineer and marine corps, thirty-two thousand one hundred and fifty dollars.

For increase, repair, armament, and equipment of the Navy, including the wear and tear of vessels in commission, fuel for steamers, and purchase of hemp for the Navy, two million eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That there shall not be purchased any larger quantity of hemp of foreign growth for the use of the Navy than shall be required to meet the deficiency in the supply of the American article, as reported to the Navy Department, from quarter to quarter, by the agents appointed to procure the article of American growth: Provided further, That hemp of American growth of like quality can be purchased at the same price as hemp of foreign growth.

For ordnance and ordnance stores and small arms, including incidental expenses, five hundred and ninety-eight thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses that may accrue for the following purposes, viz: freight and transportation, printing and stationery, advertising in newspapers, books, maps, models, and drawings, purchase and repair of fire-engines and machinery, repairs of, and attending to, steam-engines in navy-yards, purchase and maintenance of horses and oxen, and drawing teams, carts, timber-wheels, and the purchase and repairs of workmen's tools, postage of public letters, fuel, oil, and candles for navy-yards and shore stations, pay of watchmen and incidental labor, not chargeable to any other appropriation, transportation to, and labor attending the delivery of provisions and stores on foreign stations, wharfage, dockage, and rent, traveling expenses of officers and others under orders, funeral expenses, store and office rent, stationery, fuel, commissions and pay of clerks to Navy agents and storekeepers, flags, awnings, and packing boxes, premiums and other expenses of recruiting, apprehending deserters, per diem pay to persons attending courts-martial and courts of inquiry, and other services authorized by law, pay to judges-advocate, pilotage and towage of vessels, and assistance to vessels in distress, bills of health, and quarantine expenses of vessels of the United States Navy in foreign ports, eight hundred and ninety-seven thousand six hundred dollars: Provided, That the expenditures under the foregoing appropriations shall be so accounted for as to show the disbursements by each bureau, under each respective appropriation.

Marine Corps.—For pay of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, clerks, messengers, stewards, and servants, for rations and clothing for servants, subsistence and additional rations for five years' service of officers, for undrawn clothing and rations, bounties for reenlistments, and pay for unexpired terms of previous service, three hundred and ninety-five thousand five hundred and seventy-eight dollars and twenty-six cents.

For provisions for marines serving on shore, sixty-four thousand three hundred and thirteen dollars.

For clothing, sixty-six thousand five hundred and twelve dollars.

For fuel, twenty thousand seven hundred and fifty-six dollars and seventy-five cents.

For military stores, viz: repair of arms, pay of armorers, purchase of accouterments, ordnance stores, flags, drums, fifes, and other instruments, and one thousand rifled muskets, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For transportation of officers and troops, and expenses of recruiting, twelve thousand dollars.

For repairs of barracks and rent of offices where there are no public buildings for that purpose, eight thousand dollars.

To pay the contractors for building cisterns, erecting porticoes to commandant's house and officers' quarters, to complete porticoes on the men's quarters, pavements and curb to commandant's house and officers' quarters of the marine barracks at Pensacola, Florida, (so as fully to complete said marine garrison,) sixteen thousand eight hundred dollars.

For contingencies, viz: freight, ferriage, toll, cartage, and wharfage, compensation to judges-advocate, per diem for attending courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and for constant labor, house rent in lieu of quarters, burial of deceased marines, printing, stationery, postage and telegraphing, apprehension of deserters, oil, candles, gas, forage, straw, furniture, bed-sacks, spades, shovels, axes, picks, and carpenters' tools, keep of a horse for the messenger, and pay of matron, washerwoman, and porter at hospital headquarters, and for the purchase of a fire-engine for the use of the marine barracks at headquarters, thirty-two thousand five hundred dollars.

NAVY-YARDS.

For the construction and completion of works, and for the current repairs at the several navy-yards, viz:

Portsmouth, New Hampshire.—For mooring piers for dock, extending stables, completion of dock basin, repairs of floating-dock, and repairs of all kinds, fifty-two thousand two hundred and fifteen dollars.

Boston.—For reservoirs, boiler-house, chimney and boilers at rope-walk, altering tar-kettles, machinery and bobbins for rope-walk, to complete machine-shop, and for machinery for machine-shop and foundry, extension of dry-dock, and repairs of all kinds, two hundred and three thousand five hundred dollars.

New York.—For boiler-house and setting boilers, water-pipes, drains, quay walls, sewer extended to quay wall, boiler to dredger, timber basin, repairs of oakum-shop, filling ponds in yard, dredging channel and scows, piling site for marine barracks, machinery for machine-shop, boiler-shop, saw-mill, foundry, smithery, and brass foundry, and repairs of all kinds, two hundred and sixty-nine thousand five hundred and sixteen dollars; and the amount heretofore appropriated for coal-house may be applied to the completion of the store-house.

Philadelphia.—For extending gun-carriage shop, additional story to plumber's shop, dredging channels, and repairs of dredger, repairs of dry-dock, and repairs of all kinds, ninety-seven thousand two hundred and fourteen dollars.

Washington.—For extension of navy store, for anchor-shop and coal-houses, pavements, drains and gutters, machinery and tools, and repairs of all kinds, ninety-nine thousand one hundred dollars.

Norfolk.—For continuation of quay wall, completing virtually establishment, completing grading and drainage, dredging channels, continuing ship-house number forty-eight, to be built of iron or wood as may be deemed expedient, machinery and tools, completing reservoir, completing carpenters' shop and repairs of all kinds, two hundred and eighty-five thousand eight hundred and eight dollars.

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase tools and furnish the machine-shop and foundry at the Norfolk navy-yard, twenty thousand dollars.

Pensacola.—For continuing granite wharf, repairing and operating dock, filling and paving around dock basin, dredging in front of basin, repairs of railways, completing water pipes to permanent wharf, completing foundry, constructors' workshop, cistern at machine-shop, trip-hammer for smithery, blast pipes, and repairs of all kinds, two hundred and forty-seven thousand three hundred and sixty-five dollars.

Mare Island, California.—For guard-house number seventy-three, tar and pitch-house number seventy-four, two cisterns number forty-nine, grading, paving, continuing wharf, foundry, and boiler establishment, gas works, and Bishop's derrick, three hundred and seventeen thousand nine hundred and seventy-one dollars.

HOSPITALS.

For the construction and completion of works, and for the current repairs of the several naval hospitals:

Boston.—For repairs of buildings and grounds, three thousand dollars.

That the Secretaries of the Treasury and Navy be, and they are hereby, authorized and required

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

to ascertain in such way as they may deem best, the actual value of the ten acres of land heretofore belonging to the naval hospital estate at Chelsea, Massachusetts, and ceded by the sixth section of "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic service of the Government," approved the third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, for the purposes of a marine hospital for the district of Boston and Charlestown. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the so ascertained value of the said ten acres, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the credit of the naval hospital fund, out of which the original purchase of the property so ceded was made.

New York.—For completing heating apparatus, and repairs of buildings and fences, thirteen thousand two hundred dollars.

Naval Asylum, Philadelphia.—For gateway and iron gate on Shippen street, and road from same; repairs to furnaces, grates, and ranges; painting main building and lodges; brick floors in governor's and surgeon's houses; cleaning and white-washing; gas tax, water tax, furniture for the asylum and repairs, and for general repairs, eight thousand five hundred dollars.

For support of beneficiaries at the asylum, twenty-six thousand three hundred and ninety-two dollars.

Norfolk.—For repairs of buildings and appurtenances, eleven thousand dollars.

Pensacola.—For draining and filling ponds, and repairs of buildings and grounds, eighteen thousand seven hundred dollars.

Magazines:

For the construction and completion of works, and for the current repairs at the several naval magazines:

Portsmouth, New Hampshire.—For gun-carriage shop and storehouse, boiler-room, engine and machinery, and repairs of all kinds, forty-six thousand six hundred dollars.

Boston.—For repairs of all kinds, one thousand five hundred dollars.

New York.—For dredging channel to Ellis's Island, and repairs of all kinds, six thousand eight hundred dollars.

Philadelphia.—For repairs of all kinds, one thousand dollars.

Norfolk.—To complete ordnance building, continuation of sea-wall at magazine, and for iron crane at Fort Norfolk, sixty-one thousand two hundred and sixty-five dollars.

Pensacola.—For repairs of all kinds, one thousand dollars.

Mare Island, California.—For shell-house, magazine, keeper's house and grounds, tank-house and filling-room, railway and cars to transport powder to and from magazine, shot-beds, cleaning and piling shot and shells, eleven thousand four hundred and fifty dollars.

For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments at the several navy-yards and stations, one hundred and thirty-nine thousand two hundred and thirty-two dollars.

For the purchase of nautical instruments required for the use of the Navy; for repairs of the same, and also of astronomical instruments; and for the purchase of nautical books, maps, and charts, and for backing and binding the same, eighteen thousand dollars.

For printing and publishing sailing directions, hydrographical surveys, and astronomical observations, in addition to the balance on hand, five thousand dollars.

For continuing the publication of the series of wind and current charts, and for defraying all the expenses connected therewith, eighteen thousand dollars.

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the salary of Professor James P. Espy, two thousand dollars; the payment to be made in the same manner and under the like control as former appropriations for meteorological observations: Provided, That the employment of a meteorologist, under the contract of the Secretary of the Navy, shall cease on and after the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For models, drawings, and copying; for postage, freight, and transportation; for keeping grounds in order; for fuel and lights; and for all other contingent expenses, and for the wages of persons employed at the United States Naval Observatory and Hydrographical Office, viz: one instrument maker, two watchmen, and one porter, six thousand one hundred and sixty dollars: Provided, That the compensation of the watchmen employed at the United States Observatory and Hydrographical Office shall be the same as that paid to the several watchmen employed in the Executive Departments of the Government.

For improvement and repairs of buildings and grounds, and support of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, forty-five thousand six hundred and seventy-one dollars and twenty-two cents.

For preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac, twenty-six thousand eight hundred and eighty dollars.

For five steam sloops, authorized by act third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, one million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay for the preparation of a code of regulations for the government of the Navy, as directed in the seventh section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight," approved third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, three thousand dollars: Provided, That the provisions of the seventh section of the naval appropriation bill approved March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, directing the Secretary of the Navy to have prepared, and to report to Congress at this session for its approval, a code of regulations for the government of the Navy, and so forth, be extended to the next session of Congress.

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the expenses of courts of inquiry to investigate the cases of certain officers affected by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy,'" approved sixteenth January, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, one hundred and ten thousand dollars.

For completing the publication of the charts of the late expedition for the exploration of the river La Plata and its tributaries, five thousand dollars.

That the Superintendent of Public Printing be, and is hereby, directed to transfer to the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography the plates from which the illustrations and charts of the late Japan expedition were printed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, the clerks and messengers at the navy-yard and marine barracks at Washington, shall be entitled to receive the compensation authorized by the acts of April twenty-second, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and August fifth, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, for the payment of which such sum as may be necessary be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to enlist boys for service in the United States marine corps, with the consent of their parents or guardians, not being under eleven nor over seventeen years of age, to serve until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years; the boys so enlisted to receive the same pay, rations, clothing, and so forth, now received by boys enlisted in said corps, under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That to defray the expenses and compensation of a commissioner to the Republic of Paraguay, (should it be deemed proper by the President to appoint one,) in execution of the joint resolution of the present session "for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay," ten thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the compensation hereby allowed shall not exceed the rate of seven thousand five hundred dollars per annum for the time employed.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all the steamships of the Navy of the United States now building, or hereafter to be built, shall be named by the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President of the United States, according to the following rule, namely: All those of forty guns or more shall be considered of the first class, and shall be called after the States of the Union; those of twenty guns and under forty shall be considered as of the second class, and be called after the rivers and principal towns or cities; and all those of less than twenty guns shall be the third class, and named by the Secretary of the Navy as the President may direct, care being taken that no two vessels in the Navy shall bear the same name.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy cause to be constructed, as speedily as may be consistent with the public interests, seven steam screw sloops-of-war, with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water shall not exceed fourteen feet, which ships shall combine the heaviest armament and greatest speed compatible with their character and tonnage; and one side-wheel war steamer, whose greatest draught shall not exceed eight feet, armed and provided for service in the China seas; and that there be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose above specified, the sum of twelve hundred thousand dollars, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, June 12, 1858.

CHAP. CLIV.—An Act making Appropriations for sundry Civil Expenses of the Government for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the objects hereafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, viz:

Survey of the Coast.

For continuing the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coast of the United States, (including compensation to superintendent and assistants, and excluding pay and emoluments of officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed on the work,) two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For continuing the survey of the western coast of the United States, one hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

For continuing the survey of the Florida reefs and keys, (excluding pay and emoluments of officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed on the work, forty thousand dollars.

For running a line to connect the triangulation on the Atlantic coast with that on the Gulf of Mexico, across the Florida peninsula, ten thousand dollars.

For repairs of the Crawford, Madison, Mason, and George M. Bache, and other sailing vessels used in the coast survey, ten thousand dollars.

For pay and rations of engineers for seven steamers, used in the hydrography of the coast survey, no longer supplied by the Navy Department, twelve thousand eight hundred dollars: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may make such allowances to the officers and men of the Army and Navy, while employed on coast survey service, for subsistence, in addition to their compensation, as he may deem necessary, not exceeding the sum authorized by the Treasury regulation of the eleventh May, eighteen hundred and forty-four.

To supply deficiency in the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Light-House Establishment.

For the Atlantic, Gulf, and lake coasts, viz:

For supplying five hundred and fifty-six light-houses and beacon lights with oil, glass chimneys, wicks, chamois skins, polishing powder, whitening, and cleaning materials, transportation and other necessary expenses of the same, repairing and keeping in repair the lighting apparatus, one hundred and thirty-eight thousand seven hundred and twenty-four dollars and forty-five cents.

For repairs and incidental expenses, refitting and improvements of all the light-houses and buildings connected therewith, one hundred and

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

seventy-three thousand two hundred and eighty-nine dollars and twenty-one cents.

For salaries of six hundred and eleven keepers of light-houses and light-beacons, and their assistants, sixty thousand dollars.

For salaries of fifty-two keepers of light-vessels, twenty thousand two hundred and six dollars and fifty-seven cents.

For seamen's wages, repairs, supplies, and incidental expenses of fifty-two light-vessels, one hundred and eighty-five thousand one hundred and ninety-nine dollars and fifty cents.

For expenses of raising, cleaning, painting, repairing, remooing, and supplying losses of buoys and day beacons, and for chains and sinkers for the same, and for coloring and numbering all the buoys, eighty-two thousand two hundred and twenty-eight dollars and seventy-eight cents.

For the Coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington:

For oil and other supplies for twenty-four lights, cleaning materials of all kinds, and transportation of the same, expenses of keeping lamps and machinery in repair, publishing notices to mariners of changes of aids to navigation, one thousand four hundred and seventy-two dollars and ninety-one cents.

For repairs and incidental expenses of twenty-four lights, and buildings connected therewith, twenty-four thousand five hundred and sixty-three dollars.

For maintenance of the vessel provided for by the act of eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, for inspection and transportation purposes, thirty thousand dollars.

For fuel and quarters for officers of the Army serving on light-house duty, the payment of which is no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department, seven thousand and thirty-four dollars and five cents.

For compensation of two superintendents for the life-saving stations on the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey, three thousand dollars.

For compensation of fifty-four keepers of stations, at two hundred dollars each, ten thousand eight hundred dollars.

For contingencies for life-saving apparatus on the coast of the United States, twelve thousand dollars.

For the purchase of the best self-righting life-boat, to be placed at each of the twenty-eight life-saving stations on the coast of New Jersey, six thousand four hundred and forty dollars.

For the purchase of the best life-boats, to be approved by the Treasury Department, for use on the coast of Long Island, ten thousand dollars.

For procuring two additional improved metallic life-boats, a metallic life-car, and necessary harness, lines, and other suitable articles, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury in saving life, in case of marine disasters off Galveston station, Texas, ten thousand dollars.

Survey of the Public Lands.

For surveying the public lands, (exclusive of California, Oregon, Washington, New Mexico, Kansas, Nebraska, and Utah,) including incidental expenses and island surveys in the interior, and all other special and difficult surveys demanding augmented rates, to be apportioned and applied to the several surveying districts, according to the exigencies of the public service, including expenses of selecting swamp lands, and the compensation and expenses to survey or to locate private land claims in Louisiana, in addition to the unexpended balances of all former appropriations, forty thousand dollars.

For correcting erroneous and defective lines of public and private surveys in Illinois and Missouri, at a rate not exceeding six dollars per mile, one thousand dollars.

For surveying in Louisiana, at augmented rates now authorized by law, three thousand dollars.

For surveying the public lands and private land claims in California, including office expenses incident to the survey of claims, and to be disbursed at the rates prescribed by law for the different kinds of work, one hundred thousand dollars.

For continuing the survey of base, meridian, standard, parallels, township and section lines in New Mexico, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For surveying such of the private claims in

New Mexico as shall have been confirmed by Congress, including expenses incurred by the surveyor general in adjudicating the same, fifteen thousand dollars.

For surveying the necessary base, meridian, standard, parallels, township and section lines in Kansas and Nebraska, also outlines of Indian reservations, one hundred thousand dollars.

For preparing the unfinished records of public and private surveys to be transferred to the State authorities, under the provisions of the act of twelfth June, eighteen hundred and forty, in those districts where the surveys are about being completed, ten thousand dollars.

For resurveys and examinations of the surveys of the public lands in those States where the offices of the surveyors general have been, or shall be, closed, under the acts of the twelfth June, eighteen hundred and forty, and twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, including two thousand dollars for the salary of the clerk detailed to this special service in the General Land Office, two thousand dollars.

For collection of agricultural statistics, investigations for promoting agriculture and rural economy, and the procurement of cuttings and seeds, sixty thousand dollars: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Patents to submit to the Secretary of the Interior, at the commencement of each session of Congress, the invoices of seeds and cuttings purchased with the money hereby appropriated; and also a statement of expenses in procuring agricultural statistics, and incidental expenses in procuring seeds, cuttings, and information.

For drawings to illustrate the mechanical report of the Commissioner of Patents for the year eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, six thousand dollars.

Hospital for the Insane.

For the support, clothing, and medical treatment of the insane of the District of Columbia, and of the Army and Navy at the asylum in said District, twenty-four thousand five hundred dollars.

For salaries and incidental expenses of the institution for the instruction of the deaf, dumb, and blind in the District of Columbia, authorized by the act approved May twenty-nine, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, three thousand dollars.

For extension of stables and erection of sheds in connexion with the stock yard, four thousand dollars.

For heating and ventilating the entire unfinished remainder of the hospital edifice, and for slightly remodelling the heating apparatus of the present finished portions of the building, so that the heating and ventilation of the whole establishment shall be one connected and efficient system, fifteen thousand dollars.

For support, care, and medical treatment of forty transient paupers; medical and surgical patients in Washington Infirmary, six thousand dollars.

For purchase of manure for the public grounds, one thousand dollars.

For hire of carts on the public grounds, one thousand and ninety-five dollars and fifty cents.

For purchase and repair of tools used in the public grounds, five hundred dollars.

For purchase of trees and tree-boxes, to replace where necessary such as have been planted by the United States, and the repair of pavements in front of the public grounds, five thousand dollars.

For annual repairs of the Capitol, water-closets, public stables, water pipes, pavements, and other walks within the Capitol square, broken glass and locks, six thousand dollars.

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to fit up with shelves the two rooms at the south end of the library of Congress, for the use of the library, and for putting up a partition in the passage to them, two hundred and seventy dollars.

For annual repairs of the President's house and furniture, improvement of grounds, purchasing trees and plants for garden and making hot-beds therein, and contingent expenses incident thereto, twelve thousand dollars.

For fuel, in part, of the President's house, one thousand eight hundred dollars.

For lighting the President's house and Capitol, the public grounds around them and around the executive offices, and Pennsylvania avenue, and Bridge and High streets in Georgetown, forty-three thousand dollars.

For erecting thirty additional lamp posts in Bridge and High streets, in Georgetown, eight hundred and ten dollars.

For purchase of books for [the] library at the executive mansion, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States, two hundred and fifty dollars.

For repairs of the Potomac, Navy-Yard, and upper bridges, six thousand dollars.

For repairs of Pennsylvania avenue, three thousand dollars.

To pay the residue of the salary due the engineer for constructing the bridge across the Potomac at Little Falls, two thousand five hundred and eighty-nine dollars and sixty-seven cents; and for painting the hand-rails, and iron work of said bridge, four hundred dollars, and the bridge is hereby placed under protection of Georgetown, with power to regulate the speed of travel and the passage of droves of cattle over the same, but no tolls shall be charged.

For public reservation number two, Lafayette square, three thousand dollars.

For taking care of the grounds south of the President's house and keeping them in order, one thousand dollars.

For the payment of laborers employed in shoveling snow from the walks to and around the Capitol, the President's house, and the pavements along the Government reservations on Pennsylvania avenue, eight hundred dollars.

For repairs of water pipes, five hundred dollars.

For repairs of the furnaces under the Senate Chamber and Supreme Court room, one thousand dollars.

For casual repairs of the Patent Office building, three thousand dollars.

For completing the west wing of the Patent Office building, filling up the southwest corner of the square, setting the curb, and raising Ninth street in front of the building to its proper grade, fifty thousand dollars.

For repairing the fence around that portion of the mall upon which the Smithsonian Institution is situated, one thousand dollars.

For cleaning out the sewer traps on Pennsylvania avenue, three hundred dollars.

For purchasing plants for the conservatory at the President's house, one thousand dollars.

For the completion of the Washington aqueduct, eight hundred thousand dollars, and, in addition thereto, so much of the appropriation of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars "for paying existing liabilities for the Washington aqueduct, and preserving the work already done from injury," contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven," approved eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, as may not be required for said purposes.

For United States Capitol extension, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That none of this appropriation shall be expended in embellishing any part of the Capitol extension with sculpture or paintings unless the designs for the same shall have undergone the examination of a committee of distinguished artists, not to exceed three in number, to be selected by the President, and that the designs which said committee shall accept shall also receive the subsequent approbation of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress; but this provision shall not be so construed as to apply to the execution of designs heretofore made and accepted from Crawford and Rogers.

For extension of the General Post Office, one hundred thousand dollars.

For binding two thousand four hundred copies of Code of the District of Columbia, at seventy-five cents per copy, authorized by act approved third March, eighteen hundred and fifty five, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars.

For defraying the expenses of a certain party of Omaha Indians who visited the city of Washington during the months of February and March,

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior—being the balance of a former appropriation, which was carried to the surplus fund on the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven—three hundred and thirty-five dollars.

For continuing the extension of the Treasury building, five hundred thousand dollars.

For continuing the work on the custom-house at New Orleans, Louisiana, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For continuing the work on the custom-house at Charleston, South Carolina, two hundred thousand dollars.

For the completion of custom-houses at the following places, viz: at Ellsworth, Maine, two thousand dollars; at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, fifty thousand dollars; at Bristol, Rhode Island, including fencing and grading, five thousand dollars; at New Haven, Connecticut, sixty thousand dollars; at Oswego, New York, ten thousand dollars; at Plattsburg, New York, ten thousand dollars; at Newark, New Jersey, ten thousand dollars; at Norfolk, Virginia, twenty thousand dollars; at Pensacola, Florida, five thousand dollars; at St. Louis, Missouri, twenty thousand dollars; at Mobile, Alabama, including fencing and paving, thirty thousand dollars; at Galena, Illinois, ten thousand dollars; at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, ten thousand dollars; and for annual repairs at custom-houses, fifteen thousand dollars.

For the completion of marine hospitals at the following places, viz: at Portland, Maine, three thousand dollars; at St. Mark's Florida, two thousand five hundred dollars; at New Orleans, Louisiana, including filling up site, grading, introducing gas and water pipes and fixtures, and fencing, eighty-five thousand dollars; at Cincinnati, Ohio, fifty thousand dollars; at Galena, Illinois, five thousand dollars, and for annual repairs at marine hospitals, fifteen thousand dollars: Provided, That no portion of the sums herein appropriated for the completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals, excepting those for Charleston and New Orleans, shall be expended until the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that the sums respectively appropriated will complete the buildings for which they are intended, and until arrangements shall be made to carry this into effect.

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the custom-houses at the following places, viz: at Ellsworth, Maine, three thousand dollars; at Bath, Maine, (for furniture alone,) eleven hundred dollars; at Burlington, Vermont, four thousand six hundred dollars; at New Haven, Connecticut, eight thousand five hundred dollars; at Oswego, New York, seven thousand three hundred dollars; at Plattsburg, New York, nine thousand nine hundred dollars; at Newark, New Jersey, five thousand two hundred dollars; at Alexandria, Virginia, three thousand seven hundred dollars; at Norfolk, Virginia, twelve thousand dollars; at Mobile, Alabama, (for furniture alone,) two thousand six hundred dollars; at Pensacola, Florida, two thousand five hundred dollars; at St. Louis, Missouri, fourteen thousand six hundred dollars; at Louisville, Kentucky, three thousand nine hundred dollars; at Cleveland, Ohio, seven thousand one hundred dollars; at Galena, Illinois, three thousand seven hundred dollars; at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, seven thousand seven hundred dollars.

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the marine hospitals at the following places, viz: at Burlington, Vermont, three thousand four hundred dollars; at Chelsea, Massachusetts, (out-buildings, grading and fencing,) nineteen thousand seven hundred dollars; at St. Mark's, Florida, twelve hundred dollars; at Detroit, Michigan, seven thousand five hundred dollars; at Galena, Illinois, three thousand eight hundred dollars; at Burlington, Iowa, four thousand one hundred dollars.

To enable the Library Committee to complete the payments for a series of portraits of the Presidents of the United States, contracted for under authority of Congress, and for framing the same, five thousand dollars.

For paying the expenses of the commissioners appointed in pursuance of the joint resolution of the twenty-sixth of February, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, to inquire into and test the process of J. T. Barclay for preventing the counterfeiting the coins of the United States, in addition to the sum appropriated by said resolution, eight hundred dollars.

For printing ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and paper for the same, eighty thousand dollars.

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and for engravings, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same, one hundred and twenty-three thousand dollars.

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and for engravings, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same, one hundred and thirteen thousand dollars.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete the digest of the statistics of manufactures according to the returns of the seventh census, three thousand five hundred dollars; but the work is not to be undertaken unless the Secretary of the Interior shall be satisfied that the sum hereinbefore mentioned will complete the work.

For making the necessary repairs to the jail in Washington city, and putting venetian blinds to the windows, the sum of eight hundred and forty dollars.

To pay the draughtsman employed by the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress, for drawing and calculations furnished, and incidental expenses defrayed by him during the last and present session of Congress, five hundred and twenty-eight dollars.

For satisfying the claims of the States of Maine and Massachusetts, under the stipulation of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded on the ninth day of August, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-two, a sum not exceeding eleven thousand four hundred and ninety-six dollars and eighty-one cents in satisfaction of such claims of the State of Maine; and nine thousand two hundred and fifteen dollars and thirteen cents in satisfaction of like claims of the State of Massachusetts; to be audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

For defraying the expense of carrying into execution the joint resolution, approved May eleven, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, "authorizing suitable acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British naval authorities at Jamaica for the relief extended to the officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehanna, disabled by yellow fever," three thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For the payment of three companies of volunteers called into the service of the United States in the Territory of Kansas in eighteen hundred and fifty-six by the order of the Governor of that Territory, eight thousand six hundred and sixty-eight dollars and fourteen cents.

For the contingent expenses of the Senate, viz: For miscellaneous items, and paying fees of witnesses before committees of the Senate, seven thousand seven hundred dollars.

To John B. Mutt, for compensation as acting secretary of the Territory of Nebraska during the vacancy created by the death of T. B. Cummings, three hundred and sixteen dollars and thirty-five cents.

For lithographing and engraving ordered by the Senate during the present session, the sum of forty-five thousand dollars.

For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the present session, the sum of forty thousand dollars.

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for legislative and contingent expenses of Washington Territory for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the register of the land office and receiver of public moneys in the Territory of New Mexico shall receive the same compensation now allowed by law to the same class of officers in Washington Territory: Provided, Their compensation, including fees, shall not exceed three thousand dollars each per annum.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the balance of the appropriation of two thousand two hundred dollars, "for flagging footway in the Congressional Burying-Ground, from the entrance of the same to the Government vault," per act approved third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, be applied in extending the flagging the whole length of the avenue, as was originally intended; and that the appropriation of one thousand five hundred dollars "for the construction of a wooden bridge, with a double track, across the canal, in the line of Maine avenue," per same act, may be applied to the erection of a foot-bridge in lieu thereof, as recommended by the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That section six of an act passed August eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven," shall apply to the subsistence of the commissioner therein named from the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties, and the same shall be paid out of appropriations already made.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to those now authorized by law, there may be employed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the office of the Register of the Treasury, an additional clerk of the third class, and in the office of the Treasurer of the United States an additional clerk of the third class; and three thousand two hundred dollars to carry into effect the provisions of this section to the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, is [are] hereby appropriated.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That no part of the appropriations which may be at any time made for the contingent expenses of either House of Congress, shall be applied to any other than the ordinary expenditures of the Senate and House of Representatives, nor as extra allowance to any clerk, messenger, or attendant of the said two Houses, or either of them, nor as payment or compensation to any clerk, messenger, or other attendant of the said two Houses, or either of them, unless such clerk, messenger, or other attendant, be so employed by a resolution of one of said Houses.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the extra compensation paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to clerks of committees, under the resolution of the fourteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, be allowed at the Treasury.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of the Public Buildings to cause obstructions of every kind to be removed from such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in the city of Washington as have been, or may be hereafter, improved in whole or in part by the United States, and to keep the same, at all times, free from obstructions; and, for this purpose, he shall have power to institute suits in any court having competent jurisdiction in the District of Columbia; and it shall be the duty of the district attorney for said district to prosecute the same; and whenever any person shall desire to remove the paving stones, or to displace any other work done by the authority of the United States, for the purpose of laying gas pipes, or for any other purpose, it shall be the duty of such person to obtain a written permit from the said Commissioner; and such persons shall oblige themselves to replace the said work to the satisfaction of the said Commissioner, and within such time as he may prescribe.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That if any person shall place [any] obstruction on the streets, avenues, or side-walks aforesaid, such person shall pay the costs of removing the same, and shall, moreover, be subject to a penalty of ten dollars, to be recovered as other debts are recovered in the District of Columbia, for each and every day the said obstruction may remain after the Commissioner shall have given notice for its removal. And if any person or persons removing the paving stones or other work done by the authority of the United States, shall fail to replace the same to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, within the time prescribed by him, he or they shall be subject to a penalty of twenty-five dollars for each and every failure, and shall moreover, pay the costs of replacing the same, the whole to be recovered before any court in the District of Columbia, having competent jurisdiction; and that this and the preceding section shall continue in force until repealed by Congress.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to report to Congress, at its next regular session, all applications made by the constituted authorities of the State[s] and cities, for the reopening and re[ex]amination of the settlements heretofore made with such State[s] and cities, and report the principle of readjustments upon which such claim is based, and the amount thereof. And the Secretary of the Treasury is further instructed to report to Congress at its next regular session, the gross amount that will be required to pay such claim to the States and cities of the United States.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the eleventh section of the act of Congress, approved September fourth, eighteen hundred and forty-one, entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands, and to grant preemption rights," be so amended that appeals from the decisions of the district officers, in cases of contest between different settlers for the right of preemption, shall hereafter be decided by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose decision shall be final, unless appeal therefrom be taken to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be directed to ascertain as among the expenditures of the State of Maine, in defending the territory heretofore in dispute with Great Britain, the amounts paid in borrowing money for those expenditures beyond the rate of six per centum per annum, whether in the form of discounts or otherwise, in all cases in which the principal of such expenditures, and interest upon them, at the rate of six per centum, have heretofore been refunded to said State by the United States, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay the amount so ascertained out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to any properly authorized officer of said State. In making the ascertainment herein directed, the accounting officers shall compute the principal and interest of the difference between the cash received by Maine, in negotiating stocks and notes; and the nominal amount of such stocks and notes, and the interest accrued thereon; and in cases where Maine was obliged, in negotiating for moneys, to increase the rate of interest on previous loans, the amount of such increase shall be computed and allowed; but not so as to reckon interest upon interest.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That so much of all acts and parts of acts as require or authorize the Postmaster General to publish notice of letting contracts to carry the mails in the respective States, in newspapers published in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the line surveyed by John C. McCoy, in eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, as the western boundary of the half-breed tract, specified in the tenth article of the treaty made between commissioners on the part of the United States and certain Indian tribes, at Prairie du Chien, on the fifteenth of July, eighteen hundred and thirty, be, and the same is hereby, established as the true western boundary of said tract.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That all the ruling and binding for the several Executive Departments shall be executed by practical and competent bookbinders, to be appointed by the head of the Department.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States cause the sum of six thousand dollars to be advanced to Clark Mills, in addition to the sum already advanced, out of the fifty thousand dollars appropriated by the act of January twenty-five, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, to erect at the capital of the nation an equestrian statue of Washington, on the personal application and receipt of the said Mills: Provided, That the said Mills furnish the Secretary of the Interior such security for the completion of the statue as the Secretary may require.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, upon principles of equity and justice, the accounts of I. D. Andrews, late agent of the United States, for expenses and disbursements in connection with the reciprocity treaty, and that the same be paid according to said adjustment.

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the collectors of the customs in the several collection districts be, and they are hereby and hereafter, required to act as disbursing agents for the payment of all moneys that are, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the construction of custom-houses, court-houses, post offices, and marine hospitals, with such compensation, not exceeding one quarter of one per cent., as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem equitable and just: And provided further, That where there is no collector at the place of location of any public work herein specified, the superintendent of such public work shall act as disbursing agent, without any additional compensation therefor; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That in all cases of judgments and decrees, in any territorial court of the United States, now rendered, or hereafter to be rendered, and from which there might be a writ of error, or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, there may be presented such writ of error or appeal within the time, and under the other restrictions limited by law to said Supreme Court, notwithstanding such Territory may, after such judgments and decrees, have been admitted into the Union as a State; and said Supreme Court shall, when the same is decided, direct the mandate to such court as the nature of the writ of error or appeal, in their judgment, may require.

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to continue down to the fourth of March, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, the compilation of the congressional documents published by Congress under the name of the "American State Papers," in the same manner as the first series thereof, under the authority of the act of Congress of March two, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, and the joint resolution of Congress of March two, eighteen hundred and thirty-three; and with the same particular index to each class, and a general index to the work. And the said Secretary and Clerk are hereby directed to contract with Gales & Seaton, the publishers of the first series thereof, for publishing the same, not to exceed two thousand copies in number, at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series, to be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior as the same may be published; and the said Secretary of the Interior shall place three hundred copies in the Department of State for its use, and for exchange with foreign Governments, and seven hundred copies in his own Department, for distribution to public libraries in the several States and Territories, and hold the residue of the copies in his custody, subject to the future direction of Congress: Provided, That the prices or rates to be paid for the printing of this work shall not exceed those paid at present for the printing of the documents of Congress, including paper and binding, having regard to the quality and value of the material used and work done: Provided, That the cost of the publication shall not exceed three hundred and forty thousand dollars, and that not more than twenty-five thousand dollars shall be required for the purpose during the next fiscal year.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That all diplomatic and salaried consular officers who were appointed under the act entitled "An act to remodel the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved March the first, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, shall have the same compensation during the time necessarily occupied in making the transit to, and returning from their respective posts, and while they were receiving their instructions, as is provided for diplomatic and salaried consular officers in the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six: Provided, That the foregoing shall not be construed to apply to any diplomatic or consular officer who was in office, and at his post of duty, when said act, approved March first, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, took effect, except to allow compensation to such officers during the time necessarily occupied in returning from their respective posts.

APPROVED, June 12, 1858.

CHAP. CLV.—An Act making supplemental Appropriations for the Current and Contingent Expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling Treaty Stipulations with various Indian Tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes:

Calapooias, Molalla, and Clackamas Indians, of Willanette Valley.—For fourth of five installments for pay of physician, teacher, blacksmith, and farmer, per third article treaty twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, three thousand four hundred and forty dollars.

Nisqually, Puyallup, and other tribes and bands of Indians.—For fulfilling the articles negotiated twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, with certain bands of Indians of Puget sound, Washington Territory:

For fourth of twenty installments for pay of instructor, smith, physician, carpenter, farmer, and assistants, if necessary, per tenth article treaty twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, two thousand two hundred dollars.

Chasta, Scoton, and Umpqua Indians.—For fourth of fifteen installments for the pay of a farmer, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, four hundred dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for pay of physician, medicines, and expense of care of the sick, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, four hundred and forty dollars.

Umpquas and Calapooias, of Umpqua Valley, Oregon.—For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a blacksmith, and furnishing shop, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, four hundred and forty dollars.

For fourth of fifteen installments for the pay of a physician and purchase of medicines, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand dollars.

For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a farmer, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, four hundred dollars.

For fourth of twenty installments for the pay of a teacher, and purchase of books and stationery, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Oregon, including insurance and transportation of annuities, goods, and presents, and office and traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and sub-agents, thirty-nine thousand five hundred dollars.

For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in the Territory of Oregon, ten thousand dollars.

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon Territory to the reservations therein, aiding them in procuring their own subsistence, purchase of provisions and presents, compensation of laborers and other employes, one hundred and eleven thousand dollars.

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington, including insurance and transportation of annuities, goods, and presents, and office and traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and sub-agents, thirty-six thousand dollars.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in Washington Territory, twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of the Indians in Washington Territory to the reservations therein, aiding them in procuring their own subsistence, purchase of provisions and presents, and compensation of laborers and other employes, sixty-one thousand five hundred dollars.

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, including traveling expenses of the superintendent, agent, and sub-agent, fifteen thousand dollars.

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians of California to the reservations in that State, and for pay of physicians, smiths, mechanics, and laborers at the reservations, one hundred and sixty-two thousand dollars.

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in New Mexico, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuit[s] of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, seventy-five thousand dollars.

For the compensation of three special agents and three interpreters for the Indian tribes of Texas, and for purchase of presents, fifteen thousand dollars.

For the expenses of colonizing, supporting, and furnishing agricultural implements and stock for the Indians in Texas, fifty thousand dollars; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept and survey the Indian reservation designated by an act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, approved February fourth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, and to appoint an Indian agent for said reservation.

For the maintenance of a school at Brazos agency, pay of a teacher, and purchase of books, one thousand five hundred dollars.

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, including traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and clerk hire, fifty-five thousand dollars.

Creeks.—For payment in goods to the Creek Indians for damages on their annuity goods, wrecked in the steamer Governor Meigs, in December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-five dollars and twenty-five cents.

Seminoles.—For payment to the Seminoles for damages on their annuity goods, wrecked in the steamer Governor Meigs, in December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, three hundred and thirty-two dollars and eleven cents.

For reimbursement to W. J. Cullen, superintendent of Indian affairs for the northern superintendency, for expenditures made by him in the recovery of five thousand dollars of the public funds stolen from Fort Ridgely, six hundred and fifty dollars.

Ottos and Missourias.—For keeping in repair the grist and saw mill provided for by the seventh article of the treaty of fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, three hundred dollars.

For the erection of a blacksmith's shop, for supplying the same with tools and keeping it in repair, per seventh article of the treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

For erection of houses for the miller, farmer, blacksmith, and engineer, one thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars.

For assistant miller, three hundred dollars.

For an engineer and assistant, one thousand eight hundred dollars.

Omahas.—For keeping in repair the grist and saw-mill provided for by the eighth article of the treaty of sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, five hundred dollars.

For the erection of a blacksmith's shop, for supplying the same with tools, and keeping it in repair, per eighth article of the treaty of sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, six hundred dollars.

For erection of houses for miller, farmer, blacksmith, and engineer, two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

For an assistant miller, three hundred dollars.

For an engineer and assistant, one thousand eight hundred dollars.

For this amount to erect suitable buildings at the Omaha agency, to replace those recently destroyed by fire, two thousand five hundred dollars.

Shawnees.—For fifth of seven annual installments of money, in payment for lands, per third article treaty, tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, ninety-nine thousand dollars, the same having been omitted in the enrolling of the "Act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine," approved May fifth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

Winnebagoes.—For payment of Baptiste Lussier, a Winnebago half-breed, for this amount, to which he is entitled under the fourth article of the treaty with the Winnebagoes, of the first November, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, four hundred dollars, with interest thereon from the date of unauthorized payment to John H. Kinzie, in eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, at six per centum, four hundred and eighty dollars, together making eight hundred and eighty dollars.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to perform the engagements and stipulations of General Harney made with the Sioux Indians at Fort Pierre in eighteen hundred and fifty-six, seventy-two thousand dollars.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to adjust differences and preserve peace with the Cutt-Head and Yantonaie bands of Sioux Indians, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For compensation of five extra clerks employed in the Indian office under the act of fifth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and third of March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, and under appropriations made from year to year, seven thousand dollars.

Pawnees.—For fulfilling the stipulations in the treaty with the Pawnees of the twenty-fourth of September, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven:

For first of five installments in goods and such articles as may be necessary for them, per second article of said treaty, forty thousand dollars.

For support of two manual-labor schools, during the pleasure of the President, per third article of said treaty, ten thousand dollars.

For pay of two teachers, per third article, twelve hundred dollars.

For erection of houses for teachers, per third article, one thousand dollars.

For two complete sets of blacksmith, gunsmith, and tinsmith's tools, per fourth article, seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For erection of shops for smith, per fourth article, five hundred dollars.

For purchase of iron, steel, and other necessities for same, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article, five hundred dollars.

For pay of two blacksmiths, one of whom to be a gunsmith and tinsmith, per fourth article, twelve hundred dollars.

For compensation of two strikers or apprentices in shops, per fourth article, four hundred and eighty dollars.

For first of ten installments for farming utensils and stock, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article, twelve hundred dollars.

For the first year's purchase of stock, and for erecting shelters for the same, per fourth article, three thousand dollars.

For pay of a farmer, per fourth article, six hundred dollars.

For the erection of a steam grist and saw mill, per fourth article, six thousand dollars.

For first of ten installments for pay of miller, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article, six hundred dollars.

For first of ten installments for pay of an engineer, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article, twelve hundred dollars.

For compensation to apprentices to assist in working the mill, per fourth article, five hundred dollars.

For the erection of dwelling-houses for the interpreter, blacksmiths, farmer, miller, and engineer, (five hundred dollars each,) per fourth article, three thousand dollars.

For the first of three installments for the pay of six laborers, per seventh article, three thousand dollars.

For payment to Samuel Allis, in remuneration for his services, and for losses sustained by him, per tenth article, one thousand dollars.

For payment to Ta-ra-da-ka-wa, head chief of the Tappahs band, and four other Pawnees, for their services as guides, and for losses sustained by them, (one hundred dollars each,) per eleventh article, five hundred dollars.

To enable the Pawnees to settle any just claims existing against them, per twelfth article, ten thousand dollars.

For surveying the exterior lines of the reservation provided for in the first article, one thousand dollars.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and he hereby is, authorized and required, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to remove from any tribal reservation any person found therein without authority of law, or whose presence within the limits of the reservation may, in his judgment be detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians, and to employ for the purpose such force as may be necessary to enable the agent to effect the removal of such person or persons.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to such persons of Miami blood as have heretofore been excluded from the annuities of the tribe since the removal of the Miamies in eighteen hundred and forty-six, and since the treaty of eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and whose names are not included in the supplement to said treaty, their proportion of the tribal annuities from which they have been excluded; and he is also authorized and directed to enroll such persons upon the pay list of said tribe, and cause their annuities to be paid to them in future: Provided, That the foregoing payments shall be in full of all claims for annuities arising out of previous treaties. And said Secretary is also authorized and directed to cause to be located for such persons each two hundred acres of land out of the tract of seventy thousand acres reserved by the second article of the treaty of June fifth, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, with the Miamies, to be held by such persons by the same tenure as the locations of individuals are held which have been made under the third article of said treaty.

APPROVED, June 12, 1858.

CHAP. CLVI.—An Act making Appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine:

For expenses of recruiting, transportation of recruits, three months' extra pay to non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates on enlistment, one hundred and ten thousand dollars.

For pay of the Army, three million five hundred and ninety-one thousand seven hundred and eighty-four dollars.

For commutation of officers' subsistence, nine hundred and ninety-eight thousand four hundred and thirty-four dollars and fifty cents: Provided, That the Superintendent of the Military Academy, while serving as such by appointment of the President, shall have the local rank, the pay and allowances of a colonel of engineers; that the commandant of the corps of cadets at the Military

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Academy, while serving as such as by appointment of the President, shall have the local rank, the pay and allowances of a lieutenant colonel of engineers, and besides his other duties, shall be charged with the duty of instructor in the tactics of the three arms at said academy; and that the senior assistant instructor in each of the arms of service, viz: of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, shall severally receive the pay and allowances of the assistant professor of mathematics.

For commutation of forage for officers' horses, one hundred and twenty-four thousand one hundred and twenty-eight dollars.

For payments to discharged soldiers for clothing not drawn, fifty thousand dollars.

For payments in lieu of clothing for officers' servants, thirty-nine thousand eight hundred and ninety dollars.

For subsistence in kind, one million three hundred and eighty thousand six hundred and fifty-two dollars and sixty-five cents.

For clothing for the Army, camp and garrison equipage, one million and sixty-two thousand seven hundred and two dollars and ninety-nine cents.

For the regular supplies of the quartermaster's department, consisting of fuel for the officers, enlisted men, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen, of the quartermaster's department at the several posts and stations, and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, the companies of light artillery, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses when serving in the field and at the outposts, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including company and other blank-books for the Army, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the pay and quartermaster's departments; and for the printing of division and department orders, Army regulations, and reports, one million seven hundred and forty-five thousand dollars.

For the incidental expenses of the quartermaster's department, consisting of postage on letters and packets received and sent by the officers of the Army on public service; expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, including the additional compensation of judge advocates, recorders, members, and witnesses, while on that service, under the act of March sixteenth, eighteen hundred and two; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the quartermaster's department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, storehouses, and hospitals; in the construction of roads, and on other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, under the acts of March second, eighteen hundred and nineteen, and August fourth, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, including those employed as clerks at division and department headquarters; expenses of expressmen to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains, where military escorts cannot be furnished; expense of the interment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at the posts on the frontiers, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the quartermaster's department; compensation of forage and wagon masters, authorized by the act of July fifth, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight; for the apprehension of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; the following expenditures required for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, viz: the purchase of portable forges, blacksmiths' and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes and nails, iron and steel for shoeing, hire of veterinary surgeons, medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, and shoeing the horses of those corps, five hundred thousand dollars.

For constructing barracks and other buildings at posts which it may be necessary to occupy during the year; and for repairing, altering, and enlarging buildings at the established posts, including hire or commutation of quarters for officers on military duty, hire of quarters for troops, of storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, and of grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations, seven hundred and ninety thousand dollars.

For the repairs of the barracks at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

For mileage or the allowance made to officers of the Army for the transportation of themselves and their baggage, when traveling on duty without troops, escorts, or supplies, one hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

For transportation of the Army, including the baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, from the depot at Philadelphia to the several posts and Army depots; of horse equipments, and of subsistence from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms, from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for the purchase and hire of horses, mules, and oxen, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, drays, ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; and for procuring water at such posts as, from their situation, require that it be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads, and removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops on the frontier, three million four hundred thousand dollars.

For the purchase of horses for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and the companies of light artillery, two hundred thousand dollars.

For contingencies of the Army, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For the medical and hospital departments, one hundred and five thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses of the adjutant general's department at division and department headquarters, five hundred dollars.

For compensation of the clerk and messenger in the office of the commanding general, two thousand dollars.

For contingent expenses of the office of the commanding general, three hundred dollars.

For armament of fortifications, three hundred thousand dollars.

For ordnance, ordnance stores, and supplies, including horse equipments for the mounted regiments, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For the current expenses of the ordnance service, including experiments in the manufacture of cannon and cannon powder, and for tests of arms and ammunition, not otherwise provided for, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For the purchase of gunpowder for the land service, one hundred thousand dollars.

For the manufacture of arms at the national armories, four hundred thousand dollars.

For the purchase of breech-loading carbines of the best model, to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For the alteration of old arms, so as to make them breech-loading arms, upon a model to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers, twenty-five thousand dollars: Provided, That any portion of said sum, not exceeding five thousand dollars, may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and at his discretion, in applying to the old or new arms any recent improvement in the mode of priming.

For the Allegheny arsenal, thirty-five thousand one hundred dollars.

For Fort Monroe arsenal, twenty-four thousand nine hundred dollars.

For Kennebec arsenal, eleven thousand six hundred dollars; two thousand dollars of which may be used in bringing gas upon the arsenal grounds, and with leave to extend gas-pipes through the grounds by the gas company.

For St. Louis arsenal, thirty-one thousand dollars.

For Washington arsenal, nine thousand three hundred and seventy-nine dollars.

For an additional timber and carriage storehouse at the North Carolina arsenal, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For Watervliet arsenal, thirty thousand dollars.

For repairs and preservation of the public buildings, fences, drains, culverts, and so forth, at all the smaller arsenals, twenty thousand dollars.

For continuing the construction of the arsenal in California, one hundred thousand dollars.

For contingencies of arsenals, ten thousand dollars.

For repairing the arsenal and two eighteen-pound gun carriages, at Stonington, Connecticut, seven hundred and fifty dollars.

For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Springfield armory, Massachusetts, fifty-five thousand two hundred and twenty-seven dollars.

For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Harper's Ferry, one hundred and one thousand nine hundred and seven dollars.

For surveys for military defenses, geographical explorations, and reconnaissances, for military purposes, and surveys with armies in the field, ninety-five thousand dollars.

For purchase and repairs of instruments, fifteen thousand dollars.

For continuing the survey of the northern and north western lakes, including Lake Superior, seventy-five thousand dollars.

For printing charts of lake surveys, ten thousand dollars.

To enable the Secretary of War to employ temporary clerks in the office of the Quartermaster General, on bounty land service, five thousand dollars.

For the support of four companies of volunteers mustered into the service of the United States, at Camp Scott, Utah Territory, in October, November, and December, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, one hundred and seventy-three thousand four hundred and seventy-eight dollars and eighty cents.

For continuing the construction of the following works of defense:

Fort at Hog Island ledge, in Portland harbor, Maine, forty thousand dollars.

Fort Richmond, Staten Island, New York harbor, New York, seventy-five thousand dollars.

Fort Delaware, Delaware river, Delaware, seventy-five thousand dollars.

Fort Carroll, Soller's Point flats, Baltimore harbor, Maryland, seventy-five thousand dollars.

Fort Taylor, Key West, Florida, seventy-five thousand dollars.

Fort Jefferson, Garden Key, Tortugas, Florida, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Fort Point, San Francisco, California, one hundred and twelve thousand five hundred dollars.

For contingent expenses of fortifications, preservation of sites, protection of titles, and repairs of sudden damage, thirty thousand dollars.

For construction of permanent platforms for modern cannon of large caliber in existing fortifications of important harbors, thirty thousand dollars.

For the payment of claims favorably reported upon by the board of Army officers (appointed under the sixth section of the act approved August thirty-first, eighteen hundred and fifty-two) in their final report to Congress dated April nineteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, seven thousand eight hundred and seventy-two dollars and fifty-two and one third cents.

For the construction of bridges and the improvement of the crossings of streams on the road from Fort Smith, in Arkansas, to Albuquerque, in New Mexico, fifty thousand dollars; and that the sum of one hundred thousand dollars be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended in completing connected sections of the road extending from Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico, westward, on the route to the Col-

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

orada river, on or near the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the balances from the appropriations for "preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities, and for traveling allowance of volunteers," already expended in the payment of Florida volunteers called into service by authority of the War Department, may be applied by the accounting officers of the Treasury to the settlement of the accounts of paymasters by whom said balances were disbursed.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for any commissioned officer of the Army to administer the prescribed oath of enlistment to recruits, provided the services of a civil magistrate authorized to administer the same cannot be obtained.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for preparing the drawings of the sailing charts of the Bhering's Strait and North Pacific Exploring and Surveying Expedition, under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Navy, but not for printing the same, six thousand seven hundred dollars.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the eleventh section of the act of third March, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, entitled "An act making provision for an additional number of general officers and for other purposes," which deprives sutlers in the Army of their right to a lien upon any part of the pay of the soldiers, or to appear at the pay table to receive the soldiers' pay from the paymaster, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all the existing laws, or parts of laws, which authorize the sale of military sites which are or may become useless for military purposes, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and said lands shall not be subject to sale or preemption under any of the laws of the United States: Provided, further, That the provisions of the act of August eighteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, relative to certain reservations in the State of Florida, shall continue in force.

APPROVED, June 12, 1858.

CHAP. CLX.—An Act making Appropriations for the Expenses of Collecting the Revenue from Customs.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is, appropriated for the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for each half year, the sum of one million eight hundred thousand dollars, payable out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, together with such sums as may be received from storage, cartage, drayage, and labor for said half year.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the said first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, all laws and parts of laws which authorize the payment of the expenses, or any portion of the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs to any port or ports on the Pacific coast of the United States out of the accruing revenue, before the same is paid into the Treasury, shall be, and hereby are repealed.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to the next session of Congress a plan and estimates for reducing the expenses of the collection of the revenue, in accordance with the general recommendations of his last annual report.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to discontinue all ports of delivery, the revenue received at each of which does not amount to the sum of ten thousand dollars.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That no collector of the customs, deputy collector, naval officer, deputy naval officer, surveyor, deputy surveyor, general appraiser, superintendent of warehouses, or appraisers, shall receive a compensation more than twenty-five per cent. greater than is now paid to the officers and persons engaged in said services at the port of New York: Provided, That this section shall not be so construed as to increase the compensation of any officer of the customs, or of any person engaged in the collection thereof.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXI.—An Act making an Appropriation for the Completion of the Military Road from Astoria to Salem, in Oregon Territory.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, to be completed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXII.—An act to establish certain Post Roads.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following be established as post roads:

ALABAMA.

From Pine Level, in Montgomery county, via China Grove, Fryer's Bridge, Monticello, to Pea River, in Pike county.

From Jefferson, via Macon, to Brewersville. From Greenville, via Tuluca, Rainersville, to Leon.

From Handy post office to Jasper, in Walker county.

From Lyonsville, via Nichols', Carlie's, and Gordon's, to Whiteside's, on the Nashville and Chattanooga railroad.

From Larkinsville to Gunter's Landing. From Athens, via Good Springs and Gilbertsboro', to Mount Rassell.

From Talladega, via Florence's Ferry and Coosa Valley, to Crosswell.

From Cusseta to Chambers' Court-House.

From Society Hill to Tuskegee.

From Oxford, via Walker's store, to Fife.

From Jonesboro' to Democrat.

From Mexico to Chester.

From Ledohatchie, on the Alabama and Florida railroad, via Haynesville, Lowndsboro', Cross Roads, and Benton, to Selma.

From Oleander to Warrenton.

From Harpersville, via Kelly's Creek, Coosa Valley, Crosswell, Broken Arrow, and Trout Creek, to Greensport.

From Indigo Head to Busbeeville.

From Morgan to Columbia.

From Goshen, via Mottsville and Tranquility, to Reevesville.

From Elba, via Jones', Hilton's Cross Roads, Barnestown, Williams' Mill, Clary's, to Wardsville, Florida[a.]

From Haynesville, via Hickory Grove, Suresville, and Argus, to Troy.

From Gadsden, via Hoke's Bluff, Hogan's, New Bethel, D. Draper's, Cross Plains, Narrow Valley, Palestine, to Esom Hill, Georgia.

From Jacksonville, via New Bethel, Reevesville, Ball Play, Long's Ferry, and Matthews, to Blue Pond.

From Bruceville to Union Springs.

From Houston, Winston county, to Hanby, Walker county.

From Somerville to Valhermoso Springs, Morgan county.

From Montgomery, via Greenville and Sparta, to Pensacola, Florida.

ARIZONA.

From La Mesilla to La Mesa.

From Tucson, via Sopori, to Tubac.

From Tucson, via Sopori, to Agua Caliente.

From Wharton, via Tucson, Tubac, and Caladonia, to Fort Buchanan.

ARKANSAS.

From Lockport, via A. H. Henson's, to Monterey.

From Liberty to Murfreesboro'.

From Powhatan, via Cuba, A. Oaks, on Spring river, Major B. Ketter's, and Myatt, to Pilot Hill.

From Green Mount, via Relfs' Bluff, Connersville, to Lehi.

From Brownsville, via Maj. John Hardin's, to Lake Bluff.

From Centre Point to Ultima Thule.

From Brownstown, via Paracifita, to Doaksville.

From Wild Hans to North Fork of White river.

From Gainesville to Greenville, in Missouri.

From Fort Smith to Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico.

From Marion, via Walnut Grove, Lyle's Ferry, and Neely's Ferry, to Walnut Camp.

From Little Rock to Hungary.

From Lewisburg, in Conway county, by Galler Rock, and Bate's Mill, to Dardanelle, in Yell county.

From Mill Bayou to Chitteceaux, Missouri.

From Augusta, in Jackson county, via Alvin McDonald, to Jackson Port.

From Searcy, in White county, to intersect the route from Des arc to Forth Smith, at Cadron creek.

From Paracifita, in Sevier county, to Shetucket, in Polk county.

CALIFORNIA.

From Weaversville, via the mouth of Carson creek, to Canon city, in Trinity county.

From Sacramento City, via Washington, Puta, Vacaville, Suisun, Condolice, Napa city, Sonoma, Santa Rosa, and other intermediate post offices, to Petaluma, in Sonoma county.

From San Francisco to San Rafael.

From San Francisco to Berry and Fomales.

From San Juan, in Monterey county, to Los Angeles, in Los Angeles county.

From Auburn, Placer county, via English's bridge and Grass valley, to Nevada city.

From Sacramento city, via Yolo city, in Yolo county, to Cacheville.

From Sacramento to Stockton.

From San Bernardino, via San Geronia, Ross, Conchullo valley, to Fort Yuma.

From Union, via Hoopa valley, to Orleans bar.

From Union to San Francisco.

From Marysville, via North San Juan, to Forest city.

From Nevada city, via Woolsey's flat, Orleans flat, Chips flat, Allegheny, Forest city, Downieville, Monte Christo, Eureka, North Poker flat, to La Porte.

From Sonora, Tuolumne county, to Mariposa city.

From Stockton, via Knight's ferry, Rock river ranche, La Grange, and Murray bridge, to Mariposa.

From Murphy's, via Big Tree road, to Carson valley, Utah Territory.

From La Porte, via Quincy, to Susanville, Utah Territory.

From Bidwell's bar, via Noble's Pass, to Susanville, Utah Territory.

From Shasta city, via Noble's Pass, to Susanville, Utah Territory.

From Genoa, via Eagle, Washo, Truckey, and Long valleys, to Susanville, Utah Territory.

From San Francisco, via Alviso, to San José.

From Suisun City to Nurse's landing.

From Colusa to Marysville.

From San Francisco to Trinity, via Petaluma and Humboldt.

From San Francisco to Crescent City, via Trinidad and Humboldt bay.

From Crescent City, via Indian creek, Happy Camp, Scott river, to Yrka.

From Trinidad, via Orleans bar, Salmon rivers, to Yrka.

From Belmont, via Purcel's store, Piscadary, William's landing, to Santa Cruz.

From Oreville, via Bidwell's bar, Peaville, Brush creek, Meadow valley, to Quincy.

From Jackson to Volcano.

From Sacramento city, via Washington, Cashville, Cache creek, Yolo City, and Canon, to Clear Lake, Napa county.

From Sacramento city, by Onisbe and Walnut Grove, to Georgiana Slough, in Sacramento county.

From Mokelumne Hill, by Rich Gulch, to West Point, in Calaveras county.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

From Knight's Ferry, by La Grange, to Horritas, Mariposa county.
From Nevada city, by Alpha, to Washington, Nevada county.

From Yrka, via Shasta valley, Soda springs, Portuguese flats, Dog Creek, Churntown, to Shasta.

DELAWARE.

From Smyrna, via Chesterfield and Millington, in Kent county, Maryland, to Chestertown, in the same county.

FLORIDA.

From Mellonville, via Apopka Lake, Harris Lake, Adamsville, Sumpterville, Monroe's ferry, Pierceville, and Spring Hill, to Bay Port.

From Marianna, Florida, via Bellvue, to Bainbridge, Georgia.

From Bay Port to Clear Water Harbor.

From Orlando, in Orange county, to Adamsville, in Sumpter county, via south side of Lake Apopka.

From Clear Water Harbor to Tampa.

From Pilatka to Station at Bellamy road.

From Silver Spring, via Orange Springs, to Station at Bellamy road.

From Cedar Key to New Orleans, in steamers.

From Fernandina to Charleston, in steamers.

From Cedar Key to Key West, in steamers.

From Starke to Pilatka, via Cadiz and Timmons.

From Starke, via New river, to Providence.

From Fort Gates, on the St. Johns river, via Lake Charles and Silver Springs, to Osceola.

From Marion Cross Roads, in Jefferson county, via Finnholloway, Econphenia Spring, Warrior, and Cook's Hammock, to Clay Landing.

From Little River, in Columbia county, via Samuel Barber's and William Johnson's, to Shoaltown, on the Suwannee river.

GEORGIA.

From Doctor Town to Holmesville.

From Ocapelco to Piscioia.

From Magnolia to Troublesome.

From Holmesville to Doctor Town.

From Doctor Town to Waynesville, via Pen-darvis' store.

From Newman to Carrollton.

From Doctor Town, via Holmesville, Ocmulgee to Feronia.

From Little York to Boxville.

From Jonesboro' to Stockbridge.

From Palmetto to Carrollton, via Rivertown and Chanceville.

From Thompson to Lincolnton

From Franklin to La Grange.

From Seward, via Mount Vernon, to Battle-ground.

From Waresboro' to Irwinsville.

From Blakely, via Starford's Store, in Miller county, Curry's bridge, on Spring creek, and Hutchinson's ferry, to Quincy, Florida.

From Greenville, via Woodbury, Thundering Spring, and Tepid Springs, to Thomaston.

From Ellejay to Jasper.

From Columbus, via King post office, Cusseta, to Green Hill.

From Americus to Holley Grove.

From Vienna to Vineyard.

From Hawkinsville, via Lawson, Abbeville, and House creek, to Irwinsville.

From Newman, via Bowenville, Carrollton, Bowdon, (Georgia,) Arbacochee, Warren, to Oxford, Alabama.

From Gainesville, via Brown's bridge and Coal Mountain, to Cumming.

From Clarksville to Carnesville.

From Clayton, via Huopee, to Blairsville.

From Atlanta, via Gainesville, Sulphur Springs, and Carnesville, to Hartwell.

From Lexington, via Wolfe Skin, to Watkinsville.

From Warrenton, via Gibson, to Fenn's Bridge.

From the city of New York, via Savannah, Georgia, Thomasville, Tallasse, (Florida,) St. Marks, to New Orleans, Louisiana.

From Forsyth to Russellville.

From Boxville to Sugar Creek.

From Marietta, via Powder Springs, Salt Springs, New Manchester, and Campbelltown, to Fairburne.

From Morgan, Calhoun county, to Blakely, in Early county.

ILLINOIS.

From Mount Sterling, via Buckhorn, Walker's Neck, George Peyton's, Liberty, Adams post office, in the village of New Town, Payson to Hannibal, Missouri.

From Versailles, via Chambersburgh, Perry, to Griggsville, in Pike county.

From Camp Point, Adams county, via Houston, James Sales, in two north, range seven west, Big Neck post office, and Woodville, in Adams county, Chili, West Point, James Rankin's, to Warsaw.

From Dakota, on the Racine and Mississippi railroad, via Rock Grove, to Broadhead, on the Milwaukee and Mississippi railroad, Wisconsin.

From Joliet to Oswego.

From Golconda to Raleigh.

From Trenton to Mascouta.

From Ottawa, via Buck creek and Freedom, to Earlsville.

From Belleville, via Shiloh, to Lebanon.

From Kankakee city, on the Illinois Central railroad, to Dwight, on the Chicago and St. Louis railroad.

From Rockford, via New Millford, Killbuck, and Lindenwood, to Lane.

From Junction, via Lindenwood, White Rock, and Payne's Point, to Oregon.

From Lane to Oregon.

From Mattoon, in Coles county, via Paradise and Greenland, to Vandalia.

From Olney, in Richland county, via St. Marie and Newton, in Jasper county, to a point on Eastern Branch Central railroad.

From Preston to Chester, in Randolph county.

From Mattoon, via Sullivan, Marrowbone, to Decatur.

From Fayetteville to Elk Horn.

From Mount Vernon to Richview, in Washington county.

From Springfield, via Groveland, Delavan, Prairie creek, and Middletown, to Peoria.

From Chester, in Randolph county, via Steuben and Worthington, to Murphysboro', in Jackson county.

From Table Grove, in Fulton county, to Vermont.

From Bernadotte, in Fulton county, to Ipavia.

From Argyle to Colchester, in McDonough county.

From Monmouth, via Ellison, Raritan, and Bedford, in Henderson county, to La Harp, in Hancock county.

From Carthage to Appenoose.

From Florence to Winchester.

From Rushville, via Littleton and Birmingham to Plymouth.

From Macomb, in McDonough county, via Johnson and Table Grove, to Ipavia.

From Rock Island, via Dubuque, to Dunleith, Iowa.

From Washington, Tazewell county, via Mackinaw, Little Mackinaw, and Armington, to Atlanta.

From Chillicothe, via Northampton, Long Ridge, Valley post office, to Wyoming.

From Pecatonica, via Durand, Loona, and Avon, to Broadhead, Wisconsin.

From Grouse, via Kaneville, to Blackberry Station.

From Atlanta, via Mount Hope, Armington, and Mackinaw, to Washington.

From Havanna, via Mason city and Stephens, to Lincoln.

From Mattoon to Vandalia.

From Girard, via Lanesville, to Litchfield.

From Alton, via Harris and Woodburn, to Bunker Hill.

From Cheona, via Fairbury, to Douglas City.

From Elizabeth, via Avery, Guilford, Scale's Mound, White Oak Springs, and New Diggings, to Shullsburg, Wisconsin.

From Warren, via, Greenvale, Ward's Grove, Stockton, Plum river, Derinda, and Elizabeth, to Hanover.

From Equality, via Harrisburgh and Marion, to Carbondale.

From Murphysboro', via Blairsville and Herring's Prairie, to Marion.

From Pinckneyville, via Grand Cote Prairie, to Coulterville.

From Jonesboro', via William Penrod's and Willard's Landing, to Jackson, Missouri.

From Caledonia to Valley Forge.

From Dunleith, via Potosi, Cassville, Patchgrove, to Prairie du Chien, in Wisconsin.

INDIANA.

From Natches, in Martin county, via Pleasant Valley, Halbert's Bluff, Dover Hill, and Scotland, to Bloomfield, in Greene county.

From Jasper, in Dubois county, via Porterville, High Rock, and Hudsonville, to Washington.

From Rochester, via Kewana, and Mooresburgh, to Winnemac.

From Bourbon, via Tippecanoe town, to Bloomingsburgh.

From Knox, via Lake City and North Bend, to Monterey.

From Knox, via Clear Spring, to West York.

From Francesville to Winnemac.

From Kokoma, via John McDowell's, to Burlington.

From Lexington to Charleston.

From Michigantown, via Burgett's and Russia, to Kokomo.

From Frankfort, via Kirkland, Hillsboro', Berlin, and Petersburg, to Tipton.

From Rockville, via Ionia, Bridgeton, to Brazil.

From Winnemac to Francisville.

IOWA.

From Prairie du Chien, via Nezekaw, Ion, Buckland, Volney, Cleveland, to Frankville.

From Mason City, via Bristol, to Albert Lea.

From Clayton, via Garnaville, Reed, Elkader, and Waggoner, to Clermont.

From Prairie du Chien, via Johnson's Landing, Bell's Mills, and Waterville, to Wawkon.

From Des Moines, via Winterset, Afton, Bedford, Mound City, Missouri, to White Cloud, Kansas.

From Dyersville, via Fairbank and Waverly, to Clarksville.

From Cascade, in Dubuque county, via Isabel, Overreach's Ferry and Walnut Grove, in Jones county, Pioneer Grove, in Cedar county, Gower's Ferry, to Iowa City.

From Fort Dodge, via Lizzard Fork and Storm Lake, to Cherokee, in Cherokee county, Plymouth, to Westfield.

From McGregor, via Elkader, Volga City, to Manchester.

From McGregor, via Postville, Ossian, Fort Atkinson, Jacksonville, and North Washington, to St. Charles city.

From St. Charles city, via Rockford and Mason city, to Algona.

From Manston, via Wonewoc, to Hillsborough.

From Sioux city to Sioux Falls.

From Fillmore, via Jacksonville, Walker's, Clear Creek, Braddy's Mill, to Clarinda.

From Fort Dodge, along the west bank of the Des Moines river, crossing the west branch at Dacotah, up the west branch to the Irish colony, there crossing the west branch, to Spring Lake.

From Des Moines City, via Indianola, Osceola, and Leon, in Iowa, and Gentry Court-House, (Missouri,) to Saint Joseph in the State of Missouri.

From Lewis, via Iranistan, Blake's Settlement, Rocky Ford, Corey post office, to Sidney.

From Bellefontaine, via Attica and Gosport, to Chariston.

From West Union, via Fredericksburgh and Bradford, to St. Charles City.

From Des Moines, via Buffalo Grove, Ripley, and Jefferson, in Green county, to Sac city in Sac county, to Sioux City, in Woodbury county.

From Webster, via Hewitt, Buffalo Grove, Blue Earth City, to Mankato, Minnesota.

From Lewis, in Cass county, via Smith Bell's Mill, and Sciota, in Montgomery county, to Clarinda, in Page county.

From Dubuque, via Bellevue and Sabula, to Davenport.

From Sioux City, in Woodbury county, via Plymouth city, to Spirit Lake.

From Sioux City, in Woodbury county, via Nicolet, to Sioux Falls, Minnesota.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

From Des Moines, via Jefferson, in Green county, Lake City, Calhoun county, to Sac City, in Sac county.

From Des Moines, via Dayton, Fort Dodge, Addison, and Paoli, to Spirit Lake.

From Bentonsport, in Van Buren county, via Keosauque, Philadelphia, Iowaville, Ottumwa, Eddyville, Amsterdam, Red Rock, Bennington, Lafayette, and Adelphi, to Des Moines.

From Burlington, via Augusta, Denmark, West Point, Dover, and Primrose, to Farmington.

From Marietta, via Nevada, Boonesboro', county seat of Green county, county seat of Carroll county, Dennison, and Belvidere, to Decatur, Nebraska Territory.

From Des Moines City, via Indianola, Chariton, Corydon, Walnut, (Iowa,) St. John, and Milan, to Jefferson City, Missouri.

From Elkador, via Elkport, Millville, to Cassville, Minnesota.

From Magnolia, via Preparation, Belvidere, and Smithland, to Correctionville.

From Dyersville, via Poultny, Plum Spring, Yankee Settlement, Honey creek, Cox creek, Volga City, Highland, Elgin, Clermont, &c., to Decorah.

From Independence, via Laporte City creek, Lafayette, Marietta, Iowa Centre, to Des Moines.

From Clayton, via Garnaville, Clayton Centre, Elkador, Highland Dinna, to Fayette.

From Ottumwa, Chillicothe, Cuba, to Alban.

From Cedar Falls, via Willoughby, Swanton, Bear Grove, Genoa, to Marysville.

From Sioux City, via Sergeant's Bluff, Smithland, Morris, Denison, Carrollton, Panora, to Adel.

From Brunswick to Unionville.

From Knoxville, via Red Rock, Reedsville, Monroe, to Newton.

From Magnolia, via the mouth of Soldier river, Cumming City, Fontenelle, Buchanan, North Bend, Columbus City, and Monroe, to Cleveland, Nebraska Territory.

From Tipton, in Cedar county, to Rome, Madison, and the center of Jones county, and thence to Cascade, in Dubuque county.

From Muscatine to Oscaloosa, via Ononka, Columbus City, Amboy, Washington, and Signourney.

From Oscaloosa to Council Bluffs, via Knoxville, Indianola, and Winterset.

From Independence, by Fairbank, in Buchanan county, Franklin, Bremer, and Leroy, in Bremer county, to Fredericksburgh, in Chickasaw county.

From Mount Pleasant, in Henry county, via Wayne, in said county, Crawfordville, Amboy, Davis creek, and Yatton, in Washington county, and Seventy-Eight, in Johnson county, to Iowa City.

From Iowa Falls, in Hardin county, via Marysville, Hampton, and Saratoga, in Franklin county, to Mason City, in Cerro Gordo county.

From Dacotah, in Humboldt county, via the south half of section eighteen, township ninety-three, and range thirty, and Paoli, in Palo Alto county, to Spirit Lake, in Dickinson county.

From Winterset, in Madison county, via Fontenelle, Adair county, to Lewis, in Cass county.

From Iowaville, via Troy, Stringtown, and Milton, to Memphis, Missouri.

From Wiscotta, Dallas county, via Bolds, in the northeast corner of Adair county, Holliday's Settlement, and Clarksville, to Fontenelle, in said county.

From Eddyville to Des Moines, via Hamilton, Marysville, Attica, Knoxville, Pleasantville, Wheeling, Hartford, Carlisle, and Avon.

From Newton, Jasper county, to Nevada, Story county, via the State road.

From McGregor, via Elkader, Volga City, Taylorsville, Brush creek, Buffalo Grove, to Independence.

From Quincy, via Brookville, to Bedford.

From Sioux City to Covington.

From Steamboat Rock, in Hardin county, via Berlin, Bur-Oak Grove, Skunk Grove, and Webster City, to Fort Dodge.

From McGregor's, in Clayton county, via Monana, Fort Atkinson, in Winnisheik county, Jacksonville and New Hampton, in Chickasaw county, to St. Charles City, in Floyd county.

From Inkpadutah, on the Big Sioux, to Iowa, on the Missouri river, (Dacotah Territory.)

From St. Charles via Mason City, Clear Lake, Algona, and Paoli, to Moulton City.

From Cedar Falls, via Belmond, Algona, and Spirit Lake, to Fort Ridgely, (Minnesota.)

From Westfield, via Greeley's Grove, to Independence.

From Marietta, via Lafayette, Steamboat Rock, Ackley, Namantown, Hampton, Saratoga, Mainse Grove, Doun Grove, to Mason City.

From Iowa City, via Windham, Lafayette City, Millersburg, Montezuma, Linn Grove, to Des Moines City.

From Toledo, via Boonesboro', New Jefferson, Carrollton, Denison, Belvidere, Onawa, Cook's Landing, to Decatur, in Nebraska Territory.

From Grinnell, via Green Castle, Timber creek, to Marietta.

From Cedar Falls, via Willoughby, to Leoni, the county seat of Butler county.

From Mount Pleasant, in Henry county, to Washington, in Washington county, via Trenton, Marshall, and Marcellus.

From Marengo, in Iowa county, to Vinton, in Benton county, via Irving, in Benton county.

From Ashton to Decatur, in Nebraska Territory.

From Marietta, via Nevada, Boonesboro', New Jefferson, to Carrollton.

From Mitchell, via Plymouth to Mason.

From Mount Vernon, via Linden, Paddington, to Wapsa.

From New Jefferson, via Lake City, Raccoon Fork, to Sac City.

From Onawa, via Smithland, Cherokee, to Spirit Lake.

From Osage, via Shell Rock Falls, to Mason City.

From Ossian, via Calmar, Buchanan, New Oregon, Vernon Springs, Morgan, Grainger, to Foreston.

From Ottumwa, via Chillicothe, Cuba, to Abia.

From Sac City, via Lane's Grove, Spirit Lake, and Springfield, Minnesota, to Maukato.

From Cascade, via Suplis Ford, to Wyoming.

From Centreville, via Moravia, to Abia.

From Clear Lake City, via Elk Grove, Forest City, to Blue Earth City, Minnesota.

From Corydon, via Warsaw, Medicineville, and Terre Haute, Missouri, to Scousville.

From Corydon to St. Johns, Missouri.

From Crescent City to Florence, Nebraska Territory.

From Delhi to Nottingham, on the Dubuque and Pacific railroad.

From Dennison, via Belvidere, Ashton, to Dexter in Nebraska Territory.

From Des Moines, via Mitchell, Green Castle, Edenville, Starry Grove, to Marietta.

From Fort Dodge to Sioux Falls, Minnesota.

From Fort Dedge up West Fork of Des Moines river, to Spirit Lake.

From Greenfield, via Holaday's and Pierson's Mill, to Adell.

From Harlin, via Waukon, New Galena, Dorchester, Portland Prairie, Minnesota, and Caledonia, to Brownsville.

From Iowa Falls, via Alden, Otisville, Fryburg, Belmond, Bur Oak Grove, Forest City, to Blue Earth City, Minnesota.

From Iowa Falls, via Belmond, to Clear Lake City.

From Leon, via Stanley's Store, Spring Valley, to Nine Eagles.

From Lewis, via Wheeler's Grove, Farm Creek, Silver Creek, to Glenwood.

From Bloomfield to Lancaster, Missouri.

From Bradford to Rockford.

From Cedar Falls, via Willoughby, Butler Centre, Bear Grove, Maysville, Hampton, Saratoga, Belmond[d], Irvington, to Algona.

From Decorrah, via Bluffton, Plymouth Rock, Twine Springs, Arnoldsville, Lane Springs, Forest City, and Leroy, to Austin, in Minnesota.

From Dyersville, via Rockville, Hopkinton, to Anamosa.

From Independence, via Chatham, Fairbank, Rock's Settlement, to Fredericksburg.

From Johnsonport, via Rossville, Cleveland, Lybrand, Postville, Clearmount, to West Union.

From Landing to Twine Spring, in Winnisheik county.

From Magnolia, via Preparation, Belvidere, Smithland, to Sioux City.

From Monticello, via New Buffalo, McQueen's Mill, to Paris.

From Mount Vernon, via New London, Paddington, to Clark's Ford.

From Rockford, to Rock Grove City.

From Rockford, via west side of Shell Rock river, Nora Springs, to Shell Rock Falls.

From Webster, via Peck's Cooper's Indianapolis, to Hopewell.

From West-Union, via Wapsi, Buck run, Martinsburg, to Waverly.

From Belmond, via Liberty, Dacotah City, to Packard's settlement, (on the Little Sioux.)

From Walnut Fork, via Madison, and the center of Jones county, to Cascade.

From Webster City, by Dacotah City, Paoli, Irish Colony, to Spirit Lake.

From Webster City, via Cropper's Grove, to Maukato, Minnesota.

From West Liberty, via Pike, to Port Allen.

From Wilton Junction, via Tipton, to Loudon Station, on the Chicago, Iowa, and Nebraska railroad.

From Sioux City, via the mouth of Vermillion river, and the lower crossing of James river, at the present established ferries on those rivers, to Fort Randall, Nebraska Territory.

From Fort Dodge, via Emmett City, thence to Odessa, in Minnesota, thence via Otesco, Crystal Lake City, to Maukato. [Maukato.]

From McGregor to Owatonna, in Minnesota.

From Sioux City, Iowa, via lower crossing of the Big Sioux river, the mouth of Vermillion river, present crossing of James river, and Choctaw creek, to Indian Agency, on the Yancton Sioux reserve and Fort Randall.

From Sioux City, via Neobrara, to the Indian agency of the Ponka Indians, and the valley of the Neobrara river, to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, via Chimney Rock.

From Sioux City, via Sioux Falls, to the mouth of Snake river.

From Fort Randall, Nebraska Territory, via the mouth of Crow river, passing on the east side of the Missouri, to the mouth of Little Medicine Knobb river.

From Sioux Falls to Fort Randall.

From the mouth of James river, via Blue Earth, Rocky Hill, Sandy Hill, to Wakaudapi Hills.

From Neobrara, via Ponka reserve, to Chimney Rock.

From Sioux City, Iowa, via Neobrara to Ponka reserve, to Fort Randall and mouth of White Earth river.

KENTUCKY.

From Lebanon, via Bradfordsville, Liberty, Poplar Hill, Adam's Mill, to Somerset.

From Murray to Feliciana.

From New Liberty to Ghent.

From Murray, via Boydsville, Dukedom, and Feliciana, to Hickman.

From Providence, via Clyde, to Vanderburgh.

From Paducah, via Mayfield and Feliciana, to Hickman.

From Crittenden to Falmouth.

From John Word's, in Knox county, to Bush's Store, in Laurel county.

From Flat Lick to Manchester.

From Ashland to Stewart's Tunnel.

From Paris, via Flat Rock, Sharpsburg, to Owingsville.

From Bells Trace, via New Hope, to Head of Paint.

From Gladestville, (Virginia,) via Willow Lick, Head of Poor Fork, to John Sturgel, Kentucky.

From Somerset, via Sublimity, to Williamsburgh.

From Sublimity to Linden.

From Hustonville, via Middleburg, Adam's Mills, to Somerset.

From Louisville, by the plank road, to Tippecanoe, in Oldham county.

From Hopkinsville to Paducah, via Cadiz, Wallonia, Rock Castle, Birmingham, Briansburg, and Palmer.

From Paducah to Blondville, via Jamestown, Newton's Creek, and Hazlewood.

From Cadiz, via Donaldson, to Limeport, Tennessee.

From Madisonville to Caseyville.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

From Madisonville to Morganfield.
 From Paducah to Paris, Tennessee, via Mayfield and Boydsville.
 From Princeton to Smithland, via Eddyville and Dyersburg.
 From Benton to Mayfield, via Walker's Store and Symsonia.
 From Paducha to Hickman, via Mayfield, Felician, and Lodgton.
 From Blandville to Hickman, via Milburn, Clinton, and Lodgton.
 From Morganfield to Caseyville, via Gum Grove.
 From Newcastle, via Springport and Marion, to New Liberty.

KANSAS TERRITORY.

From Westport, (Missouri,) via Shawnee, (Kansas Territory,) Lexington, Franklin, Lawrence, Kanwaka, Lecompton, Big Springs, Tecumseh, and Topeka, to Indianola.
 From Westport, (Missouri,) via Olatka, (Kansas Territory,) San Barnard, Prairie city, and Ottawa creek, to Sac and Fox agency.
 From Westport, (Missouri,) via Paola, (Kansas Territory,) Ossawatimie, Miami village, Centerville, Sugar Mound, Carbondale, and Little Osage, to Fort Scott.
 From Westport, (Missouri,) to Spring Hill.
 From Westport, (Missouri,) via Bloomington, Paris, and Sugar Mound, to Cofachiqui.
 From Sugar Mound, via Paris and Brooklyn, to Westport.
 From Butler, (Missouri,) via Menika, (Kansas Territory,) Shannon, Hyatt, Hampden, Burlington, Ottumwa, California, Italia, and Emporia, to Council Grove.
 From Fort Scott to Marmaton.
 From Fort Scott to Catholic Mission.
 From Fort Scott to Crawford Seminary, (Missouri.)
 From Fort Scott, via Barnesville, to West Point.
 From Fort Scott to Fort Union.
 From Fort Scott to Mapleton.
 From Fort Scott to Fort Atkinson.
 From Fort Scott, via Breckinridge, (Missouri,) Hard Wood, Medoc, Carthage, Neosho, Harmon's Mill, Elkridge, Pineville, and White Rock Prairie, to Bentonville.
 From Ossawatimie to Walker.
 From Leroy to Belmont.
 From Leroy to Hampden.
 From Leroy to Pleasant Grove.
 From Council Grove, via Kenton and Riley city, to Fort Riley.
 From Council Grove, via Orleans, Italia, Columbia, Leroy, Neosho Falls, Cofachiqui, to Fort Scott.
 From Topeka, via Waubanusee, Zeandale, and Ashland, to Fort Riley.
 From Ossawatimie, via Walker and Shannon, to Neosho.
 From Ossawatimie, via Shumansville and Ohio city, to Sac and Fox agency.
 From Paola, via Ossawatimie, Bloomington, and Paris, to Sugar Mound.
 From Shumanville, via Shannon, to Cafachiqui.
 From Richardson, via Italia, to Columbia.
 From Sac and Fox agency to Leroy.
 From Fort Riley, via Reader, to Vermillion city.
 From Fort Riley, via Randolph and Vermillion city, to Marysville.
 From Lawrence, via Bloomington, Richardson, and Italia, to Emporia.
 From Topeka, via Brownsville, to Council Grove.
 From Topeka, via Brownsville, Wilmington, and Kansas Centre, to Emporia.
 From Lawrence, via Prairie city, Ottawa creek, Shannon, Hyatt, and Cofachiqui, to Humboldt.
 From Tecumseh, via Richland, to Sac and Fox agency.
 From Tecumseh, via Walkamsa city, to Richardson.
 From Lecompton, via Walkamsa, Ottawa creek, McKinney, and Stanton, to Ossawatimie.
 From Lecompton to Marysville.
 From Lecompton to Richardson.
 From Lecompton, by Davis and Midway, to Paoli.

From Kansas, (Missouri,) via Wyandotte, (Kansas Territory,) Quindaro, and Lawrence, to Lecompton.
 From Kansas, (Missouri,) via Wyandotte, Quindaro, and Delaware city, to Leavenworth city.
 From Kansas, (Missouri,) via Oskallassa, (Kansas Territory,) to Ozawkie.
 From Fort Leavenworth to Tauromee.
 From Fort Leavenworth, via Leavenworth city, to Lawrence.
 From Leavenworth city, via Middletown, to Lecompton.
 From Leavenworth city, via Nerato, Easton, Shieffids, Ozawkie, Mt. Florence, Indianola, Silver Lake, St. Mary's Mission, Rock creek, Manhattan, Ogden, and Fort Riley, and Kansas Falls, to Buchanan.
 From Leavenworth city, via Stanley's, Mooney, Grasshopper Falls, Rock Point, and Vermillion city, to Dyer's.
 From Leavenworth city, via Fort Leavenworth, Kickapoo city, Fort William, Sumner, Mount Pleasant, Atchison, Doniphan, Rock creek, Walnut Grove, and High Land, to Iowa Point.
 From Independence, (Missouri,) via Kansas, the settlement at the mouth of Huesfona, on the Upper Arkansas, and Little Salt Lake settlement, at the head of Nicolet river, to Stockton, (California.)
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) via Whiteheads, (Kansas Territory,) Rogersville, and Troy, to Walnut Grove.
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) via Elwood, (Kansas Territory,) Walthanna, Palermo, Geary city, Doniphan, and Ozawkie, to Lecompton.
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) via Iowa Point, (Kansas Territory,) Mt. Roy, Hamlin, Central city, Highland, and Urbana, to Marysville.
 From Iowa Point to Mount Roy.
 From Iowa Point to Swain's Store.
 From White Cloud to Padonia.
 From Marysville to Nottingham.
 From Atchison, via Kennekuk, Burnside, Powhattan, and Capsimi, to Marysville.
 From Rubo, (Nebraska,) to Topeka.
 From Rogersville, via Nemaha agency, to White Cloud.
 From Oregon, (Missouri,) via Iowa Point, (Kansas Territory,) to Nemaha agency.
 From Kickapoo city, via Crooked creek, to Grasshopper Falls.
 From Ozawkie, via Pleasant Hill and Indianola, to Topeka.
 From Doniphan, via Green Top, to Pleasant Grove.
 From West Point to Brooklyn.
 From West Point to Paris.
 From Walthanna to Claytonville.
 From Lawrence, via Shields, to Sumner.
 From Topeka, via Grasshopper Falls, to Sumner.
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) to Kennekuk.
 From Pleasant Hill, (Missouri,) via Plum Grove, Spring Hill, Gardiner, and Franklin, to Lawrence.
 From Spring Hill, via Shannon, Hyatt, and Stanton, to Neosho city.
 From Quindaro, via Shawnee, Olathe, Paola, Ossawatimie, Shannon, and Hyatt, to Burlington.
 From Lawrence, via Palmyra, Ohio city, Deer creek, to Humboldt.
 From White Cloud, via Pandonia, Hamburg, Central City, Richmond, and Seneca, to Marysville.
 From White Cloud to Iowa Point.
 From Topeka, via Brownsville, Wilmington, Waushara, Allen, and Orleans, to Plymouth.
 From Leavenworth city, via Atchison, Sumner, Donaphan, Palermo, Elwood, White Cloud, Rulo, (Nebraska Territory,) Nemaha, and Brownsville, to Nebraska city.
 From Lawrence to Burlington.
 From Lecompton, via Bloomington, Versailles, to Italia.
 From Emporia, via Bayard, Chelsea, El Dorado, to Towanda.
 From Leavenworth city, on the old military road as now established, via Salt Creek valley, Mount Pleasant, Rusk, Alley's Cuyuga, Kennekuk, Locknanes, Palmetto, and Marysville, to Fort Kearny, (Nebraska Territory.)

 From Lawrence, via Oskaloosa, Grasshopper Falls, Hamlin, Falls City, and Brownsville, to Nebraska city, (Nebraska Territory.)
 From Topeka to St. Joseph, (Missouri.)
 From Fort Riley to Gatesville.
 From Lawrence, via Big Springs, to Brownville, Fremont, Alma, to Ashland.
 From Burlington, via Verdigris Falls, Fall river, Indiana city, to El Dorado.
 From Lawrence, via Centropolis, Sac and Fox agency, and Oread, to Burlington.
 From Grasshopper Falls, via Osawkie and Oskaloosa, to Lawrence.
 From Sac and Fox agency to Pleasant Grove.
 From Grasshopper Falls to Hatton.
 From Cofachiqui, via Belmont, to Pleasant Grove.
 From Leavenworth city and Fort Leavenworth, via Kennekuk, to Palmetto.
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) via Iowa Point Mount Roy, Hamlin, Central City, to Marysville.
 From Leavenworth city, via Oskaloosa, to Lecompton.
 From Westport, (Missouri,) via Spring Hill, Stanton, Shumansville, Greeley, to Neosho City.
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) via Wothina, Winona, Hiawatha, Carson, Central City, to Marysville, Kansas.
 From Warrensburgh, (Missouri,) via Harrisonville, Paola, to Ossawatimie.
 From Manhattan City to Marysville.
 From Elwood to Capioma.
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) via Palermo, Geary City, Donaphan, Monrovia, Grasshopper Falls, to Topeka.
 From St. Joseph, (Missouri,) via Rushville, via Sumner, Oskaloosa, to Lawrence.
 From Topeka, via Quincy and Eagle City, to Shel Rock Falls.
 From Emporia to Cottonwood Falls.
 From Italia, via Council Grove, to Buchanan.
 From Warsaw, (Missouri,) via Butler, to Montgomery, Kansas.
 From Ossawatimie, via Paris, to Montgomery.
 From Atchison to Vermillion City.
 From Atchison to De Foe.
 From Atchison to America.
 From Atchison, via Lancaster, Muscotah, Eureka, Ontario, and America, to Vermillion City.
 From St. Joseph (Missouri) and Elwood, via Kennekuk, to Grasshopper Falls.
 From Kansas City to Fort Scott.

LOUISIANA.

From New Road, via Morganza, Bayou, Catwaba, Cypress Point, to Simmsport.
 From Vernon, via Brush Valley and Sparta, to Ringgold.
 From Ville Platte to Hickory Flat.
 From Shreveport to Mansfield, via Red Bluff and Kingston.
 From Livonia, via Point Coupee Court-House, to Point Coupee post office.
 From Goodwater to Vernon.
 From Baton Rouge to Henry F. Bennett's store, parish of Ascension.
 From Painscourtville to Bayou Pierre, Part and Belle river, in the parish of Assumption.

MAINE.

From Bridgewater, via Mars' Hill, Letter "C," and Maple Grove, to Fort Fairfield.
 From Bridgeford, via Saco, Buxton, Standish, Baldwin, Sebago, Denmark, and Fryeburg, to Lovell.
 From Kingfield, via Jerusalem, and Stratton brook, to Eustis' Mills.
 From East Eddington, via Clifton and Otis, to Mariaville.
 From Phillips' to Rangeley.
 From Bradford to Dover.

MARYLAND.

From Patuxent to Forest.
 From Lakesville to Bishop's Head.
 From Snow Hill to Derickson's Cross Roads.
 From Snow Hill, via Newtown to Princess Anne.

MASSACHUSETTS.

From Taunton, via Raynham, to Bridgewater.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

From Bellingham to Woonsocket Falls, (Rhode Island.)
From Sheldenville to Wrentham.

MINNESOTA.

From Minneapolis, via Greenwood, Cocato, Forest City, and Irving, to Breckinridge.
From Fort Brits, via Blue Earth City, to Albert Lea.
From Houston City, via Yucatan, and Highland, to Preston.
From Dacotah City, via Judson, Crystal Lake City, to Blue Earth City.
From Albert Lea, via Bristol, (Iowa,) Mason City, to Cerro Gordo, (Iowa.)
From Albert Lea, via Blue Earth City, Fairbault county, to Winnebago City.
From Traverse des Sioux, via Head of Swan Lake, Lafayette, Fort Ridgely, to Sioux agency.
From Lake City, via Mazeppa, Pine Island, Manterville, to Wassiojah.
From New Ulm, via Soda Springs, Oasis, Mountain Pass, to Medary.
From Medary, via Flandreau City, Summit City, Sioux Falls City, Emineja, to Sioux City, (Iowa.)
From Medary to Fort Randall, (Nebraska Territory.)
From Lake City to Rochester.
From La Crescent, via Loretto, Ridgeway, Farmersville, Wytoka, Wayland, Wyattville, Warren, Neoca, Saratoga, Chatfield, and Marion, to Rochester.
From Caledonia, via Sheldon, Yucatan, and Dedham, to Rushford.
From Rochester, via Marion, Chatfield, Farmers' Grove, and Preston, to Carimona.
From St. Peters, via New Ulm, Fort Ridgely, Sioux agency, to Pajutazee.
From Looneyville, via Houston, Yucatan, Deadham, Newbury, Senora, to Elliot.
From Chatfield, via High Forest, Madison, Geneva, Freeborn, to Winnebago City.
From Shockapee, via St. Valentine, Rockford, Monticello, to Clear Water.
From Brownsville, via La Crescent, Eagle Bluffs, Dressbuck, Dakota, Richmond, Lineville, Horner, to Winona.
From Winnebago city, via Fairmount, to Jackson.
From Glencoe, via Hutchinson, Forest City, Paynesville, to Clear Water.
From Glencoe, via Camden, to Watertown.
From Elliot, via Granger, Uxbridge, Forest City, Lime Springs, Chester, Leroy, Six Mile Grove, Cedar Valley, Otranto, Shell Rock City, Walnut Lake, to Blue Earth City.
From Chatfield, via Pleasant Grove, High Forest, to Austin.
From Minneapolis, via Wayzata, Watertown, Weinstead, Byron, and Cedar City, to Kandiyohi.
From Minneapolis to Hudson, on the west side of Minnesota river.
From Clear Lake, via Clear Water and Fair Haven, to Forest City.
From Faribault, via Swaresey and Iasco, to Mankato.
From Owatanna, via Clear Lake and Iasco, to Mankato.
From Austin, via Geneva, Berlin, Otisco, Wilton, and Iasco, to St. Peter.
From Wabashau, via Dodge City, to Medford.
From Princeton, via Granite City, to Crow Wing.
From Little Falls, via Granite City, Hanover, and Stirling, to Fortuna.
From Little Falls, via Broitersburg, to Sunrise City.
From Watsab, in Benton county, to St. Joseph, in Stearns county.
From St. Cloud, via Broitersburg, and Brunswick, to Fortuna.
From Faribault, in Rice county, to Wilton, in Waseca county.
From Grey Eagle, via Pine Creek, P. O., to Ridgeway.
From Rochester, via Salem, Ashland, and Somerset, to Wilton.
From Red Wing, via Sacramento, Wanamingo, and Rice Lake, to Owatona.
From Carmon's Falls, via Wastedo, Hader,

Wanamingo, Cherry Grove, and Concord, to Monterville.

From Austin to Blue Earth City.
From Minneapolis, via Watertown and Winstead, to Breckenridge.
From Mount Vernon to White Water Falls.
From Geneva, in Freeborn county, to Freeborn City, in Faribault county.
From Swan River to Long Prairie.
From Blue Earth City, to Fort Dodge, in Iowa.
From New Ulm, via Tuttle's Farm, to Leavenworth.
From Long Prairie to Little Falls.
From Columbus to Cambridge.
From Clear Spring, via Clearwater, to Forest City.
From Red Wing to Montorville.
From Sioux Falls to Fort Randall, Nebraska Territory.
From the mouth of James River, via Blue Earth, Rocky Hill, Sandy Hill, to Wakandapi Hills.
From Elliot, via Granger, Uxbridge, Forest City, Lime Springs, Chester, Le Roy, Six Mile Grove, Cedar Valley, Otranto, Shell Rock City, Walnut Lake, to Blue Earth City.
From Chatfield, via Pleasant Grove, High Forest, to Austin.
From Minneapolis, Wayzata, Watertown, Weinstead, Byron, and Cedar City, to Kandiyohi.
From Minneapolis, to Hudson, on the west side of Minnesota river.
From Clear Lake, via Clearwater and Fair Haven, to Forest City.
From Faribault, via Swanzey and Iasco, to Mankato.
From Owatanna, via Clear Lake, Iasco, to Mankato.
From Austin, via Geneva, Berlin, Otisco, Wilton, Iasco, to St. Peters.

MICHIGAN.

From Corunna, via Shiawassee town, Freeport, Antrim, Conway, to Fowlerville.
From Leonard post office, in Mecosta county, the northern terminus of route number twelve thousand six hundred and seven, to Stevens' post office in Grand Traverse county.
From Nickleville, in Saginaw county, via Brody and Elsie, to Duplain, in Clinton county.
From Brooklyn to Napoleon.
From Lapeer, in Lapeer county, via Marathon, Watertown, and Fremont, in Tuscolee county, to Vassar, in said county.
From Adamsville, via Mottville and Union, to White Pidgeon.
From St. John's, in Clinton county, via Keystone, Greenbush, Stella, North Star, to La Fayette.
From —, via Matherton, Monticello, to Albany, in Isabel county.
From Ithica, via La Fayette, to St. Charles.
From Ithica, via Alina and St. Louis, to Midland City.
From St. John's, via Luna, Gardner's Corners, East Essex, Maple Rapids, Spring Brook, to Ithica.
From Jackson to Pulaski.
From Marquette, by the most direct line to the Wisconsin State line, on the Menomonic river, about five miles from its mouth.
From Little Traverse, via Mackinaw City, to Duncan.
From Appleton, via Shawano, L. Ance's P. O., Houghton's, Clifton, Eagle river, Eagle Harbor, to Copper Harbor.
From Midland City to Albany.
From Pewamo, via Maple P. O., to Portland.
From Pewamo to Mancherton.
From Chessanning to St. Charles.
From Ontanagon, via Rockland, Adventure, Algonquin, Houghton, Clifton, Eagle river, Eagle Harbor, to Copper Harbor.

MISSISSIPPI.

From Kosciusko, via Centre, Plattsburgh, Noxapater, Coopwood, Fearn's Springs, and Gholson, to Shuqualak.
From Granada, via Duck Hill, Stateland, Greensboro', Bankston, Wilcox, New Prospect, and Louisville, to Macon.
From Carrollton to Sidon.
From Schuqualak, via Gholson, Coffadelliah,

Philadelphia, Laurel Hill, Edinburg, and Carthage, to Canton.

From Kosciusko, via Long Creek, Allen, Williams' Ferry, to Taylor's Depot.
From Lauderdale station, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, via Kemper's Springs, Cullum's Mills and Pleasant Ridge, to De Kalb.
From Benton to Vaughn's station.
From Okolona, via Houston, Pittsboro', to Granada.
From Granada, via Charleston, to Goff's Landing.
From Canton, via Ludlow, Hillsboro', Corhatta, and Decatur, to Enterprise.

MISSOURI.

From Herman, in Gasconade county, via Francis Peters, on Second Creek, Mount Sterling, John B. Coopers', in Osage county, Alexander S. Rogers', in Galloway's Prairie, to Pay Down, in Maries county.
From Jefferson City to Emporia, Kansas.
From Greenfield, via Horse creek and Lamar, to Fort Scott, Kansas.
From Jefferson City to Moneka, Kansas.
From Little Piney, via Wright and Ketchum's Store, to Dent Court-House, in Dent county.
From Greenfield, Dade county, via King's Point and Davisburgh, to Carthage, in Jasper county.
From Osage City, via Toas, Castle Rock, Westphalia, Maries, to Vienna.
From Pilot Knob, in Iron county, via Charles Carter's, in Reynolds county, to Doniphan, in Ripley county.
From Marshfield to St. Luke.
From Cole Camp, via Clinton, to Butler.
From Neosho, via Spartansville and Gilstrap's Ferry, to the Grand Sabine, in the Cherokee Nation.
From Vienna to Tuscumbia.
From Steelville to Centerville.
From Bolivar, via Pleasant Hope and Fair Grove, to Marshfield.
From Chester, (Illinois,) via St. Mary's Landing, R— Mills, Pleasant Valley, Cross Roads, Mine La Motte, to Frederickstown.
From Fayette, via Bunker Hill, to Sturgeon.
From Brunswick, via Elk Springs, Lacleide, Linneus, Scottsville, Milan, Jackson Corners, Unionville, to Centerville, (Iowa.)
From Somerset to Princeton.
From Macon City, via La Platte, Kirksville, Greentop, Inkerman, Lancaster, Lavinah, to Bloomfield, (Iowa.)
From Chillicothe, via Trenton, Middlebury, to Princeton.
From Shelbyville, via Newark, to Edina.
From Huntsville, via Fort Henry, Breckinridge, and Magee College, to Bloomington.
From Boonville, via Boonsboro', to Glasgow.
From Canton, via Monticello, Newark, Edina, Kirkville, Nineveh, Greenville, Milan, Lindley, and Trenton, to Gallatin.
From Lowell to Rockport.
From Oregon, via Whig Valley and Glain's Rancho, to Marysville.
From Fillmore, via Graham, Russell's Mills, Lamar's Station, and Amity, to Clarinda, (Iowa.)
From Canton, via Memphis, Lancaster, Unionville, St. John, Princeton, Bethany, Gentry Court-House, and Rochester, to St. Joseph.
From Rochester, via Douglas, Island Branch, Mount Pleasant, West Fork, and Middle Fork of Grand river, to Fairview.
From Rockport to Lewis, (Iowa.)
From Oregon, via Forest City, to White Cloud, (Kansas.)
From St. Joseph, via Elwood, Wathena, Troy, and Bennett's, to Kennekuck, (Kansas.)
From Parkville, via Ridgeley and Plattsburgh, to Stewartsville.
From Weston, via Camden Point, to Easton.
From St. Joseph, via Belmont and Laporte, to Charleston, (Kansas.)
From Easton, via Rochester and Fairview, to Des Moines.
From Missouri City, via Liberty and Plattsburgh, to Stewartsville.
From Liberty, via Hayneville and Mirabile, to Gallatin.
From Missouri City, via Hayneville, to Cameron.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

From Parkville, via Plattsburgh, Gallatin, Trenton, Milan, Memphis, to Burlington, (Iowa.)
 From Greenwood Valley to Eminence.
 From Charleston to St. James Bayou.
 From Appleton, via Pocahontas and Vancle's Store, to Cape Girardeau City.
 From Frederickstown to Perryville.

From Princetown, via Cainsville, Harrison City, and Coysville, to Albany.
 From Platte City, via Farley, to Leavenworth City, (Kansas.)
 From Rockport, via Rich, to Mount Vernon, (Nebraska.)

From Chillicothe, via Springhill, Livingston, Jamesport, Crittenden, and Pleasant Ridge, to Bethany.
 From Plattsburgh, via Platte river, Arnolds-ville, Berming, De Kalb, and Rushville, to Atchinson, (Kansas.)

From Richfield, via Cameron, Alto-Vista, and Pattensburg, to Bethany.

From Harrisonville, via Parla, Stanton, Ohio City, to Sac and Fox agency.

From Elk Mills, via Lewis Hetterbrand's, Peter L. Thompson's, and Lewis Rogers's, to the Grand Sabine, (Cherokee Nation.)

From Herman, via Second Creek, Mount Sterling, Delhi, Galloway's Prairie, to Paydor.

From Savannah, via Whiteville, Guilford, and Sweet Home, to Bedford, (Iowa.)

From Allendale, via Centrehill, Smithton, and West Point, to Marysville.

From St. Joseph's, via Iowa Point, White Cloud, Mount Roy, Yamlin, and Central City, (Kansas.)

From Bethany, via Eagleville, to Decatur City, (Iowa.)

From Parkville, via Barry, to Plattsburgh.

From Carrollton, via Finney's Grove, Millville, and Knoxville, to Plattsburgh.

From Parkville, via Fairmount, Smithville, Carpenter's Store, and Plattsburgh, to Gallatin.

From Marysville to Bedford, (Iowa.)

From Bethany to Nine Eagles.

From Lebanon to Hartwell.

From Douglas Court-House to Howell Court-House.

From Hartwell to Douglas Court-House.

From Buffalo, via St. Luke, to Marshfield.

From Fremont, via Wheatland, to Lamar.

From Pilot Knob to Houston.

From Herman, via Francis Peters's, Mount Sterling, John B. Cooper's, in Osage county, Alexander S. Rogers's, in Galloway's Prairie, to Pay Down, in Maries county.

From Butler to Emporia, (Kansas.)

From Greenfield, via Horse creek and Lamar, to Fort Scott, (Kansas.)

From Butler to Moneka, (Kansas.)

From Little Piney, via Wright and Ketchum's Store, to Dent Court-House.

From Greenfield, via King's Point, and Davisburg, to Carthage.

From Osage City, via Toas, Castle Rock, Westphalia, and Maries, to Vienna.

From Pilot Knob, via Charles Carter's, to Doniphan.

From Neosho, via Spartanville, (Missouri,) and Giltrap's Ferry, to the Grand Sabine, (Cherokee Nation.)

From Vienna to Tusculumbia.

From Steelville to Centreville.

From Bolivar, via Pleasant Hope and Fair Grove, to Marshfield.

From Pond Creek, via Hall and Varona, to Copp's Creek.

From Marshfield to Hartwell.

From Houston to Howell Court-House.

From Howell Court House to Pilot Hill, (Arkansas.)

From Cole Camp, via Chariton, to Butler.

From Hartwell to Ozark.

From Lamar to Nevada.

From Nevada to Papinsville.

From Independence, via Hickman's Mill and Santa Fe, to Fort Scott, (Kansas.)

From Versailles, in Morgan county, via Mount Pleasant, Spring Garden, and Fair Play, to Vienna, in Maries county.

From Warrensburg, via Basin Knob, Lone Jack, to Independence.

From Marshall, via Hazel Grove, Browns-ville, and Dunksburg, to Knob Nestor.

From Appleton, in Girardeau county, via Pocahontas, Vancel's Store, to Cape Girardeau City.

From Sturgeon to Mexico.

From Florida, in Monroe county, via Santa Fé, to Mexico, in Andrain county.

From High Hill, in Montgomery county, on the North Missouri railroad, via Price's Branch and Tivoli, in said county, Truxton, Lost Branch, and Louisville, in Lincoln county, to Ashley, in Pike county.

From Palmyra, via Brookville, Philadelphia, West Springfield, Novelty, and Wilson, to Kirks-ville.

From Monroe City to Mexico.

From Bowling Green, via Harmony, to Spencersburg.

From Warrenton, on the North Missouri rail-road, via Truxton and Nineveh, to Ashley.

From Frederickstown to Ironton.

From Warrensburg, via Harrisonville, to Min-neola, (Kansas.)

From St. Joseph, via Elwood, Wathena, and Highland, in Doniphan county, Mount Roy, Pa-donia, and Plymouth, in Brown county, Kansas and Middleburg, in Richardson county, to Paw-nee City, in Nebraska.

From La Grange to Quincy, Illinois.

From Memphis, via Uniontown, to Savannah, Davis county, Iowa.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

From Ossipee, via Ossipee Centre, West Ossi-pee, to Tamworth.

From Marlow, via East Lempster, to Lemp-ster.

From Manchester, via Bedford, Amherst, Mil-ford, East Wilton, and Mason, to New Ipswich

From Salisbury to West Salisbury.

NEW YORK.

From Malden bridge to Rider's Mills.

From Dansville, via South Dansville, and Ste-phens's Mills, to Hornellsville.

From Union, via Vestal and Ferry creek, to Little Meadows, (Pennsylvania.)

From Brooklyn, via Third Avenue and Bay Ridge, to Fort Hamilton.

From Cameron, via Swale, Talbott's South Hill, and Hedgesville, to Woodhull.

From Sinclearville, via Ellington, to Falconer.

From Horseheads, via Sullivanville, to West Cayuta.

From Conesus Centre to Scottsburg.

From Grahamsville, Sullivan county, via Clayville and Debruce, to Parksville, Sullivan county.

NORTH CAROLINA.

From Newbern to Adam's creek.

From Atlantic and North Carolina railroad to Adams's creek.

From Newbern to Bay river.

From Leechville, in Beaufort county, to Head of Pungo.

From Beaufort to Portsmouth.

From Brattleboro' to William F. Lewis's, or Prospect Hill, in Edgecomb county.

From Mosely Hall, in Lenoir county, to Jeri-cho, in Wayne county.

From Mosely Hall, via Hookerton, to Green-ville.

From Nahunta, in Wayne county, to Bull Head, in Green county.

From Midway, via Sandy Ridge, to Fulton.

From Columbia to Gun Neck.

From Leachburg, Johnson county, to Ra-leigh.

From Niyohoh, on the line of the Blue Ridge railroad, through the valleys of Cheve and Te-cote, or Hanging Dog, to Murpley.

From Thom's Creek post office, via Douglas' Ford and Green Harbor, to Dobson.

From Madison, in Rockingham county, to Martin's Lime Kiln, in Stokes county.

From Leakeville, via Martin Grogan's, Gro-ganville, to Horse Pasture, in Henry county.

From Jefferson to John Eldridge, esqr, in Ashe county.

From Thomasville, via Eden, Nance's Mills, Salem Church, Tasseter's Mills, New Hope In-stitute, Barney's Mills, to Troy.

From Jackson to Newbern.

From Franklinsville, via Richland creek, to Stone Lick.

From Walkersville, via Stewart's Store, D. D. A. Belk's, and Jackson Stognins, to Pleasant Hill, (South Carolina.)

From Kinston, Lenoir county, to Richlands, Onslow county.

From Waynesville, Haywood county, via Cat-tahooche creek, to Dandridge, Jefferson county, Tennessee.

NEW MEXICO [TERRITORY.]

From Santa Fe, via Canada, Abequier, and Reto, in the county of Rio Ariba, to San Anto-nio, (Los Corejos,) in the county of Taos.

From Fort Union, via Guadalupeita, Santa Ger-trude, San Antonio, Agua Negra, Rincones, Cantonment Burgwin, and Rancho, to Fernan-dez de Taos.

From Taos, via Arroyo Hondo, Rio Colora-do, and Calabra, to Fort Massachusetts.

From Albuquerque, via Ciboleta and Cuvero, to Fort Defiance.

From Albuquerque, via Peralta, Manzano, to Fort Stanton.

NEBRASKA TERRITORY.

From Brownsville, via Nemaha City, Archer, Falls City, Monterey, Salem, Pleasantville, and Pawnee City, to Table Rock.

From Nemaha City, via Salem, Plymouth, and Powhatan, to Topeka, in (Kansas.)

From Omaha City to Iowa City, (Iowa.)

From Omaha City, via Cedar Island, Eight Mile Grove, Mount Pleasant, and Waterville, to Nebraska City.

From Plattsmouth to Pacific City, (Iowa.)

From Fontenelle, via Lewisburgh, to De Witt, in Cuming county.

From Nebraska City, via Helena, Kingston, Beatrice, and Blue Springs, to Marysville, in (Kansas.)

From Blue Springs to Atchison, (Kansas.)

From Nebraska City, via Hamburg, Clarinda, and Bedford, to Chariton, (Iowa.)

From Nebraska City, via Quincy, Red Oak, Junction, to Winterset, (Iowa.)

From Covington to Sioux City, Iowa.

From Monroe, Monroe county, via Cleveland, Columbus, Buchanan, Emerson, North Bend, Fontenelle, Cuming City, Medail, Mouth of Sol-dier river, to Magnolia, Iowa.

From Bellevue, via Fairview, to Plattford.

From Bellevue, via Junction City, to Council Bluffs, (Iowa.)

From Bellevue, via St. Mary's, to Pacific City, (Iowa.)

From Bellevue, via Hazelton, Elk Horn, Fre-mont, Springville, Franklin, Emerson, Buchanan, Columbus, Monroe, Grand Island City, to New Fort Kearney.

From Bellevue to Larimee City.

From Omaha City, via Missouri river, to St. Joseph, Missouri.

From Dakota City, via Galena, to Pacific City, on the Niobrarah river.

From Brownsville, via Nemaha City, Peru, Winnebago, St. Stephen's, Yancton, and Rulo, to St. Joseph, Missouri.

From Fontenelle, via De Soto, Calhoun, and Cincinnati, to Magnolia, Iowa.

From Omaha City, via Bellevue, Plattsmouth, Rock Bluffs, Kenosha, Wyoming, Nebraska City, Otoe City, to Brownsville.

From Archer to Geneva and Shasta.

From Plattsmouth, via Rock Bluffs and Ke-nosha, to Sidney, Iowa.

From Nebraska City to Linden, Missouri.

From Florence, via Golden Gate, to Fontenelle.

From Florence, via Elk Horn City, Fremont, North Bend, Emerson, Buchanan, Columbus, and Nebraska Centre, to New Fort Kearney.

From Florence, via Crescent City, Pymosa, Lura, Hamlin's Grove, Bear Grove, Morrisburg, Wisconsin, Adell, and Boon, to Fort Des Moines, Iowa.

From De Soto to Pymosa, Iowa.

From Plattsmouth, via Cedar Creek, South Bend, and Parallel City, to Long Island.

From Niobrarah to Sioux City, Iowa.

From Decatur, via Ashton, Belvidere, to Den-nison, Crawford county, Iowa.

From St. Stephens to Archer.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

From Dakotah City, via Sargent's Bluffs, to Fort Des Moines, Iowa.

From Bellevue to Fort Des Moines, Iowa.
From Omadi, via Logan, St. John, Addison, Ponca, Concord, and St. James, to Niobrarah.

From Niobrarah to Fort Randall.
From Fort Randall, via the mouth of Blue Earth river, to the mouth of Little Medicine Knoll river.
From Niobrarah, via the Ponca reserve, to Chimney Rock.

OHIO.

From McArthur, Vinton county, via Laurel Grove, to South Bloomingville, in Hocking county.

From Powhatan Point, via Captina Ring's Mills, Armstrong's Mills, Beallsville, Pilcher, to Malaga.

From Waverly, via Allison and Iron Spring, to Bainbridge.

From Nelsonville, via Hitchcock's Mills, Hocksville, and Medill, to New Lexington.

From Walhanding, via Yankee Ridge post office, in Coshocton county, Jones's Corners, Dewitt's Ridge, Drake's Valley, to Loudonville, in Ashland county.

From Newark to Millwood.

From Colton, in Henry county, via Beta, West Barre, to Wauseon, in Fulton county.

From McConnellsville, via Wolf Creek, Ringgold, Wise's Roads, and Bishopsville, to Trimble.

From Belpre, via Dunham, Veto, Vincent, Barlow, Watertown, and Watford, to Beverly.

From Ridge post office, in Coshocton county, via Clark's Mills, to Bloomfield.

From Maria Stine post office, to Minster.

From Youngstown to Mercer, in Mercer county, Pennsylvania.

From Lancaster, via Royalton, South Bloomfield, Genoa, Harrisburgh, California, to London, in Madison county.

From Gilead, via New Westfield and Osage Pike, to McComb.

From Powhatan Point, via Kantzig's, Lantz's, Gates's Yard, and Beallsville, to Malaga.

From Portsmouth to Locust Grove.

From River Styx to Guilford.

From Wadsworth to Guilford.

OREGON TERRITORY.

From Salem, along the military road, to Astoria.

From Roseburg, via the Coquille valley, to Empire City, at Coose bay.

From Salem to Tillamook bay.

From Salem, via Fort Yamhill, to Grand Round Reservation agency.

From Salem to Franklin Butte, in Lynn county.

From Lafayette, via McMinnville, Muddy, Wilhelmnia, to Grand Round Reservation agency.

From Jacksonville, via Mansaneta, to Frederick Westgate, Jackson county.

From Roseburg, in Douglas county, via Looking-Glass Prairie, Ten Mile Prairie, Camas Swain, Coquille valley, to Empire City.

From Salt Lake City, via Clamath Lake and Jackson, to Roseburg.

PENNSYLVANIA.

From Strattonville, via Kahli's Store, in Jefferson county, to Clarrington.

From Troy to Blossburg.

From Harrisonville, via Emanuel Sipe's Mill, Warfordsburg, to Hancock, Maryland.

From Ray's Hill to Akersville.

From Quakertown to Trumbowersville.

From Gap, via Buyerstown, New Milltown, and Hat, to Intercourse.

From Bellefonte, Centre Furnace, and Farmer's High School, to Pine Grove Mills.

From Emlenton, via Lawrenceburg, to Brady's Bend Iron Works.

From Bethany, via Dyberry Fall, West Lebanon, East Mount Pleasant, to Pleasant Mount.

From Butler, via Sparr's Store, Middletown, North Washington, and McMahon, to Emlenton.

From Bedford, via Rainsburg and Cheneysville, to Elbenville.

From Allentown, via Emans and Millerstown, Long Swamp, to Mertztown.

From Coalmont, via Broad Top, New Grenada,

Dublin Mills, and Fort Littleton, to Burnt Cabins.

From John P. Krigbaum's, via Palo Alto, Bridgeport, and Buffalo Mills, to Mount Choice.

From Gaines, via Germania and Elk run, to Carter's Camp, in Potter county.

From Harrisonville, via Saluvia Tannery, West Dublin, and Wells's Tannery, to Allaquippa.

From Saltsburg, in Indiana county, to Perrysville.

From Baldwin post office, Butler county, to Adams' post office, in Armstrong county.

From Coyleville, in Butler county, via Church Hill, Adams', Mouth of Red Bank, to Reimersburg, in Clarion county.

From Fannettsburg to Carrick Furnace, in Franklin county.

From Lancaster, via Millport and Musselman's Mill, to Strasburg.

From Leiverling's, on the Meadville and Edinburg plank road, in Crawford county, via Waterford and Belleville, to Wattsburg.

From Mercer, via West Middlesex, to Youngstown, Ohio.

From Clarion to Tianesta.

From Mercer to Brownsville.

From Andesville, via Sandy Hill, to Andersonburg.

From Andesville, via Roseburg, Ickesberg, and Shull's Mills, to Sandy Hill.

From Hollidaysburg to Williamsburg.

From Martinsburg to Kalamazoo.

From Waterford, via Belldona, to Wattsburg.

From Plumerhouse to Titusville.

From Bustleton, in Philadelphia, by the Berry P. O., to Oakford, in Buck's county.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

From Monk's Corner, via Cordesville, Huger's Bridge, and Brick Church, to Cainho, on the Wando river.

From Charleston to Curtis', on John's Island.

From King's Tree to Potato Fen, on Black river.

From Spartanburg C. H., via Crawfordville and Reidville, to Greenville C. H.

From Unionville, via Kelton, Mount Joy, and Skull Shoals, to Gowdysville.

From Charleston to New Orleans, by the way of Fernandina and Cedar Key, the route to go into operation if the service can be performed in sixty hours.

From Union C. H., daily, to Spartanburg.

TENNESSEE.

From Vernon, via Dunnington, to Buffalo.

From Waynesboro, via Ashland, to Linden.

From Waynesboro, via Smith's Fork and Hamburg, to Corinth, Mississippi.

From Nashville, via Saddle Tree, to Leiber's Fork.

From Granville to Chestnut Mound.

From Manchester, via Hillsboro' and Hindman's Hill, to Pelham.

From Union Depot, via Blountsville, to Ellisville.

From Knoxville to Wallace's Cross Roads.

From Maynardville to Loy's Cross Roads.

From Knoxville, via Moor's Rest, Vandegriff's and Racoon Valley, to Maynardville.

From Maynardville, via Lost creek, to Speedwell.

From Jackson, via Mount Pinson, Montezuma, to Purdy.

From Rock Island, via John L. Gressom's Store, Thomas Fancher's Mills, to Cokeville.

From the mouth of Sandy, via Buchanan, to Conyersville.

From Dyersburgh, via Chestnut Bluff, to Brownsville.

From Ellijoy, via Knob creek and Guist's creek, to Sevierville.

From McMinnville, via Myre's, in Warren county, and Sergeant's, in Bledsoe county, to Pikeville.

From Franklin, via Hart's Cross Roads, Rally Hill, Hardison's Mill, Beard's Store, and Berlin, to Lewisburg.

From Franklin, via Barren, to Charlotte.

From Huntingdon, via Paris and Boydsville, to Mayfield, Kentucky.

From Lexington, via Mifflin, to Jackson.

From Paris, via Mansfield and Marborough, to Huntingdon.

From Silvertop, via Darnell's Landing, to Compromise.

From Knoxville, via Beaver Ridge, Del Rey, Robertsville, Olivers', Crooked Fork, Morgan Court-House, Sage Field, and Glades, to Jamestown.

From Pikeville, via Pink Ridge and Myresville, to McMinnville.

From Athens, via Suvée and Moor's Store, to Sulphur Springs.

From Spring creek, in Madison county, via Lecompton and Juno, to Crucifer.

From Sparta, up the Calf Killer, via John H. Carmichael's, James Bohanan's, to the post office on the Walton road.

From Murfreesboro', to Las Casas, Milton, and Auburn, to Liberty.

From Memphis, by railroad, to Madison and Little Rock, in Arkansas.

TEXAS.

From Jasper to San Augustine.

From Gilmer, in Upshur county, to Sulphur Springs, Bright Star P. O., in Hopkins county.

From Petersburg, on Lake Soda, in Harrison county, to Marshall, along the railroad.

From Alto, in Cherokee county, to county site of Angelina county, or Jonesville.

From Logansport, via Truit's Store, Hilliard's, and Buena Vista, to Nacogdoches.

From Paris, in Lamar county, to Mount Pleasant, in Titus county.

From Carissa to Athens.

From Crockett, via Stell's Landing, to Centreville.

From Hillsboro, via Buchanan and Weatherford, to Fort Belknap.

From Fort Sullivan, via Cameron, to Betten.

From Cunningham, via Leesburg, to Lexington.

From Seguin, via Post Oak, Sutherland Springs, Chisem's Crossings, to Helena.

From Betten to Gatesville.

From Centreville to Magnolia.

From St. Mary's, via Refugio, to Goliad.

From Magnolia to Centreville.

From Fort Davis to Presidio del Norte.

From Marshall, via Gilmer, Quitman, and Greenville, to Dallas.

From some point in Texas to San Diego, in California.

From Tyler, via Athens, Carscance, and Dresden, to Waco.

From Columbus to George Waldman's.

VERMONT.

From Cabot, via Walden, East Hardwicke, and Greensboro', to Barton.

From Barton, via East Craftsbury and Craftsbury, to North Craftsbury.

From Readsboro', Vermont, via Monroe, to Florida, in Massachusetts.

From Castleton, via Hubbardton, to Sudbury.

From Hancock, in Addison county, via Granville, to Warren, in Washington county.

VIRGINIA.

From Oakland to Homeland.

From Beaver Dam Depot, via Chilesburg, Apple Wood, and Hippo's, to Thornburgh.

From North River Mills to Slonesville, in Hampshire county.

From Greenville to Mount Airy, in Surry county, North Carolina.

From Mannington, via Eugenius Wilson's, to West Union.

From Ketterman's, in Hardy county, via Mallow's Settlement, Swedlin Hill, Brake's Run, Oak Flat, Sugar Grove, and Palo Alto, to McDowell, in Highland county.

From Russellville, via Springvale, James Talley's Ford, on the Nolachucky river, Driskall's, on Slate creek, Evans' Roads, to Parrottsville.

From Betten, via Gorby's, Isaac Miller's, Absalom Postlewaits', and Benjamin Johnston's, to New Martinsville.

From Williesburg, via Otter Hill, Medon, Gregory's Store, and Thomas Gregory's, to Boyden.

From California to Smithville.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

From Upshur C. H., up French creek, via Walkerville, and Jacksonville, Benjamin W. Haymond's Store, in Braxton county, to Gilmer C. H.

From Jeffersonville, Tazewell county, to McDowell C. H.

From Lebanon, Russell county, via Sand Lick, to Buchanan C. H.

From Newbern, Pulaski county, via Francis Allison's, to Graham's new furnace.

From Graham's new furnace to Jackson Ferry. From Macks Meadows Depot to Graham's old furnace.

From Abingdon, via Tool's creek and Byrd Lilley's in the Poor Valley, to Whitley Fullon's.

From Holston post office, in Washington county, via Hiram Fullon's, to Estillville, in Scott county.

From Graham's new furnace, via Francis Allison's, up the valley of Reed Island river, to the Hillsville and Floyd C. H. turnpike.

From Ganby Bridge, in Fayette county, via Big Sycamore, and Marshall, Clay Court-House, to Newton, Roane county.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

From Olympia, via Miami, William's, near mouth of Black river, Scammin's, Lee, (Grey's Harbor,) Oysterville, Pacific City, Chinook, to Astoria.

From Astoria, via Job Lamly's, Fort Willopa, to William's, near mouth of Black river.

From Oysterville, via Bruceport, Fort Willopa, Roundtree's Prairie, to Borsefort Prairie.

From Oakland to Hood's canal.

From Olympia, via Chambers' Prairie, Temalquit Prairie, to Coal Bank.

From Steilacoom to Camp Montgomery.

From Colville, via Antoine Planties to Cœur d'Alene Mission.

From Gamble to Sebec.

From Bellingham bay to Fort Colville.

WISCONSIN.

From Monroe City, in Green county, via Cadiz, Winslow, Stephenson county, Illinois, to Warren, in Jo Davis county, Illinois.

From Jonesville to Monroe.

From Stevens' Point, via Neillsville, in Clark county, to Eau Claire, in Eau Claire county.

From Montello, via Harrisville, to Westfield, in Marquette county.

From Two Rivers to Bayly's Harbor.

From Prairie du Chien, via Cassville, to Dunleith, Illinois.

From La Crosse, via Mount Pisgah, Dorset, to Mill Haven.

From New Lisbon, via Malery's Hotel, Jackson's Steam Mill, Tomah, Greenfield, Lafayette, Angelo, Sparta, Bangor, Salem, Bigby, Onalaska, to La Crosse.

From New Lisbon, via Necidah, to Grand Rapids.

From Waubeck, via Dunnville, Menominee, to Vanceburg.

From Platteville, via Smelser's Grove, Jamestown, and Fairplay, to Dubuque, (Iowa.)

From Dunlieth, (Illinois,) via Potosi, Waterloo, Cassville, Charlotte, Bunker Hill, Beaufl, Patch Grove, to Prairie du Chien.

From Prescott, via Point Douglas, to Hastings, Minnesota.

From Maiden Rock, via El Paso, and Hammondville, to Falls of St. Croix.

From Trempealeau, via Caledonia, New Amsterdam, to La Crosse.

From Mineral Point, via Argyle, to Monroe.

From Mineral Point, via Dodgeville, Helena, Spring Green, Honey creek, Westfield, to Reedsburgh.

From Maugh's Mills, via Wonnewoc and Hillsborough, to Vingna.

From Oshkosh to Shiocton.

From Viroque, via Bloomingdale, Masterson, and Whitestown, to Mount Taber.

From Badax City to Reedsburgh.

From Manston, via Wonnewoc and Hillsboro', to Viroqua.

From Litchfield, via Mount Kingston, Dryfork, Old Ripley, Pocahontas, New Hillsboro', Jamestown, to School creek station.

From Sheboygan, via Sheboygan Falls, Wheat valley, Onion river, Cascade, Scott, Boltonville, and Barton, to West Bend.

From Green bay to Sturgeon bay.

From Two Rivers to Kewaunee.

From Kewaunee to Sturgeon bay.

From Green bay to Shawanaw.

From Inneau, via Oak Grove, and Lowell's, to Reesville.

From New London, in North Royalton, Ogdensburg, and Scandinavia, to Plover.

From Lone Rock, in Richland county, via Bear creek, Sandusky, Ironton, Lavalie Summit, to Maugh's Mill, in Juneau county.

From Oconto to Shawanaw.

From La Crosse, via Brownsville, Sheldon, Dedham, Preston, Carimona, Forestville, Spring Valley, Frankfort, Austin, Sumner, Albert Lea, to Winnebago, in Minnesota.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be authorized to make such arrangements for the transmission of the great through mails between Portland and New Orleans as will insure the most speedy and certain connection, including in the route for one of the daily mails as many of the sea-board commercial cities as may be consistent with the greatest dispatch.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXIII.—An Act to supply Deficiencies in the Appropriations for the Current and Contingent Expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling Treaty Stipulations with various Indian Tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes:

For restoring and maintaining, by peaceable measures, friendly relations with the Indian tribes in Oregon Territory, or so much thereof as may be necessary for expenditure during the year ending thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, two hundred and sixty-four thousand dollars.

For payment to such Cherokees as were omitted in the census taken by D. W. Siler, but who were included and paid under the act of July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, the same per capita allowance that was paid the other Indians under that distribution, provided the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be satisfied they ought to be included in said per capita distribution, three thousand two hundred and seventy-eight dollars and thirty-two cents.

For contingencies of the Indian department, or so much thereof as may be required for expenditure during the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For indemnity to George W. Stidham, a Creek Indian, for property stolen from him and injured by a citizen of the United States, one hundred and twenty-five dollars.

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington, or so much thereof as may [be] required during the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, sixteen thousand dollars.

Senecas of New York.—For interest, in lieu of investment, on seventy-five thousand dollars, at five per centum, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six, three thousand dollars.

For payment of the difference in salaries of the agents for the Sioux and Seminole Indians, for the Omaha agency, for the Kickapoo agency, for the Kansas agency, and for the Neosho agency, between the rates as fixed previous to the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, and the rate authorized by said act from the third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, to the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, three thousand nine hundred and ninety-one dollars and sixty-eight cents.

For compensation of one clerk in the Indian office, employed to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the regulations prescribed to give effect to the seventh section of the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, granting bounty lands to Indians, fourteen hundred dollars.

For compensation of two extra clerks, employed to carry out the treaty with the Chickasaws in the adjustment of their claims, two thousand eight hundred dollars.

For defraying the expenses of the several expeditions against Ink-pa-du-tah's band, and in the search, ransom, and recovery of the female captives taken by said band in eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, the sum of twenty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary; the amounts to be ascertained and paid, on satisfactory proof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That none of the money herein appropriated to the Indian service in the Territories of Oregon and Washington shall be paid until the claims which they are intended to satisfy shall have been audited and stated by a commissioner to be sent to the said Territories by the Secretary of the Interior, and approved by the said Secretary. The said commissioner shall be appointed as soon as may be practicable by the Secretary of the Interior, to receive a compensation of eight dollars a day and his actual traveling expenses whilst engaged in the service herein prescribed. And it shall be the duty of the said commissioner to examine the vouchers, and to take testimony, if necessary, in regard to the claims or accounts which may be presented against the Government, and to report the result of his investigations, and his opinion thereupon, to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall pay such claims, if he approves them, so far as the appropriations herein made shall be sufficient for the purpose.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in executing process in the Indian country, the marshal be authorized to employ a posse comitatus, not exceeding three persons in any of the States respectively, to assist in executing process by arresting and bringing in prisoners from the Indian country, and to allow them three dollars per diem in lieu of all expenses and services.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the superintendent and agents within the superintend[en]cy of Texas shall be hereafter appointed in the same manner as other superintendents and agents, [are] appointed and confirmed.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858

CHAP. CLXIV.—An Act making Appropriations for the Transportation of the United States Mail by Ocean Steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine:

For transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, and back, three hundred and forty-six thousand five hundred dollars; and it is hereby provided that there be paid to the Post Office Department out of said appropriation such sums as may be required to procure the transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, and back, on such days as the Collins line may fail to take them from New York.

For transportation of the mails from New York to New Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, Havana, and Chagres, and back, two hundred and sixty-one thousand dollars.

For transportation of the mails from Panama to California and Oregon, and back, three hundred and twenty-eight thousand three hundred and fifty dollars.

For transportation of the mails between San Francisco, California, and Olympia, Washington Territory, one hundred and twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars.

For transportation of the mails on Puget sound, twenty-two thousand four hundred dollars.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That there be paid to the Post Office Department, out of the appropriation of three hundred and forty-six thousand five hundred dollars granted by the first section of the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, "for transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, and back," the sum of sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven dollars and seventy cents, for five outward trips from New York to Liverpool, to wit: on fourteenth February and eleventh April, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, and thirteenth February, thirteenth March, and tenth April, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, when the Collins line failed to perform service; and that the further sum of thirty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, by paid to the Post Office Department, out of the appropriation aforesaid, to enable the Postmaster General to procure the transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, and back, on the twenty-fourth April, the eighth and twenty-second May, and the fifth and nineteenth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, if the Collins line should fail to perform service on those days.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, for the service of the Post Office Department for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, out of any money in the Treasury arising from the revenues of said Department, in conformity to the act of the second of July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six:

For transportation of the mails from New York, by Southampton or Cowes, to Havre, two hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

For transportation of the mails between Charleston and Havana, fifty thousand dollars.

For transportation of the mails across the Isthmus of Panama, one hundred thousand dollars.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the Postmaster General to make any steamship or other new contract for carrying the mails on the sea for a longer period than two years, nor for any other compensation than the sea and inland postages on the mails so transported.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized, to cause the mails to be transported between the United States and any foreign port or ports, by steamship, allowing and paying therefor out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, if by an American vessel, the sea and United States inland postage, and if by a foreign vessel, the sea postage only, on the mails so conveyed: Provided, That the preference shall always be given to an American over a foreign steamship when departing from the same port for the same destination, within three days of each other.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXV.—An Act to authorize a Loan not exceeding the Sum of Twenty Millions of Dollars.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized, at any time within twelve months from the passage of this act, to borrow, on the credit of the United States, a sum not exceeding twenty millions of dollars, or so much thereof as, in his opinion, the exigencies of the public service may require; to be applied to the payment of appropriations made by law, in addition to the money received, or which may be received, into the Treasury from other sources: Provided, That no stipulation or contract shall be made to prevent the United States from reimbursing any sum borrowed under the authority of this act at any time after the expiration of fifteen years from the first day of January next.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That stock shall be issued for the amount so borrowed, bearing interest not exceeding five per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, with coupons for the semi-annual interest attached to the certificates of stock thus created, and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized, with the consent of the President, to cause certificates of stock to be prepared, which shall be signed by the Register, and sealed with the seal of the Treasury Department, for the amount so borrowed, in favor of the parties lending the same, or their assigns: Provided, That no certificate shall be issued for a less sum than one thousand dollars.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That, before awarding said loan, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be inserted in two of the public newspapers of the city of Washington, and in one or more public newspapers in other cities of the United States, public notice that sealed proposals for such loan will be received until a certain day to be specified in such notice, not less than thirty days from its first insertion in a Washington newspaper; and such notice shall state the amount of the loan, at what periods the money shall be paid; if by installments, and at what places. Such sealed proposals shall be opened on the day appointed in the notice, in the presence of such persons as may choose to attend, and the proposals decided on by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall accept the most favorable proposals offered by responsible bidders for said stock. And the said Secretary shall report to Congress, at the commencement of the next session, the amount of money borrowed under this act, and of whom, and on what terms, it shall have been obtained; with an abstract or brief statement of all the proposals submitted for the same, distinguished between those accepted and those rejected, with a detailed statement of the expense of making such loans: Provided, That no stock shall be disposed of at less than its par value.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the faith of the United States is hereby pledged for the due payment of the interest and the redemption of the principal of said stock.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That, to defray the expense of engraving and printing certificates of such stock, and other expenses incident to the execution of this act, the sum of five thousand dollars is hereby appropriated: Provided, That no compensation shall be allowed for any service performed under this act to any officer whose salary is established by law.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXVI.—An Act in Relation to Courts, and the holding of the Terms thereof, in the several Territories in the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the judges of the supreme court of each Territory of the United States are hereby authorized to hold court within their respective districts, in the counties wherein, by the laws of said Territories, courts have been or may be established, for the purpose of hearing and determining all matters and causes, except those in which the United States is a party: Provided, That the expenses thereof shall be paid by the Territory, or by the counties in which said courts may be held, and the United States shall in no case be chargeable therewith.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXVII.—An Act making Appropriations for the Service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, for the service of the Post Office Department for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, out of any moneys in the Treasury arising from the revenues of the said Department, in conformity to the act of the second of July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six:

For transportation of the mails, (inland,) ten millions one hundred and forty thousand five hundred and twenty dollars.

For compensation to postmasters, two millions three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

For ship, steamboat, and way letters, twenty thousand dollars.

For wrapping-paper, fifty-five thousand dollars.

For office furniture in the post offices, five thousand dollars.

For advertising, eighty-five thousand dollars.

For mail-bags, sixty-five thousand dollars.

For blanks, and paper for the same, one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

For mail-locks, keys, and stamps, fifteen thousand dollars.

For mail depredations and special agents, seventy thousand dollars.

For clerks in the offices of postmasters, eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For postage stamps and stamped envelopes, one hundred thousand dollars.

For miscellaneous items, one hundred and eighty thousand dollars.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if the revenues of the Post Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations of this act, then the sum of three millions five hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post Office Department for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

PUBLIC RESOLUTIONS.

No. 1.—Joint Resolution to amend the Act entitled "An Act to regulate the Compensation of Members of Congress," approved August sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the compensation allowed to members of Congress by an act entitled "An Act to regulate the compensation of members of Congress," approved August sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, be paid in the following manner, to wit: on the first day of the first session of each Congress, or as soon thereafter as he may be in attendance and apply, each Senator, Representative, and Delegate shall receive his mileage, as now provided by law, and all his compensation from the beginning of his term, to be computed at the rate of two hundred and fifty dollars per month, and during the session compensation at the same rate. And on the first day of the second or any subsequent session, he shall receive his mileage as now allowed by law, and all compensation which has accrued during the adjournment, at the rate aforesaid, and during said session compensation at the same rate.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That so much of said act, approved August sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, as conflicts with this joint resolution, and postpones the payment of said compensation until the close of each session, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

APPROVED, December 23, 1857.

No. 2.—Joint Resolution making an Appropriation for the payment of Expenses of Investigating Committees of the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of thirty-five thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of expenses of the several investigating committees of the House of Representatives during the present session, and that the same shall be added to the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund of said House.

APPROVED, February 18, 1858.

No. 3.—A Resolution to extend and define the Authority of the President under the Act approved January sixteen, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act to Promote the Efficiency of the Navy,'" in respect to dropped and retired Naval Officers.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in case where the records of the courts of inquiry, appointed under the act of January sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

seven, may render it advisable, in the opinion of the President of the United States, to restore to the active or reserved list of the Navy, or to transfer from furlough to leave of absence on the latter list, any officer who may have been dropped or retired by the operation of the act of February twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy," he shall have authority, any existing law to the contrary notwithstanding, within six months from the passage of this resolution, to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint such officer to the active or reserved list; and officers so nominated and confirmed shall occupy positions on the active and reserved lists, respectively, according to rank and seniority when dropped or retired as aforesaid, and be entitled to all the benefits conferred by the act approved January sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, on officers restored, or transferred, to the active or reserved list under that act.

APPROVED, March 10, 1858.

No. 4.—A Resolution to authorize certain Officers and Men, engaged in the Search for Sir John Franklin, to receive certain Medals presented to them by the Government of Great Britain.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the officers and men engaged in the several expeditions which have been fitted out in the United States for the recovery of Sir John Franklin and his companions, be authorized to accept the medals recently transmitted to this Government, for presentation to them, by the Government of Great Britain.

APPROVED, March 16, 1858.

No. 5.—Joint Resolution respecting the Distribution of certain Public Documents.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the words "so many," in the third section of the joint resolution of the twenty-eighth January, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, "respecting the distribution of certain documents," be, and the same are hereby, stricken out; and the words "two hundred and fifty" be, and the same are hereby, inserted in their place; and further, that the words at the end of the section, "by him," be, and the same are hereby, stricken out; and the words "to him by, the Representative in Congress from each congressional district, and by the Delegate from each Territory in the United States," be, and are hereby, inserted.

APPROVED, March 20, 1858.

No. 6.—A Resolution authorizing Lieutenant William N. Jeffers to accept a Sword of Honor from her Majesty the Queen of Spain.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the assent of Congress be, and the same is hereby, given, to allow Lieutenant William N. Jeffers, of the Navy of the United States, to accept a sword of honor presented to him, through the Department of State, by her Majesty the Queen of Spain, "as an acknowledgment of the very efficient assistance which he gave, with the vessel under his command, to the Spanish schooner Catagenera, in the waters of the Parana," on the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, and twenty-eighth of October, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

APPROVED, April 7, 1858.

No. 7.—A Resolution providing for the Payment of certain Expenses of holding the United States Courts in the Territory of Utah.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the expenses of holding the United States courts in the Territory of Utah, during the continuance of the present disturbances therein, be paid out of the judiciary fund, under the limitations contained in the existing laws in respect to fees: Provided, That, on the restoration of peace in said Territory, the expenses of said courts, when exercising jurisdiction under the territorial laws, shall be chargeable to the Territory, or to the counties, as in other Territories.

APPROVED, May 4, 1858.

No. 8.—A Resolution to extend the operation of the Act approved January sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act to promote the Efficiency of the Navy.'"

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the operation of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy,'" limiting the restoration of officers in certain cases, be extended to the sixteenth day of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine: Provided, That the time within which examinations by courts of inquiry may be made, as provided by the first section of said act, shall not be extended except as to any case pending and undetermined before any court of inquiry under the act of the sixteenth January, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, at the expiration thereof; and excepting, also, the case of any officer who was absent from the country at the time of the passage of said act, and had not returned previous to the sixteenth of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight. And any such officer shall be entitled to all the privileges conferred by said act, provided he applies for the benefit thereof, at any time within sixty days after his return.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

No. 9.—A Resolution to extend for a further term the provisions of the Joint Resolution approved March tenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, in relation to certain Dropped and Retired Officers of the Navy.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the time limited by the joint resolution approved March tenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, entitled "A Joint resolution to extend and define the authority of the President, under the act approved January sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy,'" in respect to dropped and retired naval officers," be, and hereby is, extended to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, in lieu of six months, as provided therein.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

No. 10.—A Resolution authorizing suitable Acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British Naval Authorities at Jamaica, for the Relief extended to the Officers and Crew of the United States Ship Susquehannah, disabled by Yellow Fever.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to cause suitable acknowledgments to be made on the part of this Government to Admiral Sir Howston Stewart, of her Britannic Majesty's navy, and the officers under his command, for their prompt and efficient aid, and generous hospitality, extended to the disabled officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehannah, on her late arrival at Port Royal, in the Island of Jamaica, with the yellow fever on board; on which occasion besides placing the naval hospital, with an adequate corps of medical officers, nurses, and attendants, at their service, eighty-five of the sick officers and crew of the Susquehannah were safely and promptly conveyed on shore with the aid of the boats of the British squadron, and the lives of the greater portion of them thereby probably saved. And that the President be further requested to cause a gold medal, with appropriate devices, to be presented, on behalf of this Government, to Assistant Surgeon Frederick A. Rose, of the British navy, who volunteered, with the permission of his commanding officer, to join the Susquehannah, and, at imminent personal risk, devoted himself, on the voyage from Jamaica to New York, to the care of the sick remaining on board. And that the President cause suitable testimonials to be in like manner presented to the medical officers, in the British service, in attendance at the hospital, with appropriate rewards to the nurses and other attendants there, whilst occupied by the officers and crew of the Susquehannah.

APPROVED, May 11, 1858.

No. 11.—A Resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the Accounts of the Contractor for the erection of the United States Marine Hospital at San Francisco, California.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco, California, and to pay to said contractor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount that may be found to be justly due to him under the contracts made between said contractor and the proper officers of the Government in reference to said building.

APPROVED, May 18, 1858.

No. 12.—Joint Resolution for paying the compensation of Stenographers employed by Committees of the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the compensation of stenographers employed by the committees of the House of Representatives, as audited under the direction of said House.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

No. 13.—Joint Resolution making Appropriation to pay the expenses of the several Investigating Committees of the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of twelve thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of expenses of the several investigating committees, and of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, and that the same shall be added to the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund of said House.

APPROVED, May 29, 1858.

No. 15.—A Resolution for the Adjustment of Difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the purpose of adjusting the differences between the United States and the Republic of Paraguay, in connection with the attack on the United States steamer Water Witch, and with other matters referred to in the annual message of the President, he be, and is hereby, authorized to adopt such measures and use such force as, in his judgment, may be necessary and advisable, in the event of a refusal of just satisfaction by the Government of Paraguay.

APPROVED, June 2, 1858.

No. 16.—A Resolution to correct an error in a certain Act approved May eleventh, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That an error in the act approved May eleventh, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, entitled "An act to enlarge the Detroit and Saginaw land districts in the State of Michigan," be corrected, by extending the limits of that portion of the Cheboygan district which has been attached to the Detroit district, to the line dividing ranges two and three west, instead of one and two west, the former being the line intended by the Department as the western boundary of the addition to the Detroit district.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

APPROVED, June 2, 1858.

No. 17.—Joint Resolution authorizing the Arrangement and Disposal of Public Buildings in the City of Philadelphia.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General be, and [they] are hereby, authorized to decide whether the custom-house at Philadelphia shall remain in its present location, or whether public convenience and interests require that the location of the custom-house be changed to the ground and building purchased of the Bank of Pennsylvania, by authority of the law of the second of August, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, for the purposes of a post office, and the post office be removed to the present custom-house; and also to decide whether it is best to sell the building and lot of ground now used for the purposes of the United States court, and establish court rooms in the building of the present custom-house; and [that] they be further authorized and empowered to so arrange the buildings for said offices and purpose[s] as may, in their judgment, best promote the public convenience: Provided, That the expenses incident to such change and arrangement of the buildings shall not exceed the sum already appropriated for any or all of such purposes, and any additional sum that may be received for the building and ground herein authorized to be sold: And provided further, That should it be deemed best to sell the said court building and lot of ground, the President of the United States may cause the same to be sold after due public notice.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

No. 20.—Joint Resolution authorizing Commander M. F. Maury to accept a Gold Medal awarded to him by the Emperor of Austria.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Commander M. F. Maury, of the United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the great gold medal of the arts and sciences recently presented to him by his Majesty the Emperor of Austria.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

No. 23.—A Resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the Appropriation made July eight, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, upon such Channel of the St. Mary's river as he may select.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the appropriation of July eighth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, made for the improvement of St. Mary's river, in the State of Michigan, may be expended in excavating such channel as, from the evidence which he may obtain, the Secretary of War shall deem best.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

PRIVATE ACTS.

CHAP. II.—An Act to authorize the issuing of a Register to the Bark Jehu.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be issued, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, a register to the bark Jehu, a Dominican vessel, lately called the "Naiad Queen," which vessel was sold to Daniel Draper and Son, of Boston, to pay for expenses and repairs incurred on her in the United States.

APPROVED, January 23, 1858.

CHAP. VII.—An Act to amend "An Act for the Relief of Whitmarsh B. Seabrook and others."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled "An act for the relief of Whitmarsh B. Seabrook and others," approved the second day of March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, be so amended as that the payments therein authorized to be made to "the heirs of those deceased," shall be made to the administrators and executors of those deceased.

APPROVED, February 27, 1858.

CHAP. X.—An Act for the Relief of John Hamilton.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of two hundred dollars, with interest from the first day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to John Hamilton, of Champaign county, Ohio, in full compensation for his time and services, &c., during his imprisonment with the Indians, in the war of eighteen hundred and twelve with Great Britain.

APPROVED, March 16, 1858.

CHAP. XI.—An Act for the Relief of Doctor Charles D. Maxwell, a Surgeon in the United States Navy.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and are hereby, required to allow and pay to Doctor Charles D. Maxwell, surgeon in the Navy of the United States, the difference of pay between that of a passed assistant surgeon and a surgeon, from the twenty-second day of December, eighteen hundred and forty-five, to the seventh day of July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, being the period during which he performed the duties of a surgeon and assistant surgeon on board the United States ship Cyane, and that the same be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, March 20, 1858.

CHAP. XV.—An Act for the Relief of the legal Representatives or Assignees of James Lawrence.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the assignees or legal representatives of James Lawrence, to whom was issued donation certificate number three hundred and six, (306,) under the eighth section of the act of twenty-fourth of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, entitled "An act to aid the State of Ohio in extending the Miami canal from Dayton to Lake Erie, and to grant a quantity of land to said State to aid in the construction of the canals authorized by law, and for making donations of land to certain persons in Arkansas Territory," shall be authorized to relocate the same upon any of the public lands in the State of Arkansas, subject to entry at a minimum of not more than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre: Provided, The said certificate shall be found to have been issued in conformity with the said eighth section of the act of twenty-fourth of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, and shall be located upon legal subdivisions of land of not less than one quarter section.

APPROVED, April 19, 1858.

CHAP. XVI.—An Act to authorize a Register to be issued to the Steamer "Fearless."

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a register to be issued for the steamer "Fearless," under that name, a foreign-built vessel, but now owned in part by J. M. Estell, of San Francisco, on proof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury that the said steamer is wholly owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States, and that the repairs put upon her in the United States, while owned as aforesaid, are equal to three fourths of said steamer's cost when so repaired.

APPROVED, April 19, 1858.

CHAP. XVII.—An Act for the Relief of the Owners of the Bark Attica, of Portland, Maine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the owners of the bark Attica, of Portland, Maine, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of one hundred and seventy-four dollars and sixty-two cents, being the amount imposed on said vessel as tonnage duty, by the collector of New York, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

APPROVED, April 19, 1858.

CHAP. XVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Major Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, Paymaster in the United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in settling the accounts of Major Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, paymaster in the United States Army, to credit him in the sum of twenty-three thousand one hundred and fifteen dollars, that being the amount of public money accidentally lost by him on the first day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, in attempting to cross the bar of Indian river, Florida, for the purpose of paying the troops at Fort Capron, in that State.

APPROVED, April 21, 1858.

CHAP. XIX.—An Act for the Relief of the Heirs of Alexander Stevenson.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Treasurer of the United States be, and he is hereby, required to pay to the legal representatives of Alexander Stevenson, a soldier of the revolutionary war, in trust for the heirs of said Stevenson, the sum of six hundred and fifty-four dollars, being the amount of money due to said Stevenson, from the time of his enlistment, January one, seventeen hundred and seventy-six, until the time of his discharge, in seventeen hundred and eighty-three.

APPROVED, April 21, 1858.

CHAP. XX.—An Act for the Relief of N. C. Weems, of Louisiana.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the entry of the section number sixty-eight, (68), of township number two (2) north, of range number one (1) east, in the southwestern land district of Louisiana, by N. C. Weems, of that State, and patented on the first day of September, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, be, and is hereby, confirmed; and the Commissioner of the Land Office shall cause to be refunded any excess of money paid into the land office in its purchase from the Government.

APPROVED, April 21, 1858.

CHAP. XXI.—An Act for the Relief of Francis Wlodecki.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Francis Wlodecki, of Lake county, Illinois, is hereby authorized to locate one hundred and twenty acres of the public lands of the United States, to be selected from any of the public lands subject to private entry at the rate of one dollar and a quarter per acre; and upon return being made to the General Land Office of such location, the President is hereby directed to issue a patent therefor to the said Francis Wlodecki; And it is hereby provided, That the same shall be in full discharge for all claims which the said Wlodecki has on the Government, arising under the act of Congress approved June thirty, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, [thirty-four,] entitled "An act granting land to certain exiles from Poland."

APPROVED, April 21, 1858.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

CHAP. XXII.—An Act for the Relief of Duncan Robertson.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury pay, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Duncan Robertson, the sum of seven hundred and forty-nine dollars and ninety-two cents, in full for moneys paid by him to the navy-yard at Gosport, it being the amount expended for repairs of the Norwegian bark Ellen, for damages encountered by said bark in aiding and rescuing the passengers of the steamer Central America.

APPROVED, May 1, 1858.

CHAP. XXX.—An Act for the Relief of Captain James Mc. McIntosh, of the United States Navy.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Captain James Mc. McIntosh, of the United States Navy, the sum of two hundred and four dollars and ninety-five cents, being the difference between the sum paid to him at the Treasury, as commander "on other duty," and that which was due to him as such officer "attached to a vessel for sea service," and being in full for his services as an officer of the West India squadron from the fourteenth day of August, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, to the third day of September, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight.

APPROVED, May 5, 1858.

CHAP. XLI.—An Act for the Relief of John R. Temple, of Louisiana.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That John R. Temple be, and he is hereby, confirmed in his title to a tract of land containing six hundred and seventy arpents, lying and being within what is known as the "Baron de Bastrop grant," on the east side of Bayou Bartholomew, and more particularly described in a plat and survey executed on the nineteenth and twentieth days of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, by Henry Curtis, parish surveyor for the parish of Morehouse, and State of Louisiana; and being all that part of two certain tracts of land, not heretofore confirmed to any other claimant, as follows, to wit: A tract of land sold and conveyed by the heirs of Morehouse to George Hook, by deed dated the tenth day of December, eighteen hundred and fourteen; and a certain other tract conveyed by Abraham Morehouse to Jacob Stroop, son of George Stroop, by deed dated the tenth day of December, eighteen hundred and twelve.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the receipt of a plat and survey of the land hereby confirmed, executed by the proper officer, shall cause a patent to be issued therefor to the said John [R.] Temple: Provided, however, That such patent shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and shall not effect the rights of any third person.

APPROVED, May 18, 1858.

CHAP. XLII.—An Act to authorize the Settlement of the Accounts of Luther Jewett, late Collector of the District of Portland and Falmouth, in the State of Maine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Luther Jewett, late collector of the district of Portland and Falmouth, with the sum of one thousand dollars, being for that sum lost in transitu from said collector to be deposited with the assistant treasurer at Boston.

APPROVED, May 18, 1858.

CHAP. XLVII.—An Act for the Relief of Thomas Smithers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Thomas Smithers upon the invalid pension roll of the Army of the United States, and that he cause to be paid to him the sum of eight dollars per month, commencing January first, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, and such sum of eight dollars per month to continue during his natural life.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. XLVIII.—An Act to revive an Act entitled "An Act for the Relief of the Heirs, or their legal Representatives, of William Conway, deceased."

Whereas, the heirs of William Conway, deceased, or their legal representatives, have never been able to avail themselves of the provisions in their favor contained in an act entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs, or their legal representatives, of William Conway, deceased," partly because of some error or mistake as to the location of the portion of the lands applied for under the act, and partly because of the existence of a legal controversy between the parties in interest under the provisions of said act: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said act entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs, or their legal representatives, of William Conway, deceased," approved July second, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, be, and the same is hereby, revived and continued in force for one year from the passage of this act, and no longer.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. XLIX.—An Act for the Relief of the Representatives of William Smith, deceased, late of Louisiana.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the claim of William Smith to six hundred and forty acres of land, now occupied by William B. Allen, in the parish of Livingston, in the State of Louisiana, and being the same he resided on at the time of his death, and settled originally by Stephen Terry, and represented on the map of surveys as section number thirty-nine, (39), in township number six (6) south, of range number three (3) east; and section number sixty, (60), in township number six (6) south, of range number two (2) east, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the said William Smith and to his heirs and representatives, and that a patent shall issue therefor, as in other cases: Provided, That this act shall only operate as a relinquishment forever on the part of the United States to said lands, and shall not interfere with adverse valid rights of others, if such exist.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. L.—An Act for the Relief of the Heirs and legal Representatives of Pierre Broussard, deceased.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the heirs and legal representatives of Pierre Broussard, deceased, late of Louisiana, be, and they are hereby, confirmed in their title to a certain tract of land situated on the Bayou Teche, in the parish of St. Martin, in said State of Louisiana, and known on the recognized public surveys as section thirty-six, (36), in township eight (8) south, of range five (5) east, containing about one hundred and seventy acres: Provided, That this confirmation shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and shall not affect any adverse rights, if any such there be.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LI.—An Act for the Relief of Regis Loisel, or his legal Representatives.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said Regis Loisel, or his legal representatives, be, and they are hereby, confirmed in their title to a certain tract of land ceded by Don Carlos Dehault Delassus, Spanish Governor of Upper Louisiana, on the twenty-fifth day of March, anno Domini eighteen hundred, to Regis Loisel, situate in what was then known as Upper Louisiana, on the Missouri river, including Cedar Island, as the same was surveyed on the twentieth November, anno Domini eighteen hundred and five, by Antonio Soulard, surveyor general for the Territory of Louisiana, according to the plat now on file in the archives of the Missouri district. But it is provided that if said tract of land, confirmed as aforesaid, or any part thereof, has been located by any other person or persons, under any law of the United States, or has been surveyed and sold by the United States, this act shall confer no title to such lands in opposition to the rights acquired by such location or purchase; but the said Loisel, or his legal representatives, shall be permitted to make a relocation on an equal amount of the public lands as may be taken by such location or purchase, that may be subject to entry at private sale, at a price not to exceed one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; and the surveyor general for the district of Missouri shall issue a certificate to authorize the same.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the location authorized by this act shall be entered with the register of the proper land office, who shall, on application for that purpose, make out a certificate of such location as in other cases; and if it shall appear to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that said certificate has been obtained according to the provisions of this act, then patents shall issue as in other cases: And it is further provided, That if it shall be found that said tract of land, confirmed as aforesaid, has not been located by any other person or persons, or has not been sold by the United States as aforesaid, that, in that case, a patent shall be issued for the same as in other cases.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LII.—An Act to amend an Act entitled "An Act granting a Pension to Ansel Wilkinson," approved August thirteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the "act granting a pension to Ansel Wilkinson," approved August thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, be so amended that the word "Ansel" shall read Ansel wherever the same occurs in said act.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LIII.—An Act to increase the Pension of John Richmond.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the two-third pension heretofore allowed to John Richmond, of the State of Massachusetts, a private in the war of eighteen hundred and twelve, be, and the same is hereby, raised to a full pension.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the benefits accruing to the said John Richmond under and by virtue of this act, shall commence January one, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, and continue for and during his natural life.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LIV.—An Act for the Relief of Pierre Gagnon, of Natchitoches, Louisiana.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Pierre Gagnon be allowed to enter and pay for his preemption claim to the northeast and southeast fractional quarters of section number seven, in township number nine north, of range number six west, containing about one hundred and eighty-nine acres, in the land office at Natchitoches, Louisiana, and that a patent issue therefor as in ordinary cases: Provided, however, That [neither] this right of entry, nor any patent issued under it, shall prejudice any valid adverse claim, should such exist.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

CHAP. LV.—An Act for the Relief of Isaac Carpenter.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Isaac Carpenter, of the State of New York, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the tenth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, to continue during his natural life.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LVI.—An Act for the Relief of Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they hereby are, authorized and directed to credit and allow Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick, of the second artillery, the sum of twelve hundred and ninety-four dollars and sixty-six cents in the settlement of his account for the sales made by him, by order of General Worth, of certain ordnance property belonging to the United States, at Puebla, in Mexico, in June, eighteen hundred and forty-eight; said sum being so much of the proceeds of said sale as were stolen from him at Jalapa, while transporting the same to Vera Cruz.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LVII.—An Act for the Relief of the legal Representatives of Marie Malines.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the legal representatives of Marie Malines, born Rillieux, be, and they are hereby, confirmed in all the right, title, and interest now held or possessed by the United States in and to a certain tract of land in the State of Louisiana, containing about thirty-two hundred arpents, being a part of a grant made by the French Government, in the year one thousand seven hundred and sixty-four, to Marie Rillieux, according to a survey and plat made by the royal surveyor, Don Carlos Trudeau, and of record in the land office at New Orleans; and upon a proper survey, duly approved, being returned to the General Land Office, a patent shall issue: Provided, That this act shall only be construed to vest in the said legal representatives of Marie Malines, born Rillieux, the rights, title, and interest in said land now held and possessed by the United States, and shall not be construed in any way to impair the bona fide rights, interests, or claims acquired by any other person under adverse grants, concessions, or purchases made prior to the passage of this act.

APPROVED, May 24, 1858.

CHAP. LX.—An Act for the Relief of Nancy Serena.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to place the name of Nancy Serena, widow of Joseph Serena, deceased, on the pension roll, and pay her at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the fifteenth day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and to continue during her natural life or widowhood.

APPROVED, May 29, 1858.

CHAP. LXI.—An Act for the Relief of Elijah F. Smith, Gilman H. Perkins, and Charles F. Smith.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and required to refund to Elijah F. Smith, Gilman H. Perkins, and Charles F. Smith, or the survivors of them, composing the firm of Smith, Perkins and Company, of Rochester, New York, the sum of eight hundred and thirty-seven dollars, paid by them to the United States, on one debenture bond, executed by John B. Glover and Company, dated April second, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, as penalty over and above the regular duties on the merchandise therein mentioned.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXII.—An Act explanatory of an Act entitled "An Act for the Relief of Dempsey Pittman," approved August sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act approved August sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, entitled "An act for the relief of Dempsey Pittman," be so construed as to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to pay to the said Dempsey Pittman the compensation and allowances of a colonel of infantry, for the period of five months, in full consideration for his services in Florida in eighteen hundred and thirty-eight.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXIII.—An Act for the Relief of Anna M. E. Ring, Louisa M. Ring, Cordelia E. Ring, and Sarah J. De Lannoy.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the assignment by David A. Ring, to his four daughters, to wit: Anna M. E. Ring, Cordelia E. Ring, Louisa M. Ring, and Sarah J. De Lannoy, of land warrant number three thousand one hundred and seventy-two, for one hundred and sixty acres of land, issued on the eighteenth July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, to the said David A. Ring, be, and the same is hereby, held to vest in said assignees all the right, title and interest of said David A. Ring in and to said warrant.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXIV.—An Act for the Relief of William Allen, of Portland, in the State of Maine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to cause the name of William Allen to be placed on the pension list, at the rate of six dollars per month, from and after the passage of this act, said pension to continue during his life, and to be in lieu of the pension to which he is now by law entitled.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXV.—An Act for the Relief of Fabius Stanly.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to pay to Fabius Stanly, as full compensation for his services during the time he was actually on duty and attached to the navy-yard at Mare Island, California, at the rate of two thousand one hundred dollars per annum, deducting therefrom the pay he received for his services during that period.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXVI.—An Act for the Relief of George A. O'Brien.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be allowed and paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George A. O'Brien, for his services as clerk in the office of the Second Auditor, from the fifth day of July, eighteen hundred and forty-five, to the third day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-six, the sum of five hundred and forty-nine dollars and thirty-three cents.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXVII.—An Act for the Relief of the heirs of John B. Hand.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and required to pay to the heirs of John B. Hand, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of thirteen hundred and forty dollars.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Brevet Major James L. Donaldson, Assistant Quartermaster United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in settling the accounts of Brevet Major James L. Donaldson, to allow him a credit for the sum of four hundred dollars, being the amount of public funds stolen while in his possession as acting assistant quartermaster of the Army, near Monterey, in Mexico, on the tenth of October, eighteen hundred and forty-six.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXIX.—An Act to continue a Pension to Christine Barnard, widow of the late Brevet Major Moses J. Barnard, United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to continue upon the pension roll at the rate of thirty dollars per month, from and after the fourth day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, when her pension expired, the name of Christine Barnard, widow of the late Brevet Major Moses J. Barnard, captain in company H, regiment of voltigeurs, who was twice wounded in planting the American colors upon the parapet of Chapultepec while storming that fortress, and who died from disease contracted in, and greatly enhanced by hardships and fatigue of, the Mexican campaign; said pension to be held by her, or by her children, in accordance with existing laws in reference to the widows and children of those who died from wounds or disease received or contracted during the Mexican war.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXX.—An Act for the Relief of Rufus Dwinel.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to Rufus Dwinel, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of eleven thousand seven hundred and forty-eight dollars and three cents, being for interest at the rate of six per centum per annum, on the sum of thirteen thousand and thirty-seven dollars and seventy-two cents, from the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, when the latter sum was due from the United States to said Dwinel's assignor, to March eleventh, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, when an appropriation was made for its payment.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXI.—An Act for the Relief of Jonas P. Keller.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars be allowed and paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jonas P. Keller, in full for his services as a watchman or overseer of the executive building at the corner of F and Seventeenth streets, from the first of April, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, to the thirtieth of September, eighteen hundred and fifty.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXII.—An Act for the Relief of Stephen R. Rowan.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the attorney of the United States of America for the southern district of Illinois be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter satisfaction of a judgment rendered by the district court of the United States for the said southern district of Illinois, at its June term, anno Domini eighteen hundred and fifty-six, in favor of the United States of America against Stephen R. Rowan, on his paying all the costs in said case.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXIII.—An Act for the Relief of Caleb Sherman.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the settlement of the accounts of Caleb Sherman, collector of customs at Paso del Norte, Texas, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury allow to his credit the sum of nine hundred and seventy-five dollars and thirty-seven cents, that being the amount of Government money of which he was robbed on the night of the sixth day of November, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXIV.—An Act for the Relief of Susanna T. Lea, widow and administratrix of James Maglenen, late of the City of Baltimore, deceased.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to the legal representatives of the said James Maglenen, the sum of one hundred and thirty dollars, being the value of a horse and equipments belonging to the said James Maglenen, the same having been impressed in September, eighteen hundred and fourteen, for the purpose of sending an express to North Point, and said horse and equipments having been lost in said service.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXV.—An Act for the Relief of Laurent Millaudon.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Laurent Millaudon be, and he is hereby, confirmed in his title to two certain tracts of land lying on the east side of Mobile bay, in the State of Alabama, being the two tracts of land known as the De Feriet claims, as surveyed in the year eighteen hundred and thirty, and approved of by the surveyor general in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-five, with the exception of so much off of the north end thereof as has heretofore been surveyed and confirmed to William Patterson, and included within what is known as the Patterson claim, as now located: Provided, That this act shall only be construed as a relinquishment of any title that the United States may have to said lands: And provided further, That this confirmation shall inure to the benefit of any other persons, if such there be, as may be entitled to any part of said De Feriet claims, under conveyances from him.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXVI.—An Act for the Relief of James G. Benton, E. B. Babbitt, and James Longstreet, United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in settling the accounts of Lieutenant James G. Benton, of the ordnance department; of Brevet Major E. B. Babbitt, chief assistant quartermaster; and of Brevet Major James Longstreet, acting commissary of subsistence, to allow them, as credits, the respective amounts of which they were defrauded by Parker H. French, in San Antonio, Texas, in July eighteen hundred and fifty, viz: to James G. Benton, one thousand and twenty-one dollars and four cents; to E. B. Babbitt, five hundred and nineteen dollars ninety-three and a half cents; and to James Longstreet, four hundred and forty-eight dollars and ninety-eight cents.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXVII.—An Act for the Relief of Michael Kinny, late a Private in Company I, Eighth Regiment, United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Michael Kinny on the pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the eleventh day of December, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, and to continue during his life.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXVIII.—An Act for the Relief of J. Wilcox Jenkins.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to pay to J. Wilcox Jenkins, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the difference between the pay of captain's clerk and a purser of a first-class sloop-of-war, from the first day of January to the thirtieth of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, during which time he was the acting purser of the sloop-of-war Germantown.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXIX.—An Act for the Relief of William B. Trotter.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to William B. Trotter, of Clarke county, Mississippi, the sum of sixteen hundred and eighty dollars, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being in full of all demands of the said Trotter growing out of the emigration and subsistence of Choctaw Indians, in the State of Mississippi, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-one, under a contract with the United States.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXX.—An Act for the Relief of John Dick, of Florida.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall cause a patent to be issued to John Dick, for lots numbered ten, of section twenty-nine, and one of section thirty-one, fractional section of thirty, and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section thirty-two, all lying in township ten south, of range twenty-seven east, containing one hundred and fifty-three acres, situate in East Florida, and of the lands subject to sale at St. Augustine, Florida: Provided, That such patent shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and shall not affect the rights of any third person.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXIII.—An Act to vest the Title to certain Warrants for Land in George M. Gordon.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to recognize the assignment made to George M. Gordon on the twenty-first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two, by Edmund Hugill, sergeant in Captain Gordon's company, third regiment of United States infantry, and James McIntyre, a private of the same company and regiment, to whom warrants numbers seventy-eight thousand four hundred and two, and seventy-eight thousand four hundred and three, respectively, issued on the thirteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, so as to vest the legal title in and to the warrants aforesaid in the said George M. Gordon, his heirs or assigns, according to the intention of said parties.

APPROVED, June 2, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXVII.—An Act for the Relief of the Heirs or Legal Representatives of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, and others.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs, executors, administrators, or legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, late of Alabama, the sum of three thousand two hundred dollars, and to the heirs, executors, administrators, or legal representatives of whomsoever possesses whatever title the United States gave to Cureton, Smith, and Heifner, to the southeast quarter of section two, township fourteen, range eight east, of the lands selected in Alabama, and sold under treaty of March twenty-four, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, with the Creek Indians, for the benefit of the orphans of the tribe, the sum of two thousand two hundred and sixty dollars, with interest, at the rate of five and a half per cent. per annum, upon both aforesaid sums, from November first, eighteen hundred and thirty-six.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Samuel W. Turner and Alvin A. Turner.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of twenty-three thousand eight hundred and twenty-five dollars ($23,825) unto Samuel W. Turner and Alvin A. Turner, in full for their services in transporting the United States mail on their steamers from Cleveland, Ohio, and Detroit, Michigan, to Mackinaw, Sault Ste. Marie, Marquette, Copper Harbor, Eagle Harbor, Eagle River, and Ontonagon, Michigan, and La Pointe, Bayfield, and Superior City, in the State of Wisconsin.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

CHAP. LXXXIX.—An Act for the Relief of D. O. Dickinson.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be paid to D. O. Dickinson the sum of one hundred and eight dollars and seventy-five cents, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being the amount due him by the United States for services rendered by said Dickinson, in connection with keeping a light in Waukegan harbor, Illinois.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

XC.—An Act to continue the Pension heretofore paid to Mary C. Hamilton, Widow of Captain Fowler Hamilton, late of the United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to continue the name of Mrs. Mary C. Hamilton on the pension rolls, at the same rate of pension allowed her under the act passed for her benefit, and approved March first, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, payment to commence from and after the expiration of said act, and to continue for five years from the date of the passage of this act.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

CHAP. XCIV.—An Act for the Relief of Thomas Phenix, jr.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Thomas Phenix, jr., during the time he was acting as paymaster's clerk in the employment of D. Randall, deputy paymaster general, the sum of three dollars a day; but from this compensation is to be deducted the salary of five hundred dollars per annum already received by him.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

CHAP. XCV.—An act for the Relief of Isaac Body and Samuel Fleming.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Isaac Body be allowed to enter at the land office at Springfield, Illinois, at the minimum price, at any time within one year after the date of this act, the southeast quarter of section number nineteen of township number twenty-six north, of range twelve west; and that Samuel Fleming be allowed to enter, at the same land office, and on the same terms and conditions, the northwest quarter of section twenty, township twenty-six north, range, twelve west: Provided, however, That this act shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. XCVI.—An Act for the Relief of Lewis W. Broadwell.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lewis W. Broadwell, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of twelve thousand nine hundred and thirty-eight dollars, it being in full compensation for transporting the United States mails, in steamboats, from Vicksburg, Mississippi, to Grand Lake, Arkansas, from the fourth day of September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, to the seventeenth day of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, at the rate of five thousand dollars per annum.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. XCVII.—An Act for the Relief of Captain Stanton Sholes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to place Captain Stanton Sholes upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, who shall be entitled to and receive a pension at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. XCVIII.—An Act for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Benjamin L. McAtee and I. N. Eastham, the sum of six thousand dollars in full for transporting extra mail matter over routes number three thousand nine hundred and sixty and number four thousand one hundred and sixty-nine, between the first day of July, eighteen hundred and forty-six, and the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. XCIX.—An Act for the Relief of Job Stafford, of the State of New York.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, instructed to issue to Job Stafford, of the State of New York, a bounty land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, the same to be held, located, or assigned, as if it had issued in the ordinary way, on application under existing laws.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. C.—An Act for the Relief of Benjamin Wakefield.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin Wakefield, out any money in the Treasury not otherwise appro-riated, the difference of pay between that of master's mate and boatswain, from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, to the nineteenth day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CI.—An Act for the Relief of Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized to pay to Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman, formerly of Captain Clay's company of Kentucky volunteers, one hundred and seventy dollars, ($170,) being the amount adjudged as due to said Lloyd Redman for three horses lost by him while in the service of the United States during the Mexican war; and that said sum be paid out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CII.—An Act for the Relief of Simeon Stedman.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to instruct the proper disbursing officer to pay to Simeon Stedman, who served in Captain Christopher Ripley's company of the thirty-seventh infantry during the war with Great Britain, in eighteen hundred and twelve, such sum or sums as may have accrued to him from the time of his last receiving payment for services till the end of the war; and that said payment shall be made out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CIII.—An Act for the Relief of Joseph Webb.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the monthly pay heretofore allowed by law to Joseph Webb, as an invalid pensioner, be, and the same is hereby, increased to eight dollars per month; and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay said Webb, at the rate aforesaid, from and after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-two.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CIV.—An Act for the Relief of Oliver P. Hovey.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Oliver P. Hovey, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, fifteen hundred and fifty-five dollars, compensation for printing the "Kearny Code" of laws for New Mexico in eighteen hundred and forty-six.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CV.—An Act for the Relief of George W. Biscoe.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit the claim of George W. Biscoe to indemnification, under the first article of the treaty of Ghent, for the loss of the schooner "Speedwell," captured in the Patuxent river, by the British naval forces, on the twenty-second of August, eighteen hundred and fourteen, and which was in the waters and within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States on the seventeenth day of February, eighteen hundred and fifteen, the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the said treaty of Ghent, and was carried away out of the said waters and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, in violation of the said first article of the said treaty; and that the said officers shall ascertain the value of the said schooner Speedwell, from such proof as may be exhibited to them, within six months from the date of this act; and that the amount so ascertained shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, always, That the said amount shall not exceed the sum of two thousand dollars.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CVI.—An Act for the Relief of Micajah Brooks.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place the name of Micajah Brooks, of the State of Georgia, on the pension roll, at the rate of four dollars per month, or forty-eight dollars per annum; and that he be paid at that rate from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty; and that said amount be paid to said Micajah Brooks, if living; otherwise, to his sur[vi]ving children.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CVII.—An Act for the Relief of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving Child and Heir of Colonel Archibald Loughry, deceased.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to issue land scrip in eighty-acre certificates, receivable in payment for public lands at any of the land offices in the United States, in favor of Elizabeth McBrier, only surviving child and heir of Colonel Archibald Loughry, deceased, or to her order, for an amount equal to six thousand six hundred and sixty-six acres and two thirds of an acre of land, which may be located on land subject to private entry, at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, or less.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Richard B. Alexander.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Richard B. Alexander, late a major in the first Tennessee regiment, Mexican war, the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, in full of the value of one horse and one mule, lost by him during the said war.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CIX.—An Act for the Relief of Robert W. Cushman, formerly an acting Purser in the United States Navy.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert W. Cushman, acting purser of the Germantown, the flag ship of the African squadron, the difference of pay between that of a purser and a captain's clerk, for such time as he so acted as purser.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

CHAP. CX.—An Act for the Relief of the Heirs of William Turvin, deceased.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the heirs of William Turvin, deceased, be, and they are hereby, authorized to locate, free of cost, nine hundred and sixty arpents of land, or as near thereto as the same can be done not exceeding that quantity, according to the legal subdivisions, on any of the public lands of the United States subject to entry at private sale at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre; which lands, when so located, shall be in full for the claim of their said father, William Turvin, to a tract of land lying on the east side of the Mobile river and west of the Bayou Pascual, under a grant from the Spanish Government, and which was recommended for confirmation on the report of the register and receiver of the land office for the district of St. Stephens.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the receipt of the certificate of entry from the proper land office, be, and he is hereby authorized to issue a patent for the land so located.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXI.—An Act for the Relief of William Heine, Artist in the Japan Expedition.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Heine, artist in the late Japan expedition under Commodore Perry, compensation at the rate of eighteen hundred dollars per annum during the time he was actually employed in such service: Provided, The amount already paid him as master's mate on said expedition be deducted therefrom.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXII.—An Act for the Relief of Alonzo and Elbridge G. Colby.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of twenty-five hundred and two dollars and eleven cents be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to and for Alonzo Colby and Elbridge G. Colby, of the town of Buck[s]port, in the State of Maine, the sum being the balance due them on their contract with the United States, dated July twenty-four, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, for constructing a breakwater at Owl's Head harbor, Penobscot river, Maine.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXIII.—An Act for the Relief of Shove Chase, of New York.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Shove Chase, of New York, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to continue during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXIV.—An Act granting an Invalid Pension to Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Brevet Major John Jones, of Tennessee, on the invalid pension roll, and pay him a pension at the rate of forty dollars per month, from and after the date of his application, and to continue during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXV.—An Act for the Relief of the legal Representatives of Jean Baptiste Devidrine.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the legal representatives of Jean Baptiste Devidrine, late of Louisiana, be, and they are hereby, confirmed in their claim to that tract or parcel of land known on the public surveys of the southwestern land district of that State as lot number forty-five, (45,) in township number four (4) south, range number three (3) east, and lot number seventy-three, (73,) in township number four (4) south, range four (4) east, containing about four hundred arpents, or three hundred and fifty acres of land, and that a patent shall issue therefor as in other cases: Provided, That this act shall only be construed as a relinquishment of whatever title may be now vested in the United States, and shall in nowise interfere with any valid adverse claim of other or third parties, should such there be.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXVI.—An Act for the Relief of David McClure, Administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased, the sum of one hundred and seven dollars and sixty-four cents, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; it being the amount of interest collected from the said Joseph McClure, in his lifetime, on a judgment, in favor of the United States Government, which it was afterwards ascertained the said McClure did not properly owe, and the amount of which judgment has been previously refunded to him by Congress.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXVII.—An Act for the Relief of James Rumph.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay James Rumph, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of seven hundred and sixty dollars, it being in full compensation for medical aid rendered to soldiers in the service of the United States in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-seven.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXVIII.—An Act for the Relief of John Dearnit.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby is, authorized and required out of any money in [the] Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to John Dearnit the sum of two hundred and ninety-five dollars, in addition to the amount already paid him by the Government under his contract for carrying the mail upon route number one thousand six hundred and one, from July first, eighteen hundred and forty-four, for four years.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXIX.—An Act for the Relief of the legal Representatives of John McDonough, deceased, late of Louisiana.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the claim numbered thirty-nine (39) in the report of the register and receiver of the land office at New Orleans, Louisiana, made on the twenty-second day of November, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, in the same of John McDonough, to a tract of about one hundred and seventy-seven superficial arpents of land, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed; and that a patent shall issue, as in ordinary cases, to the legal representatives of the said McDonough: Provided, That this confirmation shall only be construed as a relinquishment of all right and title of the United States, and shall not prejudice the legal claim of any other party, should such exist.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXX.—An act for the Relief of Stuckey and Rogers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Stuckey and Rogers, mail contractors on route number six thousand and seventy-eight, (6078,) from Winsboro' to Pinckneyville, in the State of South Carolina, at the rate of three hundred and thirty-three dollars per annum, for the transportation of the mails on said route; deducting therefrom whatever payments may have been made, at the rate of one hundred and thirty-eight dollars per annum, by the Post Office Department.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXXI.—An Act for the Relief of Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to credit the account of Second Lieutenant Loomis L. Langdon, first artillery, United States Army, with eleven hundred and seventy-six dollars and sixty-six cents; it being the amount stolen from his possession, at Fort Brown, on the night of the twenty-third of October, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

CHAP. CXXIII.—An Act for the Relief of Peter Parker.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby is, directed, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Peter Parker the sum of two thousand six hundred and three dollars and nineteen cents, the same being in full for his services as chargé d'affaires ad interim at Canton, in China, at various periods between the dates of May twenty-six, anno Domini eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and the fourth day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXIV.—An Act for the Relief of David Bruce.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Patents be, and he is hereby, empowered to extend the patent of David Bruce, dated the sixth of November, eighteen hundred and forty-three, for a new and improved mode of casting type, for seven years from the date of its expiration, subject to the rules and regulations now in force for granting extensions, provided it shall appear, on examination, that the failure to extend his patent occurred through an official mistake.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXV.—An Act for the Relief of the legal Representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officer of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased, a sum equal to two per centum on all moneys disbursed by him as agent for paying pensions, from and after the twentieth day of April, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, with interest on the same, from the thirtieth April, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXVI.—An Act for the Relief of Judith Nott.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Judith Nott upon the pension roll of the United States, at the rate of nine dollars per month.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid pension commence and be computed from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, and to continue during her widowhood.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXVII.—An Act for the Relief of Dr. Thomas Antisell.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Dr. Thomas Antisell, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of two hundred and seventy-four dollars and sixty-five cents, in full of the account of said Antisell, for services rendered as acting assistant surgeon to the command, (company G, 3d Artillery,) escorting Lieutenant Parke's party of survey, from California to New Mexico, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-five.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

CHAP. CXXVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Dr. Ferdinand O. Miller.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and required to audit and settle the account of Doctor Ferdinand O. Miller, and allow him the pay of an assistant surgeon in the Army from the sixth day of July, eighteen hundred and forty-six, to the twenty-eighth day of February, eighteen hundred and forty-seven, both days inclusive, in full for his services as surgeon and assistant surgeon during the late war with Mexico, deducting therefrom the amount paid the said Dr. Miller as a private soldier during the same specified time.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXIX.—An Act for the Relief of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to audit and settle the accounts of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster, for services as inspectors of hulls and boilers, at New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, and to allow them their regular compensation from the date of their appointment as if they had been sworn and properly qualified.

APPROVED, June 8, 1853.

CHAP. CXXX.—An Act for the Relief of the Heirs of Richard Tarvin.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to the heirs of Richard Farren, alias Richard Tarvin, who was a friendly Creek Indian in the war of eighteen hundred and thirteen and fourteen, the sum of six hundred dollars, for losses sustained by said Richard Farren, or Richard Tarvin, during said war, the said sum to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXI.—An Act for the Relief of John B. Roper.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to John B. Roper, in addition to the sum already paid him, the sum of three hundred dollars for services performed on mail route number thirteen thousand three hundred and thirty-six.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXII.—An Act for the Relief of Cornelius H. Latham.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow and pay Cornelius H. Latham, of the State of New York, an invalid pensioner, the sum of eight dollars per month during his natural life, in lieu of the pension now allowed him by law, to commence on the twenty-fifth day of February, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.

APPROVED, June 8, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXIV.—An Act for the Relief of Wyatt Griffith.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Wyatt Griffith, of Tennessee, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 20th of June, anno Domini eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and pay him at that rate during the term of his natural life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXV.—An Act to increase the Pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the half pension heretofore allowed to Henry E. Read, of the State of Kentucky, a non-commissioned officer in the Mexican war, be, and the same is hereby, raised to thirteen dollars a month.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the benefits accruing to the said Henry E. Read, under and by virtue of this act, shall commence March third, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and continue for and during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXVI.—An Act for the Relief of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Michael A. Davenport, of Illinois, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, and pay him a pension, at said rate, from the fifth day of March, anno Domini eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXVII.—An Act granting an Invalid Pension to Alexander S. Bean, of Pennsylvania.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place the name of Alexander S. Bean, of the State of Pennsylvania, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, and pay him at that rate from the twenty-ninth day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Stephen Fellows.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Stephen Fellows on the invalid pension list, at the rate of four dollars per month, from the twentieth day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and continue during life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXXXIX.—An Act for the Relief of Elijah Close, of Tennessee.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to place the name of Elijah Close, of Washington county, Tennessee, on the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the third day of December, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, and to continue during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXL.—An Act granting an Invalid Pension to Conrad Schroeder.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to place the name of Conrad Schroeder, who was a captain in the "Louisville Legion" during the war with Mexico, on the invalid pension roll, and pay him a pension at the rate of thirteen dollars and thirty-three cents per month, commencing on the twenty-second day of January, anno Domini eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and continuing during life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXLI.—An Act granting an Invalid Pension to James Fugate, of Missouri.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed to place the name of James Fugate, of the State of Missouri, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, and pay him a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, instead of four dollars per month, the amount he now receives; said pension to commence on the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and to continue during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXLII.—An Act for the Relief of Mrs. Harriet O. Reid, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Harriet O. Reid, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, being the amount claimed to be due the estate of the said Brevet Colonel Fanning, as commissions of two and a half per cent. upon the sum of fifty thousand dollars disbursed by him in eighteen hundred and twenty-seven and eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, at the United States arsenal, in Augusta, Georgia.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXLIII.—An Act for the Relief of Gardner and Vincent, and others.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, upon the production of satisfactory evidence, to audit and settle the several accounts of Gardner and Vincent, A. S. Gardner, A. F. Holmes, G. B. Murphy, C. C. Carlton, N. E. Crittenden, O. A. Brooks and Company, and W. Bingham and Company, for goods, et cetera, furnished the United States marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, during the superintendency of John Coon, and to pay the amounts found to be due, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXLIV.—An Act for the Relief of Keep, Bard and Company, J. Caulfield, and Joseph Landis and Company.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the attorney of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter satisfaction of the judgment rendered by the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, on or about the twenty-first day of January, A. D. eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, in favor of the United States against Keep, Bard and Company, principals, composed of E. S. Keep, J. S. Bard, and J. Caulfield, and Joseph Landis and Company, sureties, composed of L. H. Place and Paul E. Mortimer, jointly and severally, in solido.

APPROVED, June 9, 1858.

CHAP. CXLIX.—An Act for the Relief of John Sawyer, a soldier of the War of the Revolution.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to enter the name of John Sawyer, of Garland, in the county of Penobscot, in the State of Maine, on the roll of revolutionary pensioners, and pay him a pension, at the rate of twenty-four dollars a year, during his natural life, commencing on the fourth day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-one.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

Laws of the United States.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

CHAP. CL.—An Act for the Relief of William S. Bradford.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the passage of this act, the pension now paid to William S. Bradford be increased from the present amount received by him to twenty-five dollars per month.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

CHAP. CLI.—An Act for the Relief of Albert G. Allen.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in the settlement of the accounts of Albert G. Allen, late Navy agent at Washington, District of Columbia, one and one fourth per centum be allowed him upon the disbursements of extra pay made by him under the acts of August thirty-first, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, to the officers, seamen, and marines who had served on the Pacific coasts of Mexico and California, deducting therefrom such amount as may be due from him to the United States.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

CHAP. CLII.—An Act for the Relief of Jennett H. McCall, only child of Captain James McCall, of the Revolutionary War.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Jennett H. McCall, only child of Captain James McCall, of General Pickens' brigade, in the South Carolina regiment, during the war of the Revolution, the seven years' half pay of a captain, as allowed by the resolution of Congress passed August twenty-fourth, one thousand seven hundred and eighty, amounting to two thousand one hundred dollars; the said sum to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

APPROVED, June 11, 1858.

CHAP. CLVII.—An Act granting a Pension to Beriah Wright, of New York.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Beriah Wright, of New York, upon the roll of invalid pensioners of the United States, and pay to him a pension at the rate of four dollars per month, from the sixteenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 12, 1858.

CHAP. CLVIII.—An Act for the Relief of Nancy Magill, of Ohio.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place the name of Nancy Magill, widow of James Magill, of the State of Ohio, on the pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, for five years, commencing on the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

APPROVED, June 12, 1858.

CHAP. CLIX.—An Act for the Relief of Georgiana M. Lewis.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the twelfth section of the act entitled, "An act making appropriation[s] for the naval service for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight," approved March third, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, be so construed that the five years' pay provided for in said section, which would have been paid to her deceased husband, Armstrong

Irvine Lewis, in case he had been living at the time of the passage of said act, be paid to Georgiana M. Lewis, his widow.

APPROVED, June 12, 1858.

CHAP. CXLVIII.—An Act granting an Invalid Pension to John Holland, of Arkansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of John Holland of Arkansas, on the invalid pension roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, and to pay him at that rate from the fourteenth day of December, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXIX.—An Act granting an Invalid Pension to William Randolph.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William Randolph on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of four dollars per month, and pay him at that rate from the twelfth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, during his natural life.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXX.—An Act granting an Invalid Pension to William Howell, of Tennessee.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William Howell, of the State of Tennessee, on the invalid pension roll, and that he be paid a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the twenty-third of February, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and continuing during his life.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXXI.—An Act granting a Pension to Mary A. M. Jones.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Mary A. M. Jones, widow of Brevet Major General Roger Jones, deceased, late adjutant general of the Army, upon the roll of pensioners, and pay her a pension at the rate of one half the pay, monthly, to which her late husband was entitled at the time of his death; such pension to commence on the fifteenth day of July, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and continue during her natural life or widowhood.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

CHAP. CLXXII.—An Act for the Relief of Sherlock and Shirley.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General be, and [he] is hereby, authorized to examine the cases of fines charged against Sherlock and Shirley, under their contract for carrying the mails on route number five thousand one hundred and three, from Louisville, Kentucky, to St. Louis, Missouri, and to remit so much of such fines as, in his judgment, ought not to be enforced against the said contractors: Provided, That no case of any fine or deduction heretofore considered and decided by any former Postmaster General, upon the application of the contractors, shall be reviewed under the provisions of this act, and the Postmaster General shall be authorized to cause any persons to be cross-examined whose testimony may be offered for the purposes of such examination by him as aforesaid.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

PRIVATE RESOLUTIONS.

No. 14.—A Resolution for the Relief of John Grayson.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed, in adjusting the account of John Grayson, pension agent at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to place to the credit of the said John Grayson the amount of five hundred and twenty-six dollars and thirteen cents, paid by him to George De Camp, one of the surviving children and heirs of Susannah Stokely, deceased, widow of Nehemiah Stokely, a captain in the revolutionary war; the same having been paid in conformity with the directions of the Secretary of the Interior, as conveyed upon the face of a certificate of pension issued by the Commissioner of Pensions to said George De Camp.

APPROVED, June 1, 1858.

No. 18.—A Resolution for the benefit of the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon, United States Navy.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Congress entertain a high sense of the devotion to duty, the coolness, courage, and conduct of Commander William Lewis Herndon, United States Navy, in command of the steamer Central America, at sea during the prevalence of a hurricane on the twelfth of September, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven; and that the widow of the said William Lewis Herndon be entitled to receive, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to three years' full sea-service pay of a commander in the Navy.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

No. 19.—A Resolution devolving upon the Secretary of War the Execution of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act supplemental to an Act therein mentioned," approved December twenty-two, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the duties imposed, or required to be performed, by the act of Congress entitled "An act supplemental to an act therein mentioned," approved December twenty-two, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, including the act to which it is supplemental, be, and the same are hereby, transferred to the Secretary of War, who shall proceed de novo to execute the same in their plain and obvious meaning: Provided, nevertheless, That from any amount which may be found just and equitably due to the legal representatives of George Fisher, deceased, there shall be deducted all sums which may have been heretofore allowed and paid by the United States.

APPROVED, June 3, 1858.

No. 21.—Joint Resolution for the Relief of General Sylvester Churchill.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper disbursing officer be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to allow and pay to General Sylvester Churchill, inspector general, the pay and allowances of inspector general, from the twenty-ninth of April, eighteen hundred and forty-five, the date of his discharge, to the twenty-first of January, eighteen hundred and forty-six, when he was reinstated in his office, according to the rates of pay then allowed, deducting from said pay and allowance any amounts which may have been paid to the said Churchill for services performed between the time of his discharge and restoration to office.

APPROVED, June 5, 1858.

No. 22.—Joint Resolution for the Relief of Henry Orndorf.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General be, and

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Laws of the United States.

[he] hereby is, authorized and instructed to revise and readjust the account of the Department with Henry Orndorf, for mail service on route number nine thousand one hundred and fifty-seven, from Zanesville to Columbus, Ohio, and to allow to said Orndorf full pay for said service, the same as if his bid had been for service six times a week, as required by the advertisement, instead of daily service.

APPROVED, June 7, 1858.

No. 24.—A Resolution to correct an error in the "Act for the Relief of Stephen R. Rowan," approved June first, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act for the relief of Stephen R. Rowan, approved June first, eighteen hundred and fifty eight, be so corrected as to read as follows: That the attorney of the United States of America for the southern district of Illinois be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter satisfaction of a judgment entered by the district court of the United States for the said southern district of Illinois, at its June term, anno Domini, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, in favor of the United States of America against Stephen R. Rowan, on his paying all the costs of said case.

APPROVED, June 14, 1858.

APPROPRIATIONS, NEW OFFICES, ETC.

STATEMENTS SHOWING

- I. Appropriations made during the First Session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress.
- II. Offices created and the Salaries thereof.
- III. The offices the Salaries of which have been increased, with the amount of such increase, during the same period.

JULY 19, 1858.—Prepared under the direction of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in compliance with the sixth section of the act "to authorize the appointment of additional paymasters, and for other purposes," approved July 4, 1836.

I. APPROPRIATIONS MADE DURING THE FIRST SESSION OF THE THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

By the act to authorize the issue of Treasury notes.

To purchase said Treasury notes at par for the amount of principal and interest due at the time of the purchase on such notes.....[Indefinite.]
To defray the expenses of engraving, printing, preparing, and issuing the Treasury notes herein authorized.....$20,000 00

By the act making appropriations for the payment of Invalid and other Pensions of the United States for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For invalid pensions, under various acts.....$325,000 00
For pensions under acts of the eighteenth March, eighteen hundred and eighteen, fifteenth May, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, and seventh June, eighteen hundred and thirty-two... 18,000 00

For pensions to widows of those who served in the revolutionary war, under the third section of the act of fourth July, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, the acts of seventh July, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, third March, eighteen hundred and forty-three, seventeenth June, eighteen hundred and forty-four, second February and twenty-ninth July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and second section act of third February, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.....250,000 00

For pensions to widows and orphans, under act of twenty-first of July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, first section act of third February, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, and under special acts..... 86,000 00

For privateer invalids..... 500 00

For Navy pensions to widows and orphans, under act of eleventh August, eighteen hundred and forty-eight..... 90,000 00

$769,500 00

By the act to enable the President of the United States to fulfill the stipulations contained in the third and sixth articles in the treaty between the United States and the King of Denmark, of the eleventh April, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, for the discontinuance of the Sound dues.

To carry out the stipulation contained in the third article of said treaty.....$393,011 00

To carry out the stipulation contained in the sixth article of said treaty, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the interest provided for in said article..... 15,720 44

$408,731 44

By the act to appropriate money to supply Deficiencies in the appropriations for paper, printing, binding, and engraving ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-Third and Thirty-fourth Congresses, and which has been executed.

To pay for paper.....$104,000 00

To pay for the printing ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses..... 57,619 94

To pay for the binding, lithographing, and engraving ordered by the Senate during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses...179,569 64

$341,189 58

By the act to supply Deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary, in the service of the House of Representatives, viz: Six messengers, by resolution of the House of Representatives, twenty-third December, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.... $3,913 00

For folding documents, including pay of folders, wrapping paper, twine, and paste..... 20,000 00

For furniture for Speaker's room, and committee rooms, clerks' offices, Sergeant-at-Arms' office, Doorkeeper's room, and carpenters' work..... 30,000 00

For newspapers..... 3,000 00

For laborers, by resolution of the House of Representatives, twenty-third December, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven..... 2,000 00

For stationery..... 4,000 00

For horses, carriages, and saddle horses..... 1,500 00

To enable John C. Rives to pay to the reporters of the House for reporting the debates of the present session of Congress the usual additional compensation of eight hundred dollars each..... 4,000 00

Army.

For the regular supplies of the quartermaster's department, consisting of fuel for the officers, enlisted men, guard, hospitals, storehouses, and offices; forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the quartermaster's department at the several posts and stations, and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, the companies of light artillery, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses when serving in the field and at the outposts; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including company and other blank books for the Army, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the pay and quartermaster's departments; and for the printing of division and department orders, Army regulations, and reports.....778,000 00

For the purchase of horses for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, the companies of light artillery, and such infantry as it may be found necessary to mount at the frontier posts...252,000 00

For the incidental expenses of the quartermaster's department, consisting of postage on letters and packages received and sent by officers of the Army on public service; expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, including the additional compensation to judges advocate, recorders, members, and witnesses, while on that service, under the act of March sixteenth, eighteen hundred and two; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the quartermaster's department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, storehouses, and hospitals, the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, under the acts of March second, eighteen hundred and nineteen, and August fourth, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, including those employed as clerks at division and department headquarters; expenses of express to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters, other disbursing officers, and trains, when military escorts cannot be furnished; expenses of the internment of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the quartermaster's department, including hire of interpreters, spies, and guides, for the Army; compensation of clerks to officers of the quartermaster's department; compensation of forage and wagon masters, authorized by the act of July fifth, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight; for the apprehension of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; the following expenditures required for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, viz: the purchase of traveling forges, blacksmith's and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes and nails, iron and steel for shoeing, hire of veterinary surgeons, medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, and shoeing the horses of those corps.....$190,000 00

For constructing barracks and other buildings at posts which it may be necessary to occupy during the year; and for repairing, altering, and enlarging buildings at the established posts, including hire or commutation of quarters for officers on military duty; hire of quarters for troops, of storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, and of grounds for summer cantonments; for encampments and temporary frontier stations..... 80,000 00

For transportation of the Army, including the baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp, and garrison equipage from the depot at Philadelphia to the several posts and Army depots; horse equipments and of subsistence from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require it to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small-arms, from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferrriages; for the purchase and hire of horses, mules, and oxen, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, drays, ships, and other sea-going vessels and boats for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; and for procuring water at such posts as from their situation require that it be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads and removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops on the frontier.....5,409,000 00

For subsistence in kind.....1,220,000 00

For surveys for military defenses, geographical explorations, and reconnaissances for military purposes..... 5,000 00

Miscellaneous.

For contingent expenses of the Northeast Executive building, viz: for fuel, light, and repairs.... 1,000 00

For the erection of stables and conservatory at the President's House, to replace those about to be taken down to make room for the extension of the Treasury building..... 3,905 00

For surveying the public lands and private land claims in California, including office expenses incident to the survey of claims, and to be disbursed at the rates prescribed by law for the different kinds of work, being the amount of surveying liabilities incurred by the surveyor

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

general during the fiscal year ending thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, over and above that authorized under the appropriation of fifty thousand dollars for that period.	$220,000 00	For fourth of five installments for pay of physician, teacher, blacksmith, and farmer, per third article treaty twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	$2,260 00	For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments in goods, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	$3,500 00
For payment to clerks temporarily employed in the Post Office Department on account of the extraordinary labors connected with the lettings of new contracts for the term commencing on the first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and the increase of business in the inspection and depredation office of said Department.	5,218 89	Chasta, Scoton, and Umpqua Indians.		For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the support of schools, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	666 67
For lighting the President's House and Capitol, the public grounds around them, and around the executive offices, and Pennsylvania avenue, and Bridge and High streets in Georgetown.	5,000 00	For fourth of fifteen installments of annuity, to be expended as directed by the President, per third article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	2,000 00	For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the purchase of provisions and tobacco, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	666 67
For compensation of the surveyor general of Utah Territory, from first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.	1,500 00	For fourth of fifteen installments for support of two smiths and smiths' shops, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	600 00	For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the support of two smiths' shops, including the pay of two smiths and assistants, and furnishing iron and steel, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	666 67
For purchase of the "Masonic Temple," in the city of Boston, for the accommodation of the United States courts, upon the terms agreed on by the Secretary of the Interior and the proprietors thereof, in addition to the sum of one hundred thousand dollars appropriated by the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, for the erection of a building for said purpose.	5,000 00	For fourth of ten installments for pay of physician, medicines, and expense of care of the sick, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	2,120 00	For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for pay of two smiths' shops, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	666 67
To supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post Office Department for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.	1,469,173 00	For fourth of fifteen installments for pay of teachers and purchase of books and stationery, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,060 00	For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for pay of two farmers, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	333 33
To enable the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow credit to the Clerk of the House of Representatives for such payments out of its contingent fund as have been or may be made under allowances authorized by the House of Representatives during the last Congress.	[Indefinite]	For this amount, to be expended when the united bands shall be required to remove to the Table Rock reserve, or elsewhere, for provisions to aid in their subsistence during the first year they shall reside thereon, as the President may direct, per fourth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,300 00	For fourth of twenty installments of annuity in money, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	20,000 00
	$9,704,209 89	Chippewas of Lake Superior.		Chippewas, Pillager, and Lake Winnibigoshish bands.
By the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.		Fulfilling the treaty of thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four:		For fourth of thirty installments of annuity in money, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	10,666 66
For the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, viz:		For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments in money, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	8,333 33	For fourth of thirty installments of annuity in goods, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	8,000 00
For the pay of superintendents of Indian affairs, and of the several Indian agents, per acts of fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty, twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty, twenty-seventh February, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, and third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.	86,250 00	For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the pay of two carpenters, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	800 00	For fourth of thirty installments for purposes of utility, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	4,000 00
For the pay of the several Indian sub-agents, per act of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	10,500 00	For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the support of schools, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,333 33	For fourth of twenty installments for purposes of education, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	3,000 00
For the pay of clerk to superintendent at St. Louis, Missouri, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six.	1,900 00	For two thirds of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the purchase of provisions and tobacco, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	7,000 00	For fourth of five annual installments for the purchase of powder, shot, lead, twine, and tobacco, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	600 00
For the pay of clerk to superintendent in California, per act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-two.	2,500 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths and assistants, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,333 33	For fourth of five annual installments for the hire of six laborers, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	3,000 00
For the pay of interpreters, per acts of thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and thirty-four, twenty-seventh February, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.	31,900 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths and assistants, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	600 67	For fourth of fifteen annual installments for support of two smiths and smiths' shops, per third article treaty twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	2,120 00
For presents to Indians.	5,000 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths' shops, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,333 33	Chippewas of Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River.
For provisions for Indians.	11,800 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths' shops, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,333 33	For third of five equal annual annual installments for educational purposes, under the direction of the President, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	4,000 00
For buildings at agencies, and repairs thereof.	10,000 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths' shops, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	19,000 00	For third of five equal annual installments for agricultural implements and carpenters' tools, household furniture, and building materials, cattle, labor, and necessary useful articles, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	5,000 00
For insurance, transportation, and necessary expenses of delivery of annuities, goods, and provisions to the Indian tribes in Minnesota, Michigan, and Wisconsin.	30,000 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths' shops, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	2,000 00	For third of ten equal annual installments in coin, to be distributed per capita , in the usual manner of paying annuities, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	10,000 00
For contingencies of the Indian department.	36,500 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths' shops, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	5,040 00	For third installment for the support of one blacksmith shop for ten years, per second article of the treaty of second August, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	1,240 00
For the employment of temporary clerks by Superintendent of Indian Affairs, on such occasions and for such periods of time as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary to the public service.	5,000 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the support of six smiths' shops, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,320 00	Chippewas, Menomonees, Winnebagoes, and New York Indians.
Blackfoot nation.		For second of twenty installments for the seventh smith and assistant, and support of shop, per second and fifth articles treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,060 00	For education, during the pleasure of Congress, per fifth article treaty eleventh August, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven.	1,500 00
For third of ten installments as annuity, to be expended in the purchase of such goods, provisions, and other useful articles as the President, at his discretion, may from time to time determine, per ninth article of the treaty of seventeenth October, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	20,000 00	For support of a smith, assistant, and shop for the Bois Forte band, during the pleasure of the President, per twelfth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,060 00	Chickasaws.
For third of ten installments as annuity, to be expended in establishing and instructing them in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, and in educating their children, and promoting civilization and Christianity, at the discretion of the President, per tenth article of the treaty of seventeenth October, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	15,000 00	For support of two farmers for the Bois Forte band, during the pleasure of the President, per twelfth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	1,200 00	For permanent annuity in goods, per act of twenty-fifth February, seventeen hundred and ninety-nine.	3,000 00
For expenses of transportation and delivery of annuities in goods and provisions.	17,000 00	Chippewas of the Mississippi.		Choctaws.
Calapooias, Molalla, and Clackamas Indians of Willamette Valley.		Fulfilling the treaty of twenty-second February, eighteen hundred and fifty-five:		For permanent annuity, per second article treaty sixteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty, and thirtieth article treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	3,000 00
For fourth of five installments of annuity for beneficial objects, per second article of treaty twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	10,000 00	For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments in money, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	4,166 67	For permanent annuity for support of light-horsemen, per thirteenth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and twenty, and thirtieth article treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	6,000 00
		For one third of seventeenth of twenty-five installments for the pay of two carpenters, per fourth article treaty fourth October, eighteen hundred and forty-two, and eighth article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.	400 00	For permanent provision for blacksmith, per sixth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and twenty, and thirtieth article treaty twenty-second June eighteen hundred and fifty-five.	600 00

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

For permanent provision for iron and steel, per ninth article treaty twentieth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-five, and thirteenth article of treaty twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	$320 00	For interest on forty-six thousand and eighty dollars, at five per centum, being the value of thirty-six sections of land set apart by treaty of eighteen hundred and twenty-nine for education, per resolution of Senate nineteenth January, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, and fifth article treaty sixth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	$2,304 00	For interest on investment of two hundred and twenty-one thousand two hundred and fifty-seven dollars and eighty-six cents, at five per centum, for Miami Indians of Indiana, per Senate's amendment to fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	$11,062 89
For interest on five hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, for educational and other beneficial purposes, to be applied under the direction of the general council of the Choctaws, in conformity with the provisions contained in the tenth and thirteenth articles of the treaty of twenty-second June, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	25,000 00	For fifth of eight equal installments for payment of five chiefs, per sixth article treaty sixth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	1,250 00	Miamies, Eel River.
For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes:		Florida Indians, or Seminoles.		For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per fourth article treaty third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five.....	500 00
Camanches, Kiowas, and Apaches, of Arkansas river.		For the last of fifteen installments in goods, per sixth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five.....	2,000 00	For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per third article treaty twenty-first August, eighteen hundred and five.....	250 00
For fifth of ten installments for the purchase of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, per sixth article treaty twenty-seventh July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.....	18,000 00	For the last of fifteen installments in money, per sixth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, and fourth article treaty ninth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	3,000 00	For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per third and separate article to treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and nine.....	350 00
For expenses of transportation of the fifth of ten installments of goods, provisions, and agricultural implements, per sixth article treaty twenty-seventh July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.....	7,000 00	Iowas.		Navajoes.
Creeks.		For interest in lieu of investment on fifty-seven thousand five hundred dollars to the first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, at five per centum, for education or other beneficial purposes, under the direction of the President, per second article treaty nineteenth October, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight, and ninth article treaty seventeenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	2,875 00	For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Navajoes, pursuant to the requirements of the tenth article treaty ninth September, eighteen hundred and forty-nine.....	5,000 00
For permanent annuity in money, per fourth article treaty seventh August, seventeen hundred and ninety, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	1,500 00	Kansas.		Nisqually, Puyallup, and other tribes and bands of Indians.
For permanent annuity in money, per second article treaty sixteen June, eighteen hundred and two, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	3,000 00	For interest in lieu of investment on two hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty fourteenth January, eighteen hundred and forty-six.....	10,000 00	For fulfilling the articles negotiated twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, with certain bands of Indians of Puget sound, Washington Territory:
For permanent annuity in money, per fourth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	20,000 00	Kaskaskias, Peorias, Weas, and Piankeshawes.		For fourth installment, in part payment for relinquishment of title to lands to be applied to beneficial objects, per fourth article treaty twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	2,000 00
For permanent provision for blacksmith and assistant, and for shop and tools, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	840 00	For second of three installments of nine thousand dollars, for the years eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, and eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, per sixth article treaty thirtieth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	9,000 00	For fourth of twenty installments for pay of instructor, smith, physician, carpenter, farmer, and assistant if necessary, per tenth article treaty twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	4,500 00
For permanent provision for iron and steel for shop, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	270 00	For the last of five installments for support of blacksmith and assistant, per sixth article treaty thirtieth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	720 00	Omahas.
For permanent provision for the pay of a wheelwright, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	600 00	For the last of five installments for the purchase of iron and steel, per sixth article treaty thirtieth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	220 00	For the first of ten installments of this amount, being second of the series, in money or otherwise, per fourth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	30,000 00
For blacksmith and assistant and shop and tools during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	840 00	Kickapoos.		For fourth of ten installments for support of a miller, per eighth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	600 00
For iron and steel for shop during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	270 00	For fifth installment of interest, at five per centum, on one hundred thousand dollars for education, per second article treaty eighteenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	5,000 00	For fourth of ten installments for support of blacksmith and assistant, and iron and steel for shop, per eighth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	940 00
For wagon maker during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	600 00	For the payment of this sum as the fifth installment upon two hundred thousand dollars, to be paid in eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, per second article treaty eighteenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	14,000 00	For fourth of ten installments for support of farmer, per eighth article treaty sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	600 00
For assistance in agricultural operations during the pleasure of the President, per eighth article treaty twenty-fourth January, eighteen hundred and twenty-six, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	2,000 00	Menomonees.		Osages.
For education during the pleasure of the President, per fifth article treaty fourteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	1,000 00	For third of twelve installments for continuing and keeping up a blacksmith shop, and providing the usual quantity of iron and steel, per fourth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and third article treaty twelfth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	916 66	For interest on sixty-nine thousand one hundred and twenty dollars, at five per centum, being the value of fifty-four sections of land set apart second June, eighteen hundred and twenty-five, for educational purposes, per Senate resolution nineteenth January, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight.....	3,450 00
For the second of seven additional installments for two blacksmiths, assistants, shop, and tools, per thirteenth article treaty twenty-fourth March, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	1,680 00	For third of ten installments of annuity upon two hundred thousand dollars, balance of three hundred and fifty thousand dollars for cession of lands, per fourth article treaty eighteenth October, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, and third article treaty twelfth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	30,000 00	Ottos and Missourias.
For the second of seven additional installments for iron and steel for shops, per thirteenth article treaty twenty-fourth March, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	540 00	Miamies of Kansas.		For the first of ten installments of this amount, being the second series, in money or otherwise, per fourth article treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	13,000 00
For twenty-eight of twenty installments for education, per fourth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	3,000 00	For permanent provision for blacksmith and assistant, and iron and steel for shop, per fifth article treaty sixth October, eighteen hundred and eighteen, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	940 00	For fourth of ten installments for pay of miller, per seventh article treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	600 00
For fifteenth of twenty installments for education, per fourth article treaty fourth January, eighteen hundred and forty-five, and fifth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	3,000 00	For permanent provision for miller, in lieu of gunsmith, per fifth article treaty sixth October, eighteen hundred and eighteen, fifth article treaty twenty-third October, eighteen hundred and thirty-four, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	600 00	For fourth of ten installments for blacksmith and assistant, and iron and steel for shop, per seventh article treaty fifteen March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	940 00
For five per centum interest on two hundred thousand dollars, for purposes of education, per sixth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	10,000 00	For their proportion of eighteenth of twenty installments in money, per second article treaty twenty-eighth November, eighteen hundred and forty, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	5,636 36	For fourth of ten installments for farmer, per seventh article treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	600 00
Delawares.		For interest on fifty thousand dollars, at five per centum, for educational purposes, per third article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	2,500 00	Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan.
For life annuity to chief, per private article to supplemental treaty twenty-fourth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, to treaty of third October, eighteen hundred and eighteen.....	100 00	For fifth of six equal annual installments to Miamies residing on ceded lands, for purchase of former perpetual and other annuities and relinquishment of claims, per fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	31,739 11	For third of ten equal annual installments for educational purposes, to be expended under the direction of the President, according to the wishes of the Indians, so far as may be reasonable and just, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	8,000 00
		Miamies of Indiana.		For third of five equal annual installments in agricultural implements and carpenter's tools, household furniture, and building materials, cattle, labor, and necessary useful articles, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	15,000 00
		For their proportion of eighteenth of twenty installments in money, per second article treaty twenty-eighth November, eighteen hundred and forty, and fourth article treaty fifth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	6,863 64	For third installment for the support of four blacksmith shops for ten years, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	4,240 00
				For third installment of principal payable annually for ten years, to be distributed per capita, in the usual manner of paying annuities, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	10,000 00
				For interest on two hundred and seventy-six thousand dollars, unpaid part of the principal sum of three hundred and six thousand dollars, for one year, at five per cent. per annum, to be distributed per capita, in the usual manner of paying annuities, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	13,800 00
				For third of ten equal annual installments, in lieu of former treaty stipulations, to be paid per capita to the Grand River Ottawas, per second article of the treaty of thirty-first July, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	3,500 00

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

Ottawas of Kansas.		Sacs and Foxes of Missouri.		Treaty of Fort Laramie.
For their proportion of the permanent annuities in money, goods, or otherwise, payable under the fourth article of the treaty of third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five; second article of the treaty of seventeenth November, eighteen hundred and seven; fourth article of the treaty of seventeenth September, eighteen hundred and eighteen; and fourth article of the treaty of twenty-ninth August, eighteen hundred and twenty-one.....	$2,600 00	For interest on one hundred and fifty-seven thousand four hundred dollars, at five per centum, under the direction of the President, per second article treaty twenty-first October, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven.....	$7,870 00	For eighth of ten installments in provisions and merchandise, for payment of annuities and transportation of the same to certain tribes of Indians, per seventh article treaty seventeenth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and Senate's amendment thereto.....	$70,000 00
Pawnees.		Seminoles.		Umpquas, (Cow Creek Band.)
For agricultural implements, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty ninth October, eighteen hundred and thirty-three...	1,000 00	For the second of ten installments for the support of schools, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six...	3,000 00	For fifth of twenty installments in blankets, clothing, provisions, and stock, per third article treaty nineteenth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.....	550 00
Pottawatomies.		For the second of ten installments for agricultural assistance, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	2,000 00	Fulfilling the articles of twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, with the
For permanent annuity in silver, per fourth article treaty third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five.....	1,000 00	For the second of ten installments for the support of smiths and smiths' shops, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	2,200 00	Umpquas and Callapooias, of Umpqua Valley, Oregon.
For permanent annuity in silver, per third article treaty thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and nine.....	500 00	For five per centum interest on two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to be paid as annuity, per eighth article treaty seventh August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....	12,500 00	For fourth of five installments of annuity for beneficial objects, to be expended as directed by the President, per third article of treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	3,000 00
For permanent annuity in silver, per third article treaty second October, eighteen hundred and eighteen.....	2,500 00	Senecas.		For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a blacksmith, and furnishing shop, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	1,060 00
For permanent annuity in money, per second article treaty twentieth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight.....	2,000 00	For permanent annuity in specie, per fourth article treaty twenty-ninth September, eighteen hundred and seven.....	500 00	For fourth of fifteen installments for the pay of a physician and purchase of medicines, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	1,000 00
For permanent annuity in specie, per second article treaty twenty-ninth July, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine.....	16,000 00	For blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, and iron and steel, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty twenty-eighth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-one...	1,060 00	For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a farmer, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four...	600 00
For life annuity to chief, per third article treaty twentieth October, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	200 00	For miller, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty twenty-eighth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-one.....	600 00	For fourth of twenty installments for the pay of a teacher and purchase of books and stationery, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	700 00
For life annuity to chiefs, per third article treaty twenty-sixth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-three.....	700 00	Senecas of New York.		Utahs.
For education, during the pleasure of Congress, per third article treaty sixteenth October, eighteen hundred and twenty-six; second article treaty twentieth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight; and fourth article treaty twenty-seventh October, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	5,000 00	For permanent annuity, in lieu of interest on stock, per act of nineteenth February, eighteen hundred and thirty-one.....	6,000 00	For fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Utahs, pursuant to the requirements of eighth article treaty thirtieth December, eighteen hundred and forty-nine.....	5,000 00
For permanent provision for the payment of money, in lieu of tobacco, iron, and steel, per second article treaty twentieth September, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, and tenth article of the treaty of the fifth and seventeenth June, eighteen hundred and forty-seven.....	300 00	For interest, in lieu of investment, on seventy-five thousand dollars, at five per centum, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six.....	3,750 00	Winnebagoes.
For permanent provision for fifty barrels of salt, per second article of treaty twenty-ninth July, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine.....	250 00	For interest, at five per centum, on forty-three thousand and fifty dollars, transferred from Ontario bank to the United States Treasury, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six.....	2,152 50	For the last of thirty installments as annuity in specie, per second article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine.....	18,000 00
For interest on six hundred and forty-three thousand dollars, at five per centum, per seventh article of the treaty of the fifth and seventeenth June, eighteen hundred and forty-six.....	32,150 00	Senecas and Shawnees.		For the last of twenty-seven installments as annuity in specie, per third article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two...	10,000 00
Pottawatomies of Huron.		For permanent annuity in specie, per fourth article treaty seventeenth September, eighteen hundred and eighteen.....	1,000 00	For the last of thirty installments for thirty barrels of salt, per second article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine.....	250 00
For permanent annuity in money or otherwise, per second article treaty seventeenth November, eighteen hundred and seven.....	400 00	For blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, and iron and steel for shop, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article treaty twentieth July, eighteen hundred and thirty-one...	1,060 00	For the last of thirty installments for three thousand pounds of tobacco, per second article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine.....	600 00
Quapaws.		Shawnees.		For the last of twenty-seven installments for one thousand five hundred pounds of tobacco, per fifth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	300 00
For education, during the pleasure of the President, per third article treaty thirteenth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-three.....	1,000 00	For permanent annuity for educational purposes, per fourth article treaty third August, seventeen hundred and ninety-five, and third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	1,000 00	For the last of thirty installments for three smiths and assistants, per third article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine...	2,160 00
For blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, and iron and steel for shop, during the pleasure of the President, per third article treaty thirteenth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-three.....	1,060 00	For fifth of seven annual installments of money, in payment for lands, per third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four...	1,000 00	For the last of thirty installments for iron and steel for shop, per third article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine.....	660 00
For farmer, during the pleasure of the President, per third article treaty thirteenth May, eighteen hundred and thirty-three.....	600 00	For fifth installment of interest, at five per centum, on forty thousand dollars for education, per third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	2,000 00	For the last of thirty installments for laborer and oxen, per third article treaty first August, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine.....	365 00
Rogue Rivers.		For permanent annuity for educational purposes, per fourth article treaty twenty-ninth September, eighteen hundred and seventeen, and third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	2,000 00	For the last of twenty-seven installments for education, per fourth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two...	3,000 00
For fifth of sixteen installments in blankets, clothing, farming utensils, and stock, per third article treaty tenth September, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.....	2,500 00	Six Nations of New York.		For the last of twenty-seven installments for six agriculturists, purchase of oxen, plows, and other implements, per fifth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	2,500 00
Sacs and Foxes of Mississippi.		For permanent annuity in clothing and other useful articles, per sixth article treaty eleventh November, seventeen hundred and ninety-four.....	4,500 00	For the last of twenty-seven installments for the pay of two physicians, per fifth article treaty fifteenth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	400 00
For permanent annuity in goods or otherwise, per third article treaty third November, eighteen hundred and four.....	1,000 00	Sioux of Mississippi.		For interest on one million one hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per fourth article treaty first November, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven.....	55,000 00
For twenty-seventh of thirty installments as annuity in specie, per third article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	20,000 00	For interest on three hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty twenty-ninth September, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven.....	15,000 00	For twelfth of thirty installments of interest on eighty-five thousand dollars, at five per centum, per fourth article treaty thirteenth October, eighteen hundred and forty-six.....	4,250 00
For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for gunsmith, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two,	600 00	For eighth of fifty installments of interest, at five per centum, on one million three hundred and sixty thousand dollars, per fourth article treaty twenty-third July, eighteen hundred and fifty-one.....	68,000 00	Miscellaneous.
For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for iron and steel for shops, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	220 00	For eighth of fifty installments of interest, at five per centum, on one hundred and twelve thousand dollars, being the amount in lieu of the reservations set apart in the third article of Senate's amendment of twenty-third June, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to treaty twenty-third July, eighteen hundred and fifty-one...	5,600 00	For carrying into effect the act of third March, eighteen hundred and nineteen, making provisions for the civilization of the Indian tribes, in addition to the sum specified in said act...	5,000 00
For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for blacksmith and assistant, shop and tools, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	840 00	For eighth of fifty installments of interest, at five per centum, on six hundred thousand dollars, being the amount allowed in lieu of the reservation of lands set apart by the third article of Senate's amendment of twenty-third June, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to treaty fifth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-one.....	3,450 00	For continuing the compilation and completion of a map of the Indian territory.....	2,000 00
For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for iron and steel for shop, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	220 00				$1,338,104 49
For twenty-seventh of thirty installments for forty barrels of salt and forty kegs of tobacco, per fourth article treaty twenty-first September, eighteen hundred and thirty-two.....	1,000 00			By the act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy, for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.
For interest on two hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty twenty-first October, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven.....	10,000 00			For pay of officers, instructors, cadets, and musicians.....	112,806 00
For interest on eight hundred thousand dollars, at five per centum, per second article treaty eleventh October, eighteen hundred and forty-two.....	40,000 00			For commutation of subsistence.....	3,066 00
				For forage for officers' horses.....	864 00
				For current and ordinary expenses, as follows: repairs and improvements, fuel and apparatus, forage, postage, stationery, transportation, printing, clerks, miscellaneous and incidental expenses, and departments of instruction.....	35,610 00

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

For gradual increase and expense of library....	$1,000 00
For expenses of the Board of Visitors.....	3,000 00
For forage for artillery and cavalry horses.....	2,640 00
For supplying horses for cavalry and artillery practice.....	1,000 00
For barracks for dragoon detachment.....	1,500 00
For barracks for artillery detachment.....	6,500 00
For purchase of a bell, and mounting the same with the clock on one of the public buildings,	450 00
For repairs to officers' quarters.....	500 00
For models for the department of cavalry.....	250 00
For extension of water-pipes and increase of reservoir.....	2,500 00
For targets and batteries for artillery exercise...	150 00
For gas pipes and retorts, extension to cadets' mess-hall, academic hall, and other public buildings.....	2,500 00
For stables for dragoon and artillery horses.....	2,468 00

$182,804 00

By the act to amend the "Act to incorporate the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind," approved February sixteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.

For the payment of salaries and incidental expenses of said institution.....$3,000 00

By the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of Government for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Legislative.

For compensation and mileage of Senators....	$162,750 00
For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate, viz:
Secretary of the Senate.....	3,600 00
Officer charged with disbursements of the Senate, Chief Clerk.....	480 00
Principal clerk and principal executive clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars each.....	4,320 00
Eight clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at one thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars each.....	14,800 00
Keeper of the stationery.....	1,752 00
Two messengers, at one thousand and eighty dollars each.....	2,160 00
One page.....	500 00
Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper.....	2,000 00
Assistant Doorkeeper.....	1,700 00
Postmaster to the Senate.....	1,750 00
Assistant Postmaster and mail carrier.....	1,440 00
Two mail boys, at nine hundred dollars each.....	1,800 00
Superintendent of the document room.....	1,500 00
Two assistants in document room, at one thousand two hundred dollars each.....	2,400 00
Superintendent of the folding room.....	1,500 00
Two messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, at one thousand five hundred dollars each.....	3,000 00
Sixteen messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each.....	19,200 00
Superintendent in charge of Senate furnaces.....	1,200 00
Assistant in charge of furnaces.....	600 00
Laborer in private passage.....	600 00
Two laborers, at four hundred and eighty dollars each.....	960 00
Clerk or secretary to the President of the Senate, Draughtsman.....	1,752 00
Clerk to the Committee on Finance.....	1,850 00
Clerk to the Committee on Claims.....	1,850 00
Clerk of printing records.....	1,850 00
For the additional compensation allowed by the resolution of the Senate of the eleventh of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, to a messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, for the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....	330 00
For the contingent expenses of the Senate, viz:
For binding.....	50,000 00
For lithographing and engraving.....	45,000 00
For stationery.....	12,000 00
For newspapers.....	3,000 00
For Congressional Globe, and binding the same.....	24,217 20
For reporting proceedings.....	10,400 00
For clerks to committees, pages, police, horses, and carriages.....	26,508 50
For miscellaneous items.....	20,000 00
For stationery for fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, for the Senate.....	5,000 00
For stationery for fiscal year ending thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, for the House of Representatives.....	5,000 00
For compensation and mileage of members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories.....	580,250 00
For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others, receiving an annual salary in the service of the House of Representatives, viz:
Clerk of the House of Representatives.....	3,600 00
Two clerks, at two thousand one hundred and sixty dollars each.....	4,320 00
Seven clerks, at one thousand eight hundred dollars each.....	12,600 00
Clerk in charge of books for member.....	1,500 00

Reading clerk.....	$1,800 00
Librarian.....	1,800 00
Clerk in charge of the stationery.....	1,800 00
Principal messenger in the office.....	1,752 00
Three messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each.....	3,600 00
Sergeant-at-Arms.....	2,160 00
Clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms.....	1,800 00
Messenger to the Sergeant-at-Arms.....	1,200 00
Postmaster.....	2,160 00
One messenger in the office.....	1,740 00
Four messengers, at one thousand four hundred and forty dollars each.....	5,760 00
Doorkeeper.....	2,160 00
Superintendent of the folding room.....	1,800 00
Superintendent and assistant in the document room, at one thousand seven hundred and fifty-two dollars each.....	3,504 00
Messenger in charge of the Hall.....	1,740 00
Five messengers, at one thousand five hundred dollars each.....	7,500 00
Eight messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each.....	9,600 00
Six messengers, at one thousand two hundred dollars each.....	7,200 00
Messenger to the Speaker.....	1,752 00
Clerk to the Committee of Claims.....	1,800 00
Clerk to the Committee of Ways and Means.....	1,800 00

For contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, viz:

For binding documents.....	100,000 00
For furniture, repairs, and boxes for members.....	10,000 00
For stationery.....	15,000 00
For horses, carriages, and saddle-horses.....	6,000 00
For fuel, oil, and candles.....	3,600 00
For newspapers.....	12,500 00
For engraving, electrotyping, and lithographing.....	100,000 00
For Capitol police.....	5,890 00
For laborers.....	6,285 00
For pages and temporary mail boys.....	4,200 00
For folding documents, including pay of folders, wrapping-paper, twine, and paste.....	30,000 00
For cartage.....	2,000 00
For miscellaneous items.....	30,000 00
For twenty-four copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each member and Delegate of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress.....	17,352 00
For binding twenty-four copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each member and Delegate of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress.....	8,097 60
For reporting the debates of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress.....	8,000 00
For the usual additional compensation to the reporters for the Congressional Globe for reporting the proceedings of the House of Representatives for the next regular session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight hundred dollars to each reporter.....	4,000 00
To pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the third session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, eight hundred dollars each.....	3,200 00
To pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight hundred dollars each.....	3,200 00
To pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, eight hundred dollars each.....	3,200 00
For one hundred copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix, and for binding the same, for the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, for the use of the library of the House of Representatives.....	440 00
For the compensation of the draughtsman and clerks employed upon the land maps, clerks to committees, and temporary clerks in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives.....	17,800 00
For two mail boys, at nine hundred dollars each, and the messenger in charge of the south extension.....	3,300 00
For furnishing the committee-rooms, retiring-rooms, and offices, in the south wing of the Capitol extension, with gas-fixtures, chandeliers, iron safes, and other furniture.....	40,000 00

Library of Congress.

For compensation of Librarian, three assistant librarians, and messenger.....	9,000 00
For contingent expenses of said library.....	1,000 00
For coal, and fireman for furnaces to warm the library.....	600 00
For purchase of books for said library.....	5,000 00
For purchase of law books for said library.....	2,000 00

Botanic garden.

For procuring manure, tools, fuel, repairs, purchasing trees and shrubs for botanic garden, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress.....	2,300 00
For pay of horticulturists and assistants in the botanic garden and green-houses, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress.....	5,121 50
For reglazing and repairing damages to the green-houses by the hail storm of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.....	1,044 16

Public Printing.

For compensation to the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office.....	11,514 00
--	-----------

For contingent expenses of his office, viz: For blank books, stationery, postage, advertising for proposals for paper, furniture, traveling expenses, cartage, and labor in storing and transportation of paper, and miscellaneous items.....	$2,850 00
For rent of warehouse.....	250 00
For paper required for the printing of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress.....	100,000 00
For printing required for the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress.....	70 00

Court of Claims.

For salaries of three judges of the Court of Claims, the solicitor, assistant solicitor, deputy solicitor, clerk and assistant clerk, and messenger thereof.....	27,300 00
For stationery, fuel, gas or other lights, printing, labor, and miscellaneous items for the Court of Claims.....	4,000 00
For commissioners' fees for taking testimony in behalf of the Government, fees of witnesses and of agents or attorneys to be appointed by the solicitor to attend to the taking of depositions.....	5,000 00

Executive.

For compensation of the President of the United States.....	25,000 00
For compensation of the Vice President of the United States.....	8,000 00
For compensation to secretary to sign patents for lands.....	1,500 00
For compensation to the private secretary, steward, and messenger of the President of the United States.....	4,600 00
For contingent expenses of the executive office, including stationery therefor.....	350 00

Department of State.

For compensation of the Secretary of State and assistant Secretary of State, clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office.....	57,800 00
For the incidental and contingent expenses of said Department.....
For proof-reading, packing, and distributing laws and documents, including cases and transportation, and miscellaneous expenses.....	5,000 00
For stationery, blank-books, binding, furniture, fixtures, repairs, painting, and glazing.....	6,500 00
For newspapers.....	600 00
For miscellaneous items.....	2,000 00
To enable the Secretary of State to purchase fifty copies, each, of volumes twenty-two and twenty-three of Howard's Reports of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.....	500 00
To enable the Secretary of State to carry into effect the act entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union".....	10,000 00

Northeast Executive building.

For compensation of four watchmen and two laborers of the Northeast Executive building.....	3,600 00
For contingent expenses of said building, viz: for fuel, light, repairs, and miscellaneous expenses.....	4,300 00

Treasury Department.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, assistant Secretary of the Treasury, clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office.....	48,600 00
For compensation of the First Comptroller, and the clerks, messenger, and laborers in his office.....	28,340 00
For compensation of the Second Comptroller, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office.....	26,840 00
For compensation of the First Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer in his office.....	35,940 00
For compensation of the Second Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer in his office.....	35,540 00
For compensation of the Third Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office.....	132,640 00
For compensation of the Fourth Auditor and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office.....	27,740 00
For compensation of the Fifth Auditor, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office.....	17,840 00
For compensation of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office.....	172,340 00
For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office.....	25,740 00
For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office.....	50,340 00
For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office.....	17,140 00
For compensation of the Commissioner of the Customs, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office.....	20,440 00
For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer of the Light-House Board.....	9,210 00

Contingent expenses of the Treasury Department.

In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury: For copying, blank-books, stationery, binding, sealing ships' registers, translating foreign languages, advertising, and extra clerk hire for preparing and collecting information to be laid before Congress, and for miscellaneous items.....	15,000 00
---	-----------

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

In the office of the First Comptroller:
For furniture, blank-books, binding, stationery, public documents, State and territorial statutes, and miscellaneous items, and the Union and National Intelligencer newspapers.....	$2,200 00
In the office of the Second Comptroller:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, pay for the National Intelligencer and Union, to be filed and preserved for the use of the office, office furniture, and miscellaneous items.....	1,500 00
In the office of the First Auditor:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, cases for records and official papers, and miscellaneous items, including subscription for the Union and National Intelligencer, to be filed for the use of the office.....	1,800 00
In the office of the Second Auditor:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office.....	1,200 00
In the office of the Third Auditor:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, carpeting, two newspapers, the Union and Intelligencer, preserving files and papers, bounty-land service, miscellaneous items, and arrearages.....	3,450 00
In the office of the Fourth Auditor:
For stationery, books, binding, labor, and miscellaneous items.....	1,100 00
In the office of the Fifth Auditor:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, office furniture, carpeting, and miscellaneous expenses, in which are included two daily newspapers....	1,000 00
In the office of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department:
For stationery, blank-books, binding, ruling, miscellaneous items, for file-boards, repairs, cases and desks for safe-keeping of papers, furniture, lights, washing towels, ice, horse for messenger, telegraphic dispatches, and stoves....	12,550 00
In the office of the Treasurer:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	1,000 00
In the office of the Register:
For ruling and full binding books for recording collectors' quarterly abstracts of commerce and navigation, and blank abstracts for their use, blank-books, binding, and stationery, arranging and binding canceled marine papers and records, and miscellaneous items, including office furniture and carpeting, copper-plate printed certificates of registers of vessels and crew list.....	10,000 00
In the office of the Solicitor:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, labor, and miscellaneous items, and for statutes and reports.....	2,200 00
In the office of Commissioner of Customs:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	2,000 00
Light-House Board.
For blank-books, binding, stationery, miscellaneous expenses, and postage.....	750 00
For the general purposes of the Southeast Executive building.
For compensation of eight watchmen and nine laborers of the Southeast Executive Building, for contingent expenses of said building, viz:	10,200 00
Fuel, lights, repairs, and miscellaneous.....	8,500 00
For compensation of four watchmen and two laborers for the south extension of the Southeast Executive building.....	3,600 00
For contingent expenses of said building, fuel, and miscellaneous items.....	3,000 00
Department of the Interior.
For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, and the clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, and laborers in his office, for compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the recorder, draughtsman, assistant draughtsman, clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, packers, watchmen, and laborers in his office.....	36,900 00
For additional clerks in the General Land Office, under the act of third March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, granting bounty lands, and for laborers employed therein.....	58,400 00
For compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, watchmen, and laborer in his office.....	31,940 00
For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborers in his office.....	109,340 00
For compensation of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and the clerk in his office.....	3,200 00
Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior.
Office of the Secretary of the Interior:
For books, stationery, furniture, fuel, lights, and other contingencies, and for books and maps for the library.....	7,200 00
For expense of packing and distributing the congressional journals and documents, in pursuance of the provisions contained in the joint resolution of Congress approved twenty-eighth January, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven....	6,000 00
For the preservation of the collections of the exploring and surveying expeditions of the Government.....	$4,000 00
For the transfer to, and new arrangement of those collections in, the Smithsonian Institution.....	1,000 00
To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the superintendent of the building occupied by said Secretary and his Department, from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, to the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, the allowance to be made to such superintendent, with his salary as clerk, not to exceed two thousand dollars per annum.....	700 00
General Land Office:
For cash system and military patents, under laws prior to twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty; patent and other records; tract-books and blank-books for this and the district land offices; binding plats and field notes; stationery, furniture, and repairs of same, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office.....	33,500 00
For contingent expenses, in addition, under swamp land act of twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty, military bounty acts of twenty-eighth September, eighteen hundred and fifty, and twenty-second March, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and act thirty-first August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, for the satisfaction of Virginia land warrants, for fuel, lights, and incidental expenses attending the same, including pay of furnace keepers, for contingent expenses under the act of third March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, granting bounty lands, and amendatory act of fourteenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to wit: For patents, patent and other records, stationery, and miscellaneous items on account of bounty lands under said acts....	26,100 00
For fuel, lights, and incidental expenses attending the same, including pay of furnace keepers, for contingent expenses under the act of third March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, granting bounty lands, and amendatory act of fourteenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to wit: For patents, patent and other records, stationery, and miscellaneous items on account of bounty lands under said acts....	4,000 00
Office of Indian Affairs:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, fuel and lights, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily city newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office.....	5,000 00
Pension Office:
For stationery, binding books, furniture, and repairing the same, and miscellaneous items, including two of the daily newspapers, to be filed, bound, and preserved for the use of the office, and for books for the library.....	10,000 00
For contingent expenses in the said office under the bounty land act of third March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five:
For engraving and retouching plates for bounty land warrants, printing and binding the same, stationery, blank-books for registers' office, furniture, and miscellaneous items.....	15,000 00
Surveyors General and their clerks.
For compensation of the surveyor general of Illinois and Missouri and the clerks in his office, for compensation of the surveyor general of Louisiana and the clerks in his office.....	5,820 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of Florida and the clerks in his office.....	4,500 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of Wisconsin and Iowa and the clerks in his office.....	5,500 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of Arkansas and the clerks in his office.....	8,300 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of Oregon and the clerks in his office.....	8,300 00
For rent of surveyor general's office in Oregon, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses.....	7,500 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of California and the clerks in his office.....	1,500 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of Washington Territory and the clerks in his office.....	15,500 00
For office rent for the surveyor general of Washington Territory, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses.....	7,000 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of New Mexico and the clerks in his office.....	3,000 00
For compensation of translators in the office of the surveyor general of New Mexico.....	7,000 00
For rent of the surveyor general's office in New Mexico, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses.....	2,000 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of Kansas and Nebraska and the clerks in his office.....	3,000 00
For compensation of the surveyor general of Minnesota and the clerks in his office.....	8,300 00
For compensation of clerks in the offices of the surveyors general, to be apportioned to them according to the exigencies of the public service, and to be employed in transcribing field notes of surveys, for the purpose of preserving them at the seat of Government.....	41,900 00
For salary of the recorder of land titles in Missouri.....	500 00
War Department.
For compensation of the Secretary of War, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer in his office.....	22,000 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Adjutant General.....	12,640 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Quartermaster General.....	16,410 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Paymaster General.....	$12,440 00
For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer in the office of the Commissary General.....	10,040 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Surgeon General.....	5,240 00
For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer in the office of Topographical Engineers.....	10,640 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Chief Engineer.....	8,240 00
For compensation of the clerks and messenger in the office of the Colonel of Ordnance.....	12,240 00
Contingent expenses of the War Department.
Office of the Secretary of War:
For blank-books, stationery, books, maps, extra clerk hire, and miscellaneous items.....	5,500 00
Office of the Adjutant General:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	2,000 00
Office of the Quartermaster General:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	1,200 00
Office of the Paymaster General:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	500 00
Office of the Chief Engineer:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items, including two daily Washington papers.....	900 00
Office of the Surgeon General:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	400 00
Office of Colonel of Ordnance:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	359 00
Office of the Colonel of Topographical Engineers:
For blank books, binding, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	1,200 00
For the general purposes of the Northwest Executive building.
For compensation of four watchmen and two laborers of the Northwest Executive building....	3,600 00
For fuel, light, and miscellaneous items.....	4,000 00
For the general purposes of the building corner F and Seventeenth streets.
For compensation of superintendent, four watchmen, and two laborers, for said building.....	3,850 00
For fuel, compensation of firemen, and miscellaneous items.....	4,800 00
Navy Department.
For compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, and the clerks, messenger, assistant messenger, and laborer in his office.....	20,600 00
For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Navy-yards and Docks, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office.....	14,140 00
For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office.....	12,340 00
For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repairs, and of the engineer-in-chief, and the clerks, messenger, and laborers in his office.....	21,340 00
For compensation of the clerks, messenger, and laborer, in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing.....	8,840 00
For compensation of the chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and the clerks, messenger, and laborer in his office.....	9,540 00
Contingent Expenses of the Navy Department.
Office Secretary of the Navy:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, newspapers, periodicals, and miscellaneous items....	2,840 00
Bureau of Yards and Docks:
For stationery, books, plans, and drawings.....	800 00
Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography:
For blank-books, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	750 00
Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repairs:
For blank-books, binding, stationery, printing, and miscellaneous items.....	800 00
Bureau of Provisions and Clothing:
For blank-books, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	700 00
Bureau of Medicine and Surgery:
For blank-books, stationery, and miscellaneous items.....	450 00
For the general purposes of the Southwest Executive building.
For compensation of four watchmen of the Southwest Executive building.....	2,100 00
For contingent expenses of said building, viz:
For labor, fuel, lights, and miscellaneous items,.....	3,912 00
Post Office Department.
For compensation of the Postmaster General, three Assistant Postmasters General, and the clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, and laborers of said Department.....	137,899 00

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Contingent Expenses of said Department.

For blank-books, binding, and stationery, fuel for the General Post Office building, including the Auditor's Office, oil, gas, and candles, printing, day watchman, and for miscellaneous items.....$11,000 00

For repairs of the General Post Office building, for office furniture, glazing, painting, white-washing, and for keeping the fire-places and furnaces in order..... 4,000 00

To meet the expenses incident to the completion of a large portion of the General Post Office extension, viz: for furnishing partially eighty-one rooms, incidental expenses in all other portions of the new building, fuel, gas, candles, day watchman, miscellaneous items, and ten laborers at six hundred dollars each..... 28,000 00

Printing for Executive Departments.

For paper and printing for the Executive Departments, including the paper, printing, and binding of the Annual Statement of Commerce and Navigation of the United States, and the paper and printing of the annual estimates of appropriations..... 55,000 00

Mint of the United States.At Philadelphia:

For salaries of the director, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, chief coiner and engraver, assistant assayer, assistant melter and refiner, and seven clerks..... 27,900 00

For wages of workmen and adjusters..... 74,800 00

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage, in addition to other available funds..... 75,000 00

For specimens of ores and coins to be reserved at the Mint..... 300 00

For transportation of bullion from New York assay office to the United States Mint for coinage..... 10,000 00

At San Francisco, California:

For salaries of superintendent, treasurer, assayer, melter and refiner, coiner, and five clerks..... 26,455 00

For wages of workmen and adjusters..... 166,894 00

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage, in addition to other available funds..... 22,606 00

At New Orleans:

For salaries of superintendent, treasurer, assayer, coiner, melter and refiner, and three clerks..... 18,300 00

For wages of workmen..... 22,000 00

For incidental and contingent expenses, including wastage, in addition to other available funds..... 20,900 00

At Charlotte, North Carolina:

For salaries of superintendent, coiner, assayer, and clerk..... 4,500 00

At Dahlonega, Georgia:

For salaries of superintendent, coiner, assayer, and clerk..... 5,300 00

For wages of workmen..... 1,200 00

Assay Office, New York:

For salaries of officers and clerks..... 21,100 00

Government in the Territories.Territory of Oregon:

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary..... 12,500 00

For contingent expenses of said Territory..... 1,500 00

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly..... 20,000 00

Territory of New Mexico:

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary..... 12,000 00

For contingent expenses of said Territory..... 1,000 00

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly..... 20,000 00

Territory of Utah:

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary..... 12,000 00

For contingent expenses of said Territory..... 1,500 00

Territory of Washington:

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary..... 12,500 00

For contingent expenses of said Territory..... 1,500 00

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly..... 20,000 00

Territory of Nebraska:

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary..... 10,500 00

For contingent expenses of said Territory..... 1,000 00

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly..... 20,000 00

Territory of Kansas:

For salaries of Governor, three judges, and secretary..... 10,500 00

For contingent expenses of said Territory..... 1,500 00

For compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly..... 20,000 00

Territory of Minnesota:

For defraying the expenses incurred in taking the census of the Territory of Minnesota, under the act approved twenty-sixth February, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.....$20,000 00

Judiciary.

For salaries of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and eight associate justices..... 54,500 00

For salaries of the district judges..... 108,750 00

For salary of the circuit judge of California..... 6,000 00

For salaries of the chief justice of the District of Columbia, the associate judges, and the judges of the criminal court and the orphans' court... 15,750 00

Office of the Attorney General.

For salaries of the Attorney General, and the clerks and messenger in his office..... 18,100 00

For contingent expenses of the office of the Attorney General..... 2,500 00

For purchase of law and necessary books, and binding for the office of the Attorney General, for the purchase of deficient State reports and statutes for the office of the Attorney General, for fuel and labor for the office of the Attorney General..... 1,000 00

For furniture and book-cases for the office of the Attorney General..... 1,000 00

For legal assistance and other necessary expenditures in the disposal of private land claims in California..... 12,000 00

For services of special counsel and other extraordinary expenses in defending the title of the United States to public property in California, for the employment of such number of clerks not exceeding three, by the district attorney of the northern district of California, as may be necessary to transcribe the records of the district court in land cases upon which appeals have been or may be taken to the Supreme Court, [Indefinite.]

For salary of the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court..... 1,300 00

For compensation of the district attorneys..... 11,750 00

For compensation of the marshals..... 10,400 00

Independent Treasury.

For salaries of the assistant Treasurers of the United States at New York, Boston, Charleston, and St. Louis..... 16,500 00

For additional salary of the Treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia..... 1,000 00

For additional salary of the treasurer of the branch mint at New Orleans..... 500 00

For salaries of five of the additional clerks authorized by the acts of sixth August, eighteen hundred and forty-six, and paid under acts of twelfth August, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five..... 5,700 00

For salary of additional clerk in office of assistant Treasurer at Boston..... 1,200 00

For salaries of clerks, messengers, and watchmen in the office of the assistant Treasurer at New York..... 13,900 00

For contingent expenses under the act for the safe-keeping, collecting, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue, of sixth August, eighteen hundred and forty-six, in addition to premium received on transfer drafts..... 10,000 00

For salaries of nine supervising and fifty local inspectors, appointed under act of thirtieth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, for the better protection of the lives of passengers by steamboats, with traveling and other expenses incurred by them..... 80,000 00

Expenses of the Collection of Revenue from Lands.

To meet the expenses of collecting the revenue from the sale of the public lands in the several States and Territories:

For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices, and receivers of public moneys..... 120,000 00

For defraying the expenses of the Supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; also for jurors and witnesses, in aid of the funds arising from fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred in the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, and previous years; and likewise for defraying the expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, and of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States, and for the safe-keeping of prisoners..... 1,000,000 00

Penitentiary.

For compensation of the warden, clerk, physician, chaplain, assistant keepers, guards, and matron of the penitentiary of the District of Columbia..... 12,540 00

For compensation of three inspectors of said penitentiary..... 750 00

For the support and maintenance of said penitentiary..... 7,920 25

For compensation of two additional guards, hereby authorized..... 1,320 00

For compensation, in part, for the messenger in charge of the main furnace in the Capitol.... 420 00

For stationery, blank books, plans, drawings, and other contingent expenses of the office of Commissioner of Public Buildings..... 250 00

For compensation to the laborer in charge of the water closets in the Capitol..... 428 00

For compensation to the public gardener..... 1,140 00

For compensation of twenty-two laborers employed in the public grounds and President's garden.....$13,200 00

For compensation of the keeper of the western gate, Capitol square..... 876 00

For compensation of two day watchmen employed in the Capitol square..... 1,200 00

For compensation of two night watchmen employed at the President's house..... 1,200 00

For compensation of the doorkeeper at the President's house..... 600 00

For compensation of the assistant doorkeeper at the President's house..... 600 00

For compensation of one night watchman employed for the better protection of the buildings lying south of the Capitol, and used as public stables and carpenters' shops..... 600 00

For compensation of four draw-keepers at the Potomac bridge, and for fuel, oil, and lamps.. 5,584 40

For compensation of two draw-keepers at the two bridges across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, and for fuel, oil, and lamps..... 1,180 00

For compensation of the auxiliary guard, and for fuel and oil for lamps..... 19,400 00

For furnace-keeper at the President's House... 600 00

$6,057,878 61

By the act to extend an act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February three, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.

For the continuance of such half pay, under the following terms and limitations, viz: to such widows during life, and to such child or children, where there is no widow, whilst under the age of sixteen years, to commence from the expiration of the half pay provided for by the first section of the act entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February three, eighteen hundred and fifty-three.....[Indefinite.]

By the act making an appropriation for the payment of clerks employed in the offices of the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse the registers of the land offices at Oregon City and Winchester, in the Territory of Oregon, for expenses incurred by them in the employment of clerks actually required for the transaction of the business of their respective offices, growing out of an act entitled "An act to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers of said public lands," approved September the twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and fifty.....$7,000 00

By the act to authorize the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to run and mark the boundary lines between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas.

To run and mark the boundary lines between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas: Beginning at the point where the one hundredth degree of longitude west from Greenwich crosses Red river, and running thence north to the point where said one hundredth degree of longitude intersects the parallel of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes north latitude; and thence west with the said parallel of thirty-six degrees and thirty minutes north latitude to the point where it intersects the one hundred and third degree of longitude west from Greenwich; and thence south with the said one hundred and third degree of longitude to the thirty-second parallel of north latitude; and thence west with the said thirty-second degree of north latitude to the Rio Grande.....$80,000 00

By the act making appropriations for the Consular and Diplomatic Expenses of the Government for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine:

For salaries of Envoys Extraordinary, Ministers, and Commissioners of the United States at Great Britain, France, Russia, Prussia, Spain, Austria, Brazil, Mexico, China, Chili, Peru, Portugal, Switzerland, Rome, Naples, Sardinia, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Turkey, Buenos Ayres, New Granada, Bolivia, Ecuador, Venezuela, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Sandwich Islands..... 274,000 00

For salaries of the secretaries of legation of the United States..... 12,000 00

For salaries of assistant secretaries of legation at London and Paris..... 3,000 00

For salary of the secretary of legation to China, acting as interpreter..... 5,000 00

For salary of the secretary of legation to Turkey, acting as dragoman..... 3,000 00

For contingent expenses of all the missions abroad..... 50,000 00

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse.. 60,000 00

For expenses of intercourse with the Barbary powers..... 3,000 00

For expenses of the consulates in the Turkish dominions, viz: interpreters, guards, and other expenses of the consulates at Constantinople, Smyrna, Candia, Alexandria, and Beirut.... 2,500 00

For the relief and protection of American sea men in foreign countries..... 150,000 00

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

For expenses which may be incurred in acknowledging the services of the masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing citizens and vessels of the United States from shipwreck, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.....$19,000 00

For the purchase of blank-books, stationery, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, and for the payment of postages and miscellaneous expenses of the consuls of the United States..... 40,000 00

For office rent for those consuls general, consuls, and commercial agents who are not allowed to trade, including loss by exchange thereon 27,370 00

For salaries of consuls general at Quebec, Calcutta, Alexandria, Simoda, Havana, Constantinople, Frankfort-on-the-Main; consuls at Liverpool, London, Melbourne, Hong Kong, Glasgow, Mauritius, Singapore, Belfast, Cork, Dundee, Demarara, Halifax, Kingston, (Jamaica,) Leeds, Manchester, Nassau, (New Providence,) Southampton, Turk's Island, Prince Edward's Island, Havre, Paris, Marseilles, Bordeaux, La Rochelle, Lyons, Moscow, Odessa, Revel, Saint Petersburg, Matanzas, Trinidad de Cuba, Santiago de Cuba, San Juan, (Porto Rico,) Cadiz, Malaga, Ponce, (Porto Rico,) Trieste, Vienna, Aix-la-Chapelle, Canton, Shanghai, Fouchou, Amoy, Ningpo, Beirut, Smyrna, Jerusalem, Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Antwerp, Funchal, Oporto, St. Thomas, Elsinore, Genoa, Basle, Geneva, Messina, Naples, Palermo, Leipzig, Munich, Leghorn, Stuttgart, Bremen, Hamburg, Tangiers, Tripoli, Tunis, Rio de Janeiro, Pernambuco, Vera Cruz, Acapulco, Callao, Valparaiso, Buenos Ayres, San Juan del Sur, Aspinwall, Panama, Lagunayra, Honolulu, Lahaina, Capetown, Falkland Islands, Venice, Steutin, Candia, Cyprus, Batavia, Fayal, Santiago, (Cape de Verdes,) Saint Croix, Spezzia, Athens, Zanzibar, Bahai, Maranham Island, Para, Rio Grande, Matamoros, Mexico, (city,) Tampico, Paso del Norte, Tabasco, Paita, Tumbes, Talcahuano, Cartagena, Sabanillo, Omoa, Guayaquil, Cobija, Montevideo, Tahiti, Bay of Islands, Apia, Lantaha; commercial agents at San Juan del Norte, Port-au-Prince, San Domingo, (city,) St. Paul de Loanda, (Angola,) Monrovia, Gaboon, Cape Nyatien, Aux Cayes, and Amour river.....173,750 00

For interpreters to the consulates in China..... 4,500 00

For compensation of the commissioner, secretary, chief astronomer and surveyor, assistant astronomer and surveyor, clerk, and for provisions, transportation, and contingencies of the commission to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions bounding on Washington Territory..... 71,000 00

For compensation and per diem of the commissioner, compensation of the surveyor, and for the payment of all expenses of the commission under the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain..... 23,000 00

$912,120 00

By the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For pay of commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including engineer corps of the Navy, $3,800,405 00

For provisions for commission, warrant, and petty officers, and seamen, including engineers and marines attached to vessels for sea service, 941,700 00

For surgeons' necessities and appliances for the sick and hurt of the Navy, including the engineer and marine corps 32,150 00

For increase, repair, armament, and equipment of the Navy, including the wear and tear of vessels in commission, fuel for steamers, and purchase of hemp for the Navy.....2,850,000 00

For ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms, including incidental expenses.....598,000 00

For contingent expenses that may accrue for the following purposes, viz: freight and transportation, printing and stationery, advertising in newspapers, books, maps, models, and drawings, purchase and repair of fire-engines and machinery, repairs of and attending to steam-engines in navy-yards, purchase and maintenance of horses and oxen and drawing teams, carts, timber-wheels, and the purchase and repairs of workmen's tools, postage of public letters, fuel, oil and candles for navy-yards and shore stations, pay of watchmen and incidental labor not chargeable to any other appropriation, transportation to and labor attending the delivery of provisions and stores on foreign stations, wharfage, dockage, and rent, traveling expenses of officers and others under orders, funeral expenses, store and office rent, stationery, fuel, commissions and pay of clerks to Navy agents and storekeepers, flags, awnings, and packing boxes, premiums and other expenses of recruiting, apprehending deserters, per diem pay to persons attending courts martial and courts of inquiry, and other services authorized by law, pay to judges advocate, pilotage and towage of vessels and assistance to vessels in distress, bills of health and quarantine expenses of vessels of the United States Navy in foreign ports.....897,600 00

MARINE CORPS.

For pay of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, clerks, messengers, stewards, and servants, for rations and clothing for servants, subsistence and additional rations for five years' service of officers, for undrawn clothing and rations, bounties for reenlistments, and pay for unexpired terms of previous service.....$395,578 26

For provisions for marines serving on shore.... 64,313 00

For clothing..... 66,512 00

For fuel..... 20,756 75

For military stores, viz: repair of arms, pay of armorers, purchase of accoutrements, ordnance stores, flags, drums, fifes, and other instruments, and one thousand rifled muskets.. 25,000 00

For transportation of officers and troops, and expenses of recruiting 12,000 00

For repairs of barracks and rent of offices where there are no public buildings for that purpose, To pay the contractors for building cisterns, erecting porticoes to commandant's house and officers' quarters, to complete porticoes on the men's quarters, pavements and curb to commandant's house and officers' quarters of the marine barracks at Pensacola, Florida, (so as fully to complete said marine garrison) 16,800 00

For contingencies, viz: freight, ferrage, toll, cartage, and wharfage, compensation to judges advocate, per diem for attending courts martial, courts of inquiry, and for constant labor, house rent in lieu of quarters, burial of deceased marines, printing, stationery, postage, and telegraphing, apprehension of deserters, oil, candles, gas, forage, straw, furniture, bed-sacks, spades, shovels, axes, picks, and carpenters' tools, keep of a horse for the messenger, and pay of matron, washerwomen, and porter at hospital headquarters, and for the purchase of a fire engine for the use of the marine barracks at headquarters..... 32,500 00

NAVY-YARDS.

For the construction and completion of works, and for the current repairs at the several navy-yards, viz:

Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

For mooring piers for dock, extending stables, completion of dock basin, repairs of floating dock, and repairs of all kinds..... 52,215 00

Boston.

For reservoirs, boiler-house, chimney and boilers at rope-walk, altering tar-kettles, machinery, and bobbins for rope-walk, to complete machine-shop, and for machinery for machine-shop and foundry, extension of dry-dock, and repairs of all kinds.....203,500 00

New York.

For boiler-house and setting boilers, water pipes, drains, quay walls, sewer extended to quay wall, boiler to dredger, timber basin, repairs of oakum-shop, filling ponds in yard, dredging channel and scows, piling site for marine barracks, machinery for machine-shop, boiler-shop, saw-mill, foundry, smithery, and brass foundry, and repairs of all kinds.....269,516 00

Philadelphia.

For extending gun-carriage shop, additional story to plumber's shop, dredging channels, and repairs of dredger, repairs of dry-dock, and repairs of all kinds..... 97,214 00

Washington.

For extension of navy store, for anchor shop and coal-houses, pavements, drains, and gutters, machinery and tools, and repairs of all kinds.. 99,100 00

Norfolk.

For continuation of quay wall, completing victualling establishment, completing grading and drainage, dredging channels, continuing ship-house number forty-eight, to be built of iron or wood, as may be deemed expedient, machinery and tools, completing reservoir, completing carpenters' shop, and repairs of all kinds.....285,808 00

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase tools and furnish the machine-shop and foundry at the Norfolk navy-yard..... 20,000 00

Pensacola.

For continuing granite wharf, repairing and operating dock, filling and paving around dock basin, dredging in front of basin, repairs of railways, completing water-pipes to permanent wharf, completing foundry, constructors' workshop, cistern at machine-shop, trip-hammer for smithery, blast-pipes, and repairs of all kinds247,365 00

Marc Island, California.

For guard-house, number seventy-three, tar and pitch-house number seventy-four, two cisterns number forty-nine, grading, paving, continuing wharf, foundry and boiler establishment, gas-works and Bishop's derreck317,971 00

HOSPITALS.

For the construction and completion of works, and for the current repairs of the several naval hospitals:

Boston.

For repairs of buildings and grounds 3,000 00

To enable the Secretaries of the Treasury and Navy to ascertain and pay the actual value of the ten acres of land heretofore belonging to the naval hospital estate at Chelsea, Massachusetts, and ceded by the sixth section of "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic service of the Government," approved the third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, for the purposes of a marine hospital for the district of Boston and Charlestown, to the credit of the naval hospital fund, out of which the original purchase of the property so ceded was made[Indefinite.]

New York.

For completing heating apparatus, and repairs of buildings and fences.....$13,200 00

Naval Asylum, Philadelphia.

For gateway and iron gate on Shippen street, and road from same; repairs to furnaces, grates, and ranges; painting main building and lodges; brick floors in governor's and surgeon's houses; cleaning and whitewashing; gas-tax, water-tax, furniture for the asylum and repairs, and for general repairs 8,500 00

For support of beneficiaries at the asylum..... 26,392 00

Norfolk.

For repairs of buildings and appurtenances.... 11,000 00

Pensacola.

For draining and filling ponds, and repairs of buildings and grounds..... 18,700 00

MAGAZINES.

For the construction and completion of works, and for the current repairs at the several naval magazines:

Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

For gun-carriage shop and storehouse, boiler-room, engine and machinery, and repairs of all kinds..... 46,600 00

Boston.

For repairs of all kinds..... 1,500 00

New York.

For dredging channel to Ellis's Island, and repairs of all kinds..... 6,800 00

Philadelphia.

For repairs of all kinds..... 1,000 00

Norfolk.

To complete ordnance building, continuation of sea wall at magazine, and for iron crane at Fort Norfolk..... 61,265 00

Pensacola.

For repairs of all kinds..... 1,000 00

Marc Island, California.

For shell-house, magazine, keeper's house and grounds, tank-house and filling room, railway and cars to transport powder to and from magazine, shot-beds, cleaning and piling shot and shells 11,450 00

For pay of superintendents, naval constructors, and all the civil establishments at the several navy-yards and stations.....139,232 00

For the purchase of nautical instruments required for the use of the Navy; for repairs of the same, and also of astronomical instruments; and for the purchase of nautical books, maps, and charts, and for backing and binding the same..... 18,000 00

For printing and publishing sailing directions, hydrographical surveys, and astronomical observations, in addition to the balance on hand... 5,000 00

For continuing the publication of the series of Wind and Current Charts, and for defraying all the expenses connected therewith..... 18,000 00

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the salary of Professor James P. Espy..... 2,000 00

For models, drawings, and copying; for postage, freight, and transportation; for keeping grounds in order; for fuel and lights; and for all other contingent expenses; and for the wages of persons employed at the United States Naval Observatory and Hydrographical Office, viz: one instrument-maker, two watchmen, and one porter 6,160 00

For improvement and repairs of buildings and grounds, and support of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland..... 45,671 32

For preparing for publication the American Nautical Almanac..... 26,880 00

For five steam-sloops, authorized by act third March, eighteen hundred and fifty seven...1,350,000 00

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay for the preparation of a code of regulations for the government of the Navy, as directed in the seventh section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty eight," approved third March, eighteen hundred and fifty seven..... 3,000 00

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the expenses of courts of inquiry to investigate the cases of certain officers affected by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy,'" approved sixteenth January, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.....110,600 00

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

For completing the publication of the charts of the late expedition for the exploration of the river La Plata and its tributaries.....$5,000 00

For compensation from and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, to the clerks and messengers at the navy-yard and marine barracks at Washington, as authorized by the acts of April twenty-second, eighteen hundred and fifty four, and August fifth, eighteen hundred and fifty four.....[Indefinite.]

To defray the expenses and compensation of a commissioner to the Republic of Paraguay, (should it be deemed proper by the President to appoint one,) in execution of the joint resolution of the present session "for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republic of Paraguay".....10,000 00

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to cause to be constructed, as speedily as may be consistent with the public interests, seven steam screw sloops-of-war, with full steam power, whose greatest draught of water shall not exceed fourteen feet, which ships shall combine the heaviest armament and greatest speed compatible with their character and tonnage; and one side-wheel war steamer, whose greatest draught shall not exceed eight feet, armed and provided for service in the China seas.....1,200,000 00

$14,508,354 23

By the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

Survey of the Coast.

For continuing the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coast of the United States, (including compensation to superintendent and assistants, and excluding pay and emoluments of officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed on the work,) $250,000 00

For continuing the survey of the western coast of the United States.....130,000 00

For continuing the survey of the Florida reefs and keys, (excluding pay and emoluments of officers of the Army and Navy, and petty officers and men of the Navy employed on the work,) 40,000 00

For running a line to connect the triangulation on the Atlantic coast with that on the Gulf of Mexico, across the Florida peninsula.....10,000 00

For repairs of the Crawford, Madison, Mason, and George M. Bache, and other sailing vessels used in the coast survey.....10,000 00

For pay and rations of engineers for seven steamers, used in the hydrography of the coast survey, no longer supplied by the Navy Department.....12,900 00

To supply deficiency in the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen.....150,000 00

Light-House Establishment.

For the Atlantic, Gulf, and lake coasts, viz:

For supplying five hundred and fifty-six light-houses and beacon lights with oil, glass chimneys, wicks, chamois skins, polishing powder, whitening, and cleaning materials, transportation and other necessary expenses of the same, repairing and keeping in repair the lighting apparatus.....138,724 45

For repairs and incidental expenses, refitting and improvements of all the light-houses and buildings connected therewith.....173,289 91

For salaries of six hundred and eleven keepers of light-houses and light-beacons and their assistants.....60,000 00

For salaries of fifty-two keepers of light-vessels, 20,205 57

For seamen's wages, repairs, supplies, and incidental expenses of fifty-two light-vessels.....185,199 50

For expenses of raising, cleaning, painting, re-mooring, and supplying losses of buoys and day beacons, and for chains and sinkers for the same, and for coloring and numbering all the buoys.....82,228 78

For the coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington:

For oil and other supplies for twenty-four lights, cleaning materials of all kinds, and transportation of the same, expenses of keeping lamps and machinery in repairs, publishing notices to mariners of changes of aids to navigation....1,472 91

For repairs and incidental expenses of twenty-four lights, and buildings connected therewith, 24,563 00

For maintenance of the vessel provided for by the act of eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, for inspection and transportation purposes.....30,000 00

For fuel and quarters for officers of the army serving on light-house duty, the payment of which is no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department.....7,034 05

For compensation of two superintendents for the life-saving stations on the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey.....3,000 00

For compensation of fifty-four keepers of stations, at two hundred dollars each.....10,800 00

For contingencies for life saving apparatus on the coast of the United States.....12,000 00

For the purchase of the best self righting life-boat, to be placed at each of the twenty-eight life-saving stations on the coast of New Jersey, 6,449 00

For the purchase of the best life-boats, to be approved by the Treasury Department, for use on the coast of Long Island.....10,000 00

For procuring two additional improved metallic life-boats, a metallic life-car, and necessary harness, lines, and other suitable articles, to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in saving life in case of marine disaster off Galveston station, Texas....$10,000 00

Survey of the Public Lands.

For surveying the public lands, (exclusive of California, Oregon, Washington, New Mexico, Kansas, Nebraska, and Utah,) including incidental expenses and island surveys in the interior, and all other special and difficult surveys demanding augmented rates, to be apportioned and applied to the several surveying districts according to the exigencies of the public service, including expenses of selecting swamp lands, and the compensation and expenses to survey or to locate private land claims in Louisiana, in addition to the unexpended balances of all former appropriations.....40,000 00

For correcting erroneous and defective lines of public and private surveys in Illinois and Missouri, at a rate not exceeding six dollars per mile.....1,000 00

For surveying in Louisiana at augmented rates, now authorized by law.....3,000 00

For surveying the public lands and private land claims in California, including office expenses incident to the survey of claims, and to be disbursed at the rates prescribed by law for the different kinds of work.....100,000 00

For continuing the survey of base, meridian, standard parallels, township and section lines, in New Mexico.....25,000 00

For surveying such of the private land claims in New Mexico as shall have been confirmed by Congress, including expenses incurred by the surveyor general in adjudicating the same....15,000 00

For surveying the necessary base, meridian, standard parallels, township and section lines, in Kansas and Nebraska; also, outlines of Indian reservations.....100,000 00

For preparing the unfinished records of public and private surveys, to be transferred to the State authorities, under the provisions of the act of twelfth June, eighteen hundred and forty, in those districts where the surveys are about being completed.....10,000 00

For resurveys and examinations of the surveys of the public lands in those States where the offices of the surveyors general have been or shall be closed, under the acts of the twelfth June, eighteen hundred and forty, and twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, including two thousand dollars for the salary of the clerk detailed to this special service in the General Land Office.....2,000 00

For collection of agricultural statistics, investigations for promoting agriculture and rural economy, and the procurement of cuttings and seeds.....60,000 00

For drawings to illustrate the mechanical report of the Commissioner of Patents for the year eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....6,000 00

Hospital for the Insane.

For the support, clothing, and medical treatment of the insane of the District of Columbia, and of the Army and Navy, at the asylum in said District.....24,500 00

For salaries and incidental expenses of the institution for the instruction of the deaf, dumb, and blind in the District of Columbia, authorized by the act approved May twenty-nine, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....3,000 00

For extension of stables and erection of sheds in connection with the stock-yard.....4,000 00

For heating and ventilating the entire unfinished remainder of the hospital edifice, and for slightly remodeling the heating apparatus of the present finished portions of the building, so that the heating and ventilation of the whole establishment shall be one connected and efficient system.....15,000 00

For support, care, and medical treatment of forty transient paupers, medical and surgical patients in Washington Infirmary.....6,000 00

For purchase of manure for the public grounds..1,000 00

For hire of carts on the public grounds.....1,095 50

For purchase and repair of tools used in the public grounds.....500 00

For purchase of trees and tree-boxes to replace, where necessary, such as have been planted by the United States, and the repair of pavements in front of the public grounds.....5,000 00

For annual repairs of the Capitol, water-closets, public stables, water-pipes, pavements, and other walks within the Capitol square, broken glass and locks.....6,000 00

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to fit up with shelves the two rooms at the south end of the Library of Congress for the use of the library, and for putting up a partition in the passage to them.....270 00

For annual repairs of the President's House and furniture, improvement of grounds, purchasing trees and plants for garden, and making hot-beds therein, and contingent expenses incident thereto.....12,000 00

For fuel, in part, of the President's House.....1,800 00

For lighting the President's House and Capitol, the public grounds around them, and around the executive offices, and Pennsylvania avenue, and Bridge and High streets in Georgetown.....43,000 00

For erecting thirty additional lamp-posts in Bridge and High streets, in Georgetown.....$810 00

For purchase of books for the library at the Executive mansion, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States..250 00

For repairs of the Potomac navy-yard, and upper bridges.....6,000 00

For repairs of Pennsylvania avenue.....3,000 00

To pay the residue of the salary due the engineer for constructing the bridge across the Potomac at Little Falls.....2,589 67

For painting the hand rails and iron work of said bridge.....400 00

For public reservation number two, La Fayette square.....3,000 00

For taking care of the grounds south of the President's House, and keeping them in order....1,000 00

For the payment of laborers employed in shoveling snow from the walks to and around the Capitol, the President's House, and the pavements along the Government reservations on Pennsylvania avenue.....800 00

For repairs of water-pipes.....500 00

For repairs of the furnaces under the Senate Chamber and Supreme Court room.....1,000 00

For casual repairs of the Patent Office building, 3,000 00

For completing the west wing of the Patent office building, filling up the southwest corner of the square, setting the curb, and raising Ninth street, in front of the building, to its proper grade.....50,000 00

For repairing the fence around that portion of the Mall upon which the Smithsonian Institution is situated.....1,000 00

For cleaning out the sewer traps on Pennsylvania avenue.....300 00

For purchasing plants for the conservatory at the President's House.....1,000 00

For the completion of the Washington aqueduct, in addition to so much of the appropriation of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars "for paying existing liabilities for the Washington aqueduct, and preserving the work already done from injury," contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven," approved eighteenth August, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, as may not be required for said purposes.....800,000 00

For United States Capitol extension.....750,000 00

For extension of the General Post Office.....100,000 00

For binding two thousand four hundred copies Code of the District of Columbia, at seventy-five cents per copy, authorized by act approved third March, eighteen hundred fifty-five.....1,875 00

For defraying the expenses of a certain party of Omaha Indians who visited the city of Washington during the months of February and March, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.....335 00

For continuing the extension of the Treasury building.....500,000 00

For continuing the work on the custom-house at New Orleans, Louisiana.....250,000 00

For continuing the work on the custom-house at Charleston, South Carolina.....200,000 00

For the completion of custom-houses at the following places, viz:

At Ellsworth, Maine.....2,000 00

At Portsmouth, New Hampshire.....50,000 00

At Bristol, Rhode Island, including fencing and grading.....5,000 00

At New Haven, Connecticut.....60,000 00

At Oswego, New York.....10,0 00

At Plattsburg, New York.....10,000 00

At Newark, New Jersey.....10,000 00

At Norfolk, Virginia.....20,000 00

At Pensacola, Florida.....5,000 00

At St. Louis, Missouri.....20,000 00

At Mobile, Alabama, including fencing and paving.....30,000 00

At Galena, Illinois.....10,000 00

At Milwaukee, Wisconsin.....10,000 00

For annual repairs at custom-houses.....15,000 00

For the completion of marine hospitals at the following places, viz:

At Portland, Maine.....3,000 00

At St. Mark's, Florida.....2,500 00

At New Orleans, Louisiana, including filling up site, grading, introducing gas and water-pipes and fixtures, and fencing.....85,000 00

At Cincinnati, Ohio.....50,000 00

At Galena, Illinois.....5,000 00

For annual repairs at marine hospitals.....15,000 00

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the custom-houses at the following places, viz:

At Ellsworth, Maine.....3,000 00

At Bath, Maine, (for furniture alone).....1,100 00

At Burlington, Vermont.....4,600 00

At New Haven, Connecticut.....8,500 00

At Oswego, New York.....7,300 00

At Plattsburg, New York.....9,900 00

At Newark, New Jersey.....5,300 00

At Alexandria, Virginia.....3,700 00

At Norfolk, Virginia.....12,000 00

At Mobile, Alabama, (for furniture alone).....2,6 00

At Pensacola, Florida.....2,500 00

At St. Louis, Missouri.....4,600 00

At Louisville, Kentucky.....3,600 00

At Cleveland, Ohio.....7,100 00

At Galena, Illinois.....3,700 00

At Milwaukee, Wisconsin.....7,700 00

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

For fencing, grading, paving, and furnishing the marine hospitals at the following places, viz:
At Burlington, Vermont.....	$3,400 00
At Chelsea, Massachusetts, (out-buildings, grading, and fencing).....	19,700 00
At St. Mark's, Florida.....	1,200 00
At Detroit, Michigan.....	7,500 00
At Galena, Illinois.....	3,800 00
At Burlington, Iowa.....	4,100 00
To enable the Library Committee to complete the payments for a series of portraits of the Presidents of the United States, contracted for under the authority of Congress, and for framing the same.....	5,000 00
For paying the expenses of the commissioners appointed in pursuance of the joint resolution of the twenty-sixth of February, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, to inquire into and test the process of J. T. Barclay for preventing the counterfeiting the coins of the United States, in addition to the sum appropriated by said resolution.....	800 00
For printing ordered by the Senate and House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and paper for the same.....	80,000 00
For binding documents ordered to be printed by the House of Representatives during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and for engravings, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same.....	123,000 00
For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the Thirty-Third and Thirty-Fourth Congresses, and for engravings, lithographs, and electrotypes for the same.....	113,000 00
To enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete the digest of the statistics of manufactures according to the returns of the seventh census.....	3,500 00
For making the necessary repairs to the jail in Washington city, and putting venetian blinds to the windows.....	840 00
To pay the draughtsman employed by the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the two Houses of Congress, for drawings and calculations furnished, and incidental expenses defrayed by him during the last and present session of Congress.....	528 00
For satisfying the claims of the States of Maine and Massachusetts, under the stipulation of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded on the ninth day of August, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-two:
For the satisfaction of such claims of the State of Maine.....	11,496 81
For the satisfaction of like claims of the State of Massachusetts.....	9,215 13
For defraying the expense of carrying into execution the joint resolution, approved May eleven, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight, "authorizing suitable acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British naval authorities at Jamaica, for the relief extended to the officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehanna , disabled by yellow fever?"....	3,000 00
For the payment of three companies of volunteers called into the service of the United States, in the Territory of Kansas, in eighteen hundred and fifty-six, by the order of the Governor of that Territory.....	8,668 14
For the contingent expenses of the Senate, viz:
For miscellaneous items, and paying fees of witnesses before committees of the Senate.....	7,700 00
To John B. Mutt, for compensation as acting Secretary of the Territory of Nebraska, during the vacancy created by the death of T. B. Cummings.....	316 35
For lithographing and engraving ordered by the Senate during the present session.....	45,000 00
For binding documents ordered to be printed by the Senate during the present session.....	40,000 00
To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for legislative and contingent expenses of Washington Territory for the fiscal year ending June thirty, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.....	7,500 00
To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to employ in the office of the Register of the Treasury an additional clerk of the third class, and in the office of the Treasurer of the United States an additional clerk of the third class....	3,200 00
To enable the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to ascertain as among the expenditures of the State of Maine, in defending the territory heretofore in dispute with Great Britain, the amounts paid in borrowing money for those expenditures beyond the rate of six per centum per annum, whether in the form of discount or otherwise, in all cases in which the principal of such expenditures, and interest upon them at the rate of six per centum, have heretofore been refunded to said State by the United States.....	[Indefinite.]
To enable the Secretary of State to adjust, upon principles of equity and justice, the accounts of I. D. Andrews, late agent of the United States, for expenses and disbursements in connection with the reciprocity treaty.....	[Indefinite.]
To enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to continue, down to the fourth of March, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, the compilation of the congressional documents published by Congress, under the name of the "American State Papers," in the same manner as the first series thereof, under the authority of the act of Congress of March two, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, and the joint resolution of Congress of March two, eighteen hundred and thirty-three, and with the same particular index to each class, and a general index to the work; and to contract with Gales & Seaton, the publishers of the first series thereof, for publishing the same, not to exceed two thousand copies in number, at a price per volume not exceeding that paid for the first series, to be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior as the same may be published.....	$340,000 00
	$5,897,148 07
By the act making supplemental appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.
Calapooias, Mollalla, and Clackamas Indians, of Willamette Valley.
For fourth of five installments for pay of physician, teacher, blacksmith, and farmer, per third article treaty twenty-second January, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	$3,440 00
Nisqually, Puyallup, and other tribes and bands of Indians.
For fulfilling the articles negotiated twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, with certain bands of Indians of Puget sound, Washington Territory:
For fourth of twenty installments for pay of instructor, smith, physician, carpenter, farmer, and assistants, if necessary, per tenth article treaty twenty-sixth December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	2,200 00
Chasta, Scocon, and Umpqua Indians.
For fourth of fifteen installments for the pay of a farmer, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	400 00
For fourth of ten installments for pay of physician, medicines, and expense of care of the sick, per fifth article treaty eighteenth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	440 00
Umpquas, and Calapooias, of Umpqua Valley, Oregon.
For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a blacksmith, and furnishing shop, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	440 00
For fourth of fifteen installments for the pay of a physician and purchase of medicines, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	1,000 00
For fourth of ten installments for the pay of a farmer, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four....	400 00
For fourth of twenty installments for the pay of a teacher, and purchase of books and stationery, per sixth article treaty twenty-ninth November, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	750 00
For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Oregon, including insurance and transportation of annuities, goods, and presents, and office and traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and sub-agents.....	39,500 00
For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in the Territory of Oregon.....	10,000 00
For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians in Oregon Territory to the reservations therein, aiding them in procuring their own subsistence, purchase of provisions and presents, compensation of laborers and other employes.....	111,000 00
For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington, including insurance and transportation of annuities, goods, and presents, and office and traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and sub-agents.....	36,000 00
For adjusting difficulties and preventing outbreaks among the Indians in Washington Territory.....	12,500 00
For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of the Indians in Washington Territory to the reservations therein, aiding them in procuring their own subsistence, purchase of provisions and presents, and compensation of laborers and other employes.....	61,500 00
For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in California, including traveling expenses of the superintendent, agent, and sub-agent.....	15,000 00
For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of Indians of California to the reservations in that State, and for pay of physicians, smiths, mechanics, and laborers at the reservations.....	162,000 00
For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in New Mexico, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior,	75,000 00
For the compensation of three special agents and three interpreters for the Indian tribes of Texas, and for purchase of presents.....	$15,000 00
For the expenses of colonizing, supporting, and furnishing agricultural implements and stock for the Indians in Texas.....	50,000 00
For the maintenance of a school at Brazos agency, pay of a teacher, and purchase of books....	1,500 00
For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, including traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and clerk hire....	55,000 00
Creeks.
For payment in goods to the Creek Indians for damages on their annuity goods, wrecked in the steamer Governor Meigs, in December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	1,995 25
Seminoles.
For payment to the Seminoles for damages on their annuity goods, wrecked in the steamer Governor Meigs, in December, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	332 11
For reimbursement to W. J. Cullen, superintendent of Indian affairs for the northern superintendency, for expenditures made by him in the recovery of five thousand dollars of the public funds stolen from Fort Ridgely.....	650 00
Ottos and Missourias.
For keeping in repair the grist and saw-mill provided for by the seventh article of the treaty of fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	300 00
For the erection of a blacksmith's shop, for supplying the same with tools, and keeping it in repair, per seventh article of the treaty fifteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	600 00
For erection of houses for the miller, farmer, blacksmith, and engineer.....	1,850 00
For assistant miller.....	300 00
For an engineer and assistant.....	1,800 00
Omahas.
For keeping in repair the grist and saw-mill provided for by the eighth article of the treaty of sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	500 00
For the erection of a blacksmith's shop, for supplying the same with tools, and keeping it in repair, per eighth article of the treaty of sixteenth March, eighteen hundred and fifty-four.....	600 00
For erection of houses for miller, farmer, blacksmith, and engineer.....	2,250 00
For an assistant miller.....	300 00
For an engineer and assistant.....	1,800 00
For this amount to erect suitable buildings at the Omaha agency, to replace those recently destroyed by fire.....	2,500 00
Shawnees.
For fifth of seven annual installments of money, in payment for lands, per third article treaty tenth May, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, the same having been omitted in the enrolling of the "Act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine," approved May fifth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....	99,000 00

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

35TH CONG....1ST SESS.

For purchase of iron, steel, and other necessaries for same, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article.....	$500 00
For pay of two blacksmiths, one of whom to be a gunsmith and tinsmith, per fourth article....	1,200 00
For compensation of two strikers or apprentices in shops, per fourth article.....	480 00
For first of ten installments for farming utensils and stock, during the pleasure of the President, per fourth article.....	1,200 00
For the first year's purchase of stock, and for erecting shelters for the same, per fourth article.....	3,000 00
For pay of a farmer, per fourth article.....	600 00
For the erection of a steam grist and saw-mill, per fourth article.....	6,000 00
For first of ten installments for pay of miller, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article.....	600 00
For first of ten installments for pay of an engineer, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article.....	1,200 00
For compensation to apprentices to assist in working the mill, per fourth article.....	500 00
For the erection of dwelling-houses for the interpreter, blacksmiths, farmer, miller, and engineer, (five hundred dollars each,) per fourth article.....	3,000 00
For the first of three installments for the pay of six laborers, per seventh article.....	3,000 00
For payment to Samuel Allis, in remuneration for his services, and for losses sustained by him, per tenth article.....	1,000 00
For payment to Ta-ra-da-ka-wa, head chief of the Tappahs band, and four other Pawnees, for their services as guides, and for losses sustained by them, (one hundred dollars each,) per eleventh article.....	500 00
To enable the Pawnees to settle any just claims existing against them, per twelfth article.....	10,000 00
For surveying the exterior lines of the reservation provided for in the first article.....	1,000 00
	$959,957 36

By the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For expenses of recruiting, transportation of recruits, three months' extra pay to non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates on reenlistment.....	$110,000 00
For pay of the Army.....	3,591,784 00
For commutation of officers' subsistence.....	996,434 50
For commutation of forage for officers' horses.....	124,128 00
For payments to discharged soldiers for clothing not drawn.....	50,000 00
For payments in lieu of clothing for officers' servants.....	39,890 00
For subsistence in kind.....	1,380,652 65
For clothing for the Army, camp, and garrison equipage.....	1,062,702 99
For the regular supplies of the quartermaster's department, consisting of fuel for the officers, enlisted men, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen, of the quartermaster's department at the several posts and stations, and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, the companies of light artillery, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses when serving in the field and at the outposts, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including company and other blank-books for the Army; certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the pay and quartermaster's departments; and for the printing of division and department orders, Army regulations, and reports.....	1,745,000 00
For the incidental expenses of the quartermaster's department, consisting of postage on letters and packets received and sent by the officers of the Army on public service; expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, including the additional compensation of judges advocate, recorders, members, and witnesses, while on that service, under the act of March sixteen, eighteen hundred and two; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the quartermaster's department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, storehouses, and hospitals; in the construction of roads and on other constant labor for periods of not less than ten days, under the acts of March second, eighteen hundred and nineteen, and August fourth, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, including those employed as clerks at division and department headquarters; expenses of express to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains, where military escorts cannot be furnished; expenses of the internment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at the posts on the frontiers, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the quartermaster's department; compensation of forage and wagon masters, authorized by the act of July fifth, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight; for the apprehension of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; the following expenditures required for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, viz: purchase of portable forges, blacksmiths' and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes and nails, iron and steel for shoeing, hire of veterinary surgeons, medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, and shoeing the horses of those corps.....	$500,000 00

For constructing barracks and other buildings at posts which it may be necessary to occupy during the year; and for repairing, altering, and enlarging buildings at the established posts, including hire or commutation of quarters for officers on military duty; hire of quarters for troops, of storehouses for the safe-keeping of military stores, and of grounds for summer cantonments, and for temporary frontier stations.....	790,000 00
For the repairs of the barracks at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.....	25,000 00
For mileage, or the allowance made to officers of the Army for the transportation of themselves and their baggage when traveling on duty without troops, escort, or supplies.....	130,000 00
For transportation of the Army, including the baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, from the depot at Philadelphia to the several posts and Army depots; of horse equipments, and of subsistence from the places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms, from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; for the purchase and hire of horses, mules, and oxen, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, drays, ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; and for procuring water at such posts as, from their situation, require that it be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads and removing obstructions from roads, harbor, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops on the frontier.....	3,400,000 00
For the purchase of horses for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and the companies of light artillery.....	200,000 00
For contingencies of the Army.....	25,000 00
For the medical and hospital departments.....	103,000 00
For contingent expenses of the adjutant general's department at division and department headquarters.....	500 00
For compensation of the clerk and messenger in the office of the commanding general.....	2,000 00
For contingent expenses of the office of the commanding general.....	300 00
For armament of fortifications.....	300,000 00
For ordnance, ordnance stores, and supplies, including horse equipments for the mounted regiments.....	250,000 00
For the current expenses of the ordnance service, including experiments in the manufacture of cannon and cannon powder, and for tests of arms and ammunition, not otherwise provided for.....	150,000 00
For the purchase of gunpowder for the land service.....	100,000 00
For the manufacture of arms at the national armories.....	400,000 00
For the purchase of breech-loading carbines of the best model, to be selected and approved by a board of ordnance officers.....	25,000 00
For the alteration of old arms so as to make them breech-loading arms, upon a model to be selected and approved by the board of ordnance officers.....	25,000 00
For the Alleghany arsenal.....	35,100 00
For Fort Monroe arsenal.....	24,900 00
For Kennebec arsenal.....	11,600 00
For St. Louis arsenal.....	21,000 00
For Washington arsenal.....	9,379 00
For an additional timber and carriage storehouse at the North Carolina arsenal.....	25,000 00
For Watervliet arsenal.....	30,000 00
For repairs and preservation of the public buildings, fences, drains, culverts, &c., at all the smaller arsenals.....	20,000 00
For continuing the construction of the arsenal in California.....	100,000 00
For contingencies of arsenals.....	10,000 00
For repairing the arsenal and two eighteen pound gun-carriages, at Stonington, Connecticut.....	750 00
For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Springfield armory, Massachusetts.....	55,227 00
For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Harper's Ferry.....	101,907 00
For surveys for military defenses, geographical explorations and reconnaissances, for military purposes, and surveys with armies in the field, for purchase and repairs of instruments.....	95,000 00
For continuing the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes, including Lake Superior,	75,000 00

For printing charts of lake surveys.....	$10,000 00
To enable the Secretary of War to employ temporary clerks in the office of Quartermaster General, on bounty land service.....	5,000 00
For the support of four companies of volunteers mustered into the service of the United States, at Camp Scott, Utah Territory, in October, November, and December, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.....	173,478 80
For continuing the construction of the following works of defense:
Fort at Hog Island ledge, in Portland harbor, Maine.....	40,000 00
Fort Richmond, Staten Island, New York harbor, New York.....	75,000 00
Fort Delaware, Delaware river, Delaware.....	75,000 00
Fort Carroll, Solter's Point flats, Baltimore harbor, Maryland.....	75,000 00
Fort Taylor, Key West, Florida.....	75,000 00
Fort Jefferson, Garden Key, Tortugas, Florida.....	150,000 00
Fort Point, San Francisco, California.....	112,500 00
For contingent expenses of fortifications, preservation of sites, protection of titles, and repairs of sudden damage.....	30,000 00
For construction of permanent platforms for modern cannon of large caliber in existing fortifications of important harbors.....	30,000 00
For the payment of claims favorably reported upon by the board of Army officers (appointed under the sixth section of the act approved August thirty-first, eighteen hundred and fifty-two) in their final report to Congress, dated April nineteenth, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....	7,872 52½
For the construction of bridges and the improvement of the crossings of streams on the road from Fort Smith, in Arkansas, to Albuquerque, in New Mexico.....	50,000 00
For completing connected sections of the road extending from Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico, westward, on the route to the Colorado river, on or near the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude.....	100,000 00
For preparing the drawings of the sailing charts of the Bering's Strait and North Pacific exploring and surveying expedition, under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Navy.....	6,700 00
	$17,185,806 46½

By the act making appropriations for the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs.

For the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, together with such sums as may be received from storage, cartage, drayage, and labor.....	$3,600,000 00
--	----------------

By the act making an appropriation for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, in Oregon Territory.

For the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, to be completed under the direction of the Secretary of War.....	$30,000 00
---	-------------

By the act to supply an omission in the enrollment of a certain act therein named.

For manufacture of arms at national armories.....	$360,000 00
---	--------------

By the act to supply Deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

For restoring and maintaining, by peaceable measures, friendly relations with the Indian tribes in Oregon Territory, or so much thereof as may be necessary for expenditures during the year ending thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....	$264,000 00
For payment to such Cherokees as were omitted in the census taken by D. W. Siler, but who were included and paid under the act of July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, the same per capita allowance that was paid the other Indians under that distribution, provided the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall be satisfied they ought to be included in said per capita distribution.....	3,278 32
For contingencies of the Indian department during the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....	25,000 00
For indemnity to George W. Sudham, a Creek Indian, for property stolen from him and injured by a citizen of the United States.....	125 00
For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Washington during the year ending June thirtieth, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....	16,000 00

Seneca of New York.

For interest, in lieu of investment, on seventy-five thousand dollars, at five per centum, per act of twenty-seventh June, eighteen hundred and forty-six.....	3,000 00
For payment of the difference in salaries of the agents for the Sioux and Seminole Indians, for the Onaga agency, for the Kickapoo agency, for the Kaoska agency, and for the Neosho agency, between the rates as fixed previous to the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, and the rate authorized by said act,

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

from the third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, to the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.....$3,991 68

For compensation of one clerk in the Indian office, employed to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the regulations prescribed to give effect to the seventh section of the act of third March, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, granting bounty land to Indians.....1,400 00

For compensation of two extra clerks, employed to carry out the treaty with the Chickasaws in the adjustment of their claims.....2,800 00

For defraying the expenses of the several expeditions against Luk pa-du-tah's band, and in search, ransom, and recovery of the female captives taken by said band in eighteen hundred and fifty-seven.....20,000 00

$339,515 00

By the act to authorize a loan not exceeding the sum of twenty million dollars.

To defray the expense of engraving and printing certificates of such stock and other expenses incident to the execution of this act.....$5,000 00

By the act making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail by ocean steamers, and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For transportation of the mails from New York to Liverpool, and back.....$346,500 00

For transportation of the mails from New York to New Orleans, Charleston, Savannah, Havana, and Chagres, and back.....261,000 00

For transportation of the mails from Panama to California and Oregon, and back.....328,350 00

For transportation of the mails between San Francisco, California, and Olympia, Washington Territory.....122,500 00

For transportation of the mails on Puget Sound, and for transportation of the mails from New York, by Southampton or Cowes, to Havre.....230,000 00

For transportation of the mails between Charleston and Havana.....50,000 00

For transportation of the mails across the Isthmus of Panama.....100,000 00

To enable the Postmaster General to cause the mails to be transported between the United States and any foreign port or ports, by steamship, allowing and paying therefor, if by an American vessel, the sea and United States inland postage, and if by a foreign vessel, the sea postage only, on the mails so conveyed.....[Indefinite.]

$1,460,750 00

By the act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the thirtieth June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine.

For transportation of the mails, (inland)....$10,140,520 00

For compensation to postmasters.....2,325,000 00

For ship, steamboat, and way letters.....20,000 00

For wrapping paper.....55,000 00

For office furniture in the post offices.....5,000 00

For advertising.....85,000 00

For mail bags.....65,000 00

For blanks, and paper for the same.....125,000 00

For mail locks, keys, and stamps.....15,000 00

For mail depredations and special agents.....70,000 00

For clerks in the offices of postmasters.....850,000 00

For postage stamps and stamped envelopes.....100,000 00

For miscellaneous items.....180,000 00

To supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post Office Department for the year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine, 3,500,000 00

$17,535,520 00

By the joint resolution making an appropriation for the payment of expenses of investigating committees of the House of Representatives.

For the payment of expenses of the several investigating committees of the House of Representatives during the present session, and that the same shall be added to the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund of said House.....$35,000 00

By the resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco, California.

To settle and adjust the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco, California, and to pay to said contractor the amount that may be found to be justly due to him under the contracts made between said contractor and the proper officers of the Government in reference to said building.....[Indefinite.]

By the joint resolution for paying the compensation of stenographers employed by committees of the House of Representatives.

The compensation of stenographers employed by the committees of the House of Representatives, as audited under the direction of said House.....[Indefinite.]

By the joint resolution making appropriations to pay the expenses of the several investigating committees of the House of Representatives.

For the payment of expenses of the several investigating committees, and of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, and that the same shall be added to the miscellaneous item of the contingent fund of said House.....$12,000 00

By the act for the relief of John Hamilton.

In full compensation for his time and services, &c., during his imprisonment with the Indians in the war of eighteen hundred and twelve with Great Britain.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Dr. Charles D. Maxwell, a surgeon in the United States Navy.

The difference of pay between that of a passed assistant surgeon and a surgeon, from the twenty second day of December, eighteen hundred and forty-five, to the seventh day of July, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, being the period during which he performed the duties of a surgeon and assistant surgeon on board the United States ship Cyane.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of the owners of the bark Attica, of Portland, Maine.

For the amount imposed on said vessel as tonnage duty by the collector of New York, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....$174 62

By the act for the relief of the heirs of Alexander Stevenson.

The amount of money due to said Stevenson from the time of his enlistment, January one, seventeen hundred and seventy-six, until the time of his discharge in seventeen hundred and eighty-three.....$654 00

By the act for the relief of Duncan Robertson.

For moneys paid by him to the navy-yard at Gosport, it being the amount expended for repairs of the Norwegian bark Ellen, for damages encountered by said bark in aiding and rescuing the passengers of the steamer Central America.....$749 00

By the act for the relief of Captain James Mac McIntosh, of the United States Navy.

The difference between the sum paid to him at the Treasury as commander "on other duty" and that which was due to him as such officer "attached to a vessel for sea service," and being in full for his services as an officer of the West India squadron from the fourteenth day of August, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, to the third September, eighteen hundred and thirty-eight...$304 95

By the act for the relief of Elijah F. Smith, Gilman H. Perkins, and Charles F. Smith.

To refund to Elijah F. Smith, Gilman H. Perkins, and Charles F. Smith, or the survivors of them, composing the firm of Smith, Perkins, and Company, of Rochester, New York, the amount paid by them to the United States on one debenture bond, executed by John B. Glover and Company, dated April second, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, as penalty over and above the regular duties on the merchandise therein mentioned.....$837 00

By the act for the relief of George A. O'Brien.

For his services as clerk in the office of the Second Auditor from the fifth of July, eighteen hundred and forty-five, to the third day of March, eighteen hundred and forty-six.....$549 33

By the act for the relief of the heirs of John B. Hand.

To pay to the heirs of John B. Hand.....$1,340 00

By the act for the relief of Rufus Dwinel.

For interest at the rate of six per centum per annum, on the sum of thirteen thousand and thirty-seven dollars and seventy-two cents, from the fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and thirty-seven, when the latter sum was due from the United States to said Dwinel's assignor, to March eleventh, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, when an appropriation was made for its payment...$1,748 03

By the act for the relief of Jonas P. Keller.

For his services as a watchman or overseer of the executive building at the corner of F and Seventeenth streets, from the first of April, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, to the thirtieth September, eighteen hundred and fifty.....$750 00

By the act for the relief of Susanna T. Lea, widow and administratrix of James Maglenen, late of the city of Baltimore, deceased.

For the value of a horse and equipments, belonging to the said James Maglenen, the same having been impressed in September, eighteen hundred and fourteen, for the purpose of sending an express to North Point, and the said horse and equipments having been lost in said service.....$130 00

By the act for the relief of J. Wilcox Jenkins.

For the difference between the pay of captain's clerk and a purser of a first-class sloop-of-war from the first day of January to the thirtieth of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-six, during which time he was the acting purser of the sloop-of-war Germantown.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of William B. Trotter.

For all demands of the said William B. Trotter growing out of the emigration and subsistence of Choctaw Indians in the State of Mississippi, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-one, under a contract with the United States.....$1,680 00

By the act for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, and others.

To pay to the heirs, executors, administrators, or legal representatives of Richard D. Rowland, deceased, late of Alabama, three thousand two hundred dollars, and to the heirs, executors, administrators, or legal representatives of whomsoever possesses whatever title the United States gave to Cureton, Smith, and Heffner, to the southeast quarter of section two, township fourteen, range eight east, of the lands selected in Alabama, and sold under treaty of March twenty-four, eighteen hundred and thirty-two, with the Creek Indians, for the benefit of the orphans of the tribe, two thousand two hundred and sixty dollars, with interest at the rate of five and a half per cent. per annum, upon both aforesaid sums, from November first, eighteen hundred and thirty-six.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Samuel W. Turner and Alvin A. Turner.

For their services in transporting the United States mail on their steamers from Cleveland, Ohio, and Detroit, Michigan, to Mackinaw, Sault Ste. Marie, Marquette, Copper Harbor, Eagle Harbor, Eagle River, and Ontonagon, Michigan, and La Pointe, Bayfield, and Superior City, in the State of Wisconsin.....$23,625 00

By the act for the relief of D. O. Dickinson.

For services rendered by said Dickinson in connection with keeping a light in Waukegan harbor, Illinois....$108 75

By the act for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr.

To pay Thomas Phenix, jr., during the time he was acting as paymaster's clerk in the employment of D. Randall, deputy paymaster general, the sum of three dollars a day; but from this compensation is to be deducted the salary of five hundred dollars per annum, already received by him.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Lewis W. Broadwell.

For transporting the United States mails, in steamboats, from Vicksburg, Mississippi, to Grand Lake, Arkansas, from the fourth day of September, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, to the seventeenth day of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, at the rate of five hundred dollars per annum.....$12,938 00

By the act for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky.

For transporting extra mail matter over routes number three thousand nine hundred and sixty, and number four thousand one hundred and sixty-nine, between the first day of July, eighteen hundred and forty-six, and the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and fifty.....$6,000 00

By the act for the relief of Benjamin Wakefield.

For the difference of pay between that of master's mate and boatswain, from the first day of January, eighteen hundred and forty-eight, to the nineteenth day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman.

For the amount adjudged as due to said Lloyd Redman for three horses lost by him while in the service of the United States during the Mexican war.....$170 00

By the act for the relief of Simeon Stedman.

To pay to Simeon Stedman, who served in Captain Christopher Ripley's company of the thirty-seventh infantry during the war with Great Britain in eighteen hundred and twelve, such sum or sums as may have accrued to him from the time of his last receiving payment for services till the end of the war.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey.

For printing the "Kearny Code" of laws for New Mexico in eighteen hundred and forty-six.....$1,555 00

By the act for the relief of George W. Eiscoe.

For indemnification under the first article of the treaty of Ghent for the loss of the schooner Speedwell, captured in the Patuxent river by the British naval forces on the twenty-second of August, eighteen hundred and fourteen, and which was in the waters and within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States on the seventeenth day of February, eighteen hundred and fifteen, the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the said treaty of Ghent and was carried away out of the said waters and territorial jurisdiction of the United States, in violation of the said first article of the said treaty.....$3,000 00

Appropriations, New Offices, &c.

35TH CONG...1ST SESS.

By the act for the relief of Richard B. Alexander.
For the value of one horse and one mule lost by him during the Mexican war.....$250 00

By the act for the relief of Robert W. Cushman, formerly an acting purser in the United States Navy.

To pay to Robert W. Cushman, acting purser of the Germantown, the flag ship of the African squadron, the difference of pay between that of a purser and a captain's clerk for such time as he so acted as purser. [Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition.

To pay to William Heine, artist of the late Japan expedition under Commodore Perry, compensation at the rate of eighteen hundred dollars per annum during the time he was actually employed in such service.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Alonzo and Elbridge
G. Colby.

For the balance due them on their contract with the United States, dated July twenty-four, eighteen hundred and fifty-five, for constructing a breakwater at Owl's Head harbor, Penobscot river, Maine.....$2,502 11

By the act for the relief of David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased.

For the amount of interest collected from the said Joseph McClure, in his lifetime, on a judgment in favor of the United States Government, which it was afterwards ascertained the said McClure did not properly owe, and the amount of which judgment has been previously refunded to him by Congress.....$107 64

By the act for the relief of James Rumph.

In full compensation for medical aid rendered to soldiers in the service of the United States in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-seven.....$760 00

By the act for the relief of John Dearmit.

To pay to John Dearmit, in addition to the amount already paid him by the Government under his contract for carrying the mail upon route number one thousand six hundred and one, from July first, eighteen hundred and fifty-four, for four years.....$295 00

By the act for the relief of Stuckey and Rogers.

To pay to Stuckey and Rogers, mail contractors on route number six thousand and seventy-eight, (6078), from Winsboro' to Pinckneyville, in the State of South Carolina, at the rate of three hundred and thirty-three dollars per annum, for the transportation of the mails on said route; deducting therefrom whatever payments may have been made, at the rate of one hundred and thirty-eight dollars per annum, by the Post Office Department..[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Peter Parker.

For his services as chargé d'affaires ad interim at Canton, in China, at various periods between the dates of May twenty-six, anno Domini eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and the fourth day of May, eighteen hundred and fifty-five.....$2,603 19

By the act for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased.

To pay to the legal representatives of Daniel Hay, deceased, a sum equal to two per centum on all moneys disbursed by him as agent for paying pensions, from and after the twentieth day of April, eighteen hundred and thirty-six, with interest on the same, from the thirtieth of April, eighteen hundred and fifty-six.....[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Dr. Thomas Antisell.

For services rendered as acting assistant surgeon to the command (company G, third artillery) escorting Lieutenant Parke's party of survey from California to New Mexico, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-five, $274 65

By the act for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin.

For losses sustained by Richard Farren, or Richard Tarvin, during said war of eighteen hundred and thirteen and fourteen.....$600 00

By the act for the relief of Mrs. Harriet O. Reid, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W.
Fanning, of the United States Army.

To pay to Mrs. Harriet O. Reid, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army, the amount claimed to be due the estate of the said Brevet Colonel Fanning, as commissions of two and a half per cent. upon the sum of fifty thousand dollars disbursed by him in eighteen hundred and twenty-seven and eight-teen hundred and twenty-eight, at the United States arsenal in Augusta, Georgia.....$1,250 00

By the act for the relief of Gardner and Vincent, and others.

To audit and settle the several accounts of Gardner and Wilson, A. S. Gardner, A. F. Holmes, G. B. Murphy, C.
C. Carlton, N. E. Crittenden, O. A. Brooks and Company, and W. Bingham and Company, for goods, &c., furnished the United States marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, during the superintendency of John Coon...[Indefinite.]

By the act for the relief of Jennett H. McCall, only child of Captain James McCall, of the revolutionary war.

To pay to Jennett H. McCall, only child of Captain James McCall, of General Pickens's brigade, in the South Carolina regiment, during the war of the Revolution, the seven years' half pay of a captain, as allowed by the resolution of Congress passed August twenty-fourth, one thousand seven hundred and eighty.....$2,100 00

By the resolution for the benefit of the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon, United States Navy.

To pay the widow of Commander William Lewis Herndon, a sum equal to three years' full sea-service pay of a commander in the Navy.....[Indefinite.]

Total.....$81,824,825 40

RECAPITULATION.

Legislative, Executive, Judicial, Civil, and Miscellane- ous.....	$12,796,646 42
Diplomatic and Consular.....	912,120 00
Indian Department, Revolutionary, Invalid, and other Pensions.....	3,407,156 85
Army fortifications, Military Academy, and Military Roads.....	25,633,610 46
Naval service.....	14,508,354 23
Post Office Department.....	19,047,456 00
Ocean Steam Mail service.....	1,460,750 00
Collection of the Revenue.....	3,600,000 00
Treaty with the King of Denmark.....	408,731 44
	$81,824,825 40

II.—OFFICES CREATED, AND THE SALARIES THEREOF.

By the act (chap. 12) to create additional land districts in the State of California and for other purposes.

Three registers, at three thousand dollars per annum.
Three receivers, at three thousand dollars per annum.

By the act (chap. 13) to provide for the organization of a regiment of mounted volunteers for the defense of the frontier of Texas, and to authorize the President to call into the service of the United States two additional regiments of volunteers.

One colonel;
One lieutenant colonel;
One major;
One adjutant, with the rank of first lieutenant;
One quartermaster, with the rank of first lieutenant;
One surgeon;
Two assistant surgeons;
One sergeant major;
One quartermaster and commissary sergeant,
Ten captains;
Ten first lieutenants;
Ten second lieutenants;
Forty sergeants;
Forty corporals;
Twenty buglers;
Ten farriers;
who shall receive the pay and emoluments fixed by existing laws for regiments of cavalry.

Two colonels;
Two lieutenant-colonels;
Two majors;
Two adjutants, with the rank of first lieutenant;

Two quartermasters and commissaries, with the rank of first lieutenant;
Two surgeons;
Four assistant surgeons;
Two sergeant majors;
Two quartermaster and commissary sergeants;
Twenty captains;
Twenty first lieutenants;
Twenty second lieutenants;
Eighty sergeants;
Eighty corporals;
Twenty buglers;
Twenty farriers;

who shall receive the pay and emoluments fixed by existing laws for regiments of infantry.

By the act (chap. 25) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the thirtieth of June, eighteen hundred and fifty-eight.

Six messengers of the House of Representatives, at a compensation of twelve hundred dollars per annum each.

By the act (chap. 31) for the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union.

One judge of the district court of the United States;
One attorney for the United States;

One marshal;
who shall receive the same compensation as the judge, attorney, and marshal for the district of Iowa.

By the act (chap. 44) to create a land district in the Territory of New Mexico.

One register;
One receiver;
who shall receive the same compensation fixed by law for other land officers.

By the act (chap. 92) to authorize the President of the United States, in conjunction with the State of Texas, to run and mark the boundary lines between the Territories of the United States and the State of Texas.

One superintendent, or commissioner. [No salary fixed by the act.]

By the act (chap. 153) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

One commissioner to the Republic of Paraguay, at a compensation not to exceed $7,500.

By the act (chap. 154) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

One additional clerk in the office of the Register of the Treasury, at a compensation of sixteen hundred dollars per annum.

One additional clerk in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, at a compensation of sixteen hundred dollars per annum.

By the act (chap. 155) making supplemental appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1859.

Three special agents for the Indian tribes in Texas. [No compensation named in the act.]

Three interpreters for the Indian tribes in Texas. [No compensation named in the act.]

By the act (chap. 163) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current and contin-gent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1858.

Three clerks in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, at a compensation of fourteen hundred dollars per annum.

One commissioner to audit and state the claims for the Indian service in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, at a compensation of eight dollars per day and actual traveling expenses.

III.—OFFICES, THE SALARIES OF WHICH HAVE BEEN INCREASED, WITH THE AMOUNT OF SUCH INCREASE.

By the act (chap. 82) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of Government, for the year ending the 30th of
June, 1859.

Salary of one messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Senate increased three hundred and thirty dollars per annum.